Political pluralism, albeit in somewhat chaotic form, has emerged in Mexico. Chile's Pinochet allowed a vote that will lead to a free presidential election next year. Two-party politics has emerged in South Korea. The Philippines and Argentina have fought off attempted military coups. Poland's Communists are edging, however slowly and reluctantly, toward recognition of Solidarity and other non-party groups. Long-suppressed national aspirations in the Baltic states have been given voice. Mikhail Gorbachev himself pays lip service to pluralism. Freedom House describes 39% of the world's population as "free," the highest on record.

The rights of man, as enunciated by Madison, Jefferson et al, were of course the intellectual underpinnings for the American experiment. The ruling elites of Europe at that time sneered at these new "populists" and described democracy as "mobocracy." But by the 20th century, democracy was the guiding light of Western Civilization, so much so that the word was often employed where it didn't fit. Woodrow Wilson's 1917 war cry, to make the world "safe for democracy," sounded like a utopian bad joke 20 years later. After World War II, a series of highly undemocratic new governments, mostly flaunting Marxist banners, chose to proclaim themselves "democratic republics." They gave the "rights of man" a new interpretation, defining them as the "right" to be protected by the state against capitalism and other expressions of economic freedom.

During the philosophical confusions in the United States of the 1970s, cynical voices could be heard saying that the democratic principles so central to the American experiment were not exportable. Not a few went even further to argue that Marxism was the wave of the future and that the American experiment was in decline.

Such ideas still flourish in academia, if nowhere else (see yesterday's discussion in this column of Stanford's new curriculum). But American foreign policy has taken a new and positive tack. Ronald Reagan, in his Westminster speech in 1982, made it clear that the encouragement of democracy would be a guiding principle of U.S. foreign policy. A year later, with bipartisan support in Congress, the National Endowment for Democracy (NED) was formed as an independent but federally supported instrument for that end.

The NED operates in the open, funneling most of its grants through four institutes, operated by the AFL-CIO, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the Republican and Democratic parties. Among other things, the money helps finance "mediating groups" in non-free countries, fostering the pluralism that might eventually find expression in political democracy. Sometimes the money goes to intermediate organizations—in Sweden or West Germany, for example—that support groups seeking free expression in Communist lands.

Authoritarian and totalitarian regimes believe that mediation between the people and government should be the exclusive prerogative of the ruling party. But groups spring up anyway. Hoover Institution researcher Larry Diamond, writing in the latest edition of The Washington Quarterly, sees a "kind of global zeitgeist for democracy," adding that it is the only form of government that commands "widespread and deep legitimacy."

NED President Carl Gershman says democracy actually is "anti-ideological" in the sense that it protects individuals against enforced conformity. Interviewed by Ken Adelman in the Washingtonian in November, he remarked that "people are coming to see political democracy as a value in itself, that it's the best way to achieve economic growth, national integration and stability." Mr. Gershman thinks democracy faces some tough times ahead even where it has a foothold, but then it always has.

One NED insight is that pluralism takes many forms, often through groups that are not nominally political but that become part of a social and political process. The hunger for democratic self-expression is universal.

Critics of today's American foreign policy nonetheless complain that the U.S. is exporting "ideology." In a sense, they are right. But with the world full of willing buyers, that does not seem to us like a bad thing.

WOMEN'S AND MEN'S CAUCUSES FOR CONGRESSMAN ED TOWNS HONOR CARL I. BUTLER

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, September 24, 1988, the Women's and Men's Caucuses for Congressman Edolphus "Ed" Towns held their annual dinner dance at the Fleur De Lis Restaurant. As part of this annual event, the caucuses chose to honor Carl I. Butler.

Mr. Butler has had 25 years of diverse experience in sales, management, organization, training, and supervision of production and skilled personnel. He has served as Deputy Commissioner of the New York City Department of Sanitation as well as Special Assistant to the Commissioner, and Secretary of this Department.

Mr. Butler presently serves as President of the North Brooklyn Civic Association. He was twice elected State Committeeman of the 56th Assembly District in Brookyn, NY. He has served as a member of the board of directors of such organizations as Medgar Evers College, Bedford-Stuyvesant Restoration Committee, Catholic Charities, and the L.B.J. Health Center.

Among his many honors and awards are his designations as Man of the Year by the Bedford-Stuyvesant Senior Citizens, Berean Baptist Church, and the Salvation Award. He served in the U.S. Army during the Korean war and received the Bronze Star, United Nations Medal, and the Korean Service Medal.

Mr. Butler is married and has two children and enjoys excellent health.

THE 71ST ANNIVERSARY OF UKRAINE'S DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, Sunday, January 22, marked the 71st anniversary of Ukraine's declaration of independence and the 70th anniversary of the unification of the Western Ukrainian Republic and the Ukrainian National Republic. This declaration was embodied in the fourth universal put forward in 1918 by the Ukrainian Central Rada [council].

This document evolved from the third universal issued November 7, 1917, by the Ukrainian National Republic. Besides announcing the creation of a sovereign Ukrainian state, the third universal asserted the state's social and political principles. Among these were many of the same freedoms embodied in our own Bill of Rights and in the French Declaration of the Rights of Man, including freedom of speech, press, religion, and assembly. The third universal also endorsed minority rights, the security of individuals and property, and the 8-hour workday.

The third universal merits further attention and consideration because its proclamation of autonomy within the Russian empire is similar to demands being made today by various nationalities within the Soviet Union, not only in the Ukraine, but also in the Baltic States and in Armenia.

I hope that all Members this week will commemorate this historic occasion and take this opportunity to learn more about Ukrainian history and about these historic documents.

STOP THE EXPORT OF AMERICAN JOBS—OPPOSE THE FAA DECISION ON FOREIGN REPAIR OF U.S. AIRCRAFT

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, the recent decision by the Federal Aviation Administration [FAA] to permit expanded use of foreign repair stations seriously threatens the safety of millions of American air passengers and the livelihood of thousands of American workers.

Undoubtedly, the Government's primary responsibility to assure that maintenance standards are being met is best accomplished when the U.S. Government retains oversight over a domestic maintenance program as opposed to a system which is primarily international. Yet, in December 1988, new Federal Aviation Administration regulations took effect that permit repairs and maintenance on U.S. airline aircraft to be conducted overseas. Previously, U.S. airline aircraft were maintained at foreign repair stations only if the aircraft were used in international service. The new regulations now permit U.S. aircraft operated domestically to be completely maintained at foreign repair stations.

Aircraft maintenance and repair controls have provided our Nation's air transport industry with an enviable safety record. These regulations were flexible and allowed exceptions in those limited instances where overseas repair was a necessity. The U.S. air transport industry's outstanding safety record is due in large part to the strict control and surveillance exerted by the FAA over the maintenance, inspection and repair of U.S. aircraft. What possible safety benefits can be gained by unilaterally permitting U.S. aircraft to be routinely maintained abroad?

I am also concerned, Mr. Speaker, that at a time of massive trade deficits we are unilaterally exporting American jobs. Through this ill-conceived and counter-productive FAA decision, the jobs of thousands of trained American machinists and mechanics are put at risk.

Mr. Speaker, we must oppose this effort to loosen airline maintenance practices by permitting wholesale maintenance of U.S. aircraft abroad. Clearly, a liberalization of these rules will have an adverse impact on safety and would be unfair to U.S. businesses and workers.

Our colleague, NORM MINETA, chairman of the Aviation Subcommittee, has introduced legislation to terminate the amendments to the foreign repair station rules which permit expanded use of foreign repair stations and would therefore prohibit foreign maintenance and repair of U.S. aircraft. H.R. 145 would terminate the effectiveness of these regulatory changes and return the regulations to their previous formulation upon enactment of the bill. I am a proud cosponsor of H.R. 145 and will do all I can to fight for swift enactment of this bill. I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring H.R. 145.

TRIBUTE TO ROFEH INTERNATIONAL

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, one of the most socially useful organizations which is headquartered in my congressional district is Project ROFEH, which is directed by Grand Rabbi Levi Y. Horowitz, the Bostoner Rebbe, of the New England Chassidic Center. The center is an important religious organization, and as part of its overall religious work, it provides a number of important services to meet the spiritual and physical needs of a very wide range of people.

ROFEH International is one of the most significant of these. It is a medical referral organization, which provides indispensable help to sick people in taking advantage of the great medical resources of the Boston area. ROFEH provides people with referrals to the appropriate medical specialists and facility, and provides to those who travel to Boston from far away a total range of services from housing, transportation, and food through interpreters and the kind of friendship that is so important to those who are ill.

In November, the New England Chassidic Center held its annual dinner, at which large numbers of people paid tribute to Grand Rabbi Horowitz, and helped to support the important work of the center. Among the highlights of that dinner were the presentation of two awards—to Mr. Joseph Hyman, as the man of the year of the New England Chassidic Center; and to Dr. Kurt Isselbacher, as the recipient of the ROFEH International "Harry Andler Memorial Award."

Mr. Speaker, this was a significant occasion and the two recipients are people who are very much deserving of the praise they received. I ask that we print here the program descriptions that were given that night of Mr. Hyman and Dr. Isselbacher for their great charitable work.

NEW ENGLAND CHASSIDIC CENTER

In the words of the Center's renowned spiritual leader, Grand Rabbi Levi Y. Horowitz, the Bostoner Rebbe, Shlita, Mr. Joseph Hyman is one "whose life's motto has been concern for his fellow man", as shown by the involvement with ROFEH International. His idealism, so consonant with that of the Chassidic tradition, makes this honor a most appropriate one.

Born in Detroit to parents who came from Minsk and Guryava, both in the heart of Chassidic Poland, Mr. Hyman was raised in Detroit where he received his education in the Detroit public schools, continuing on to Wayne State University to receive his B.S. He then moved to Boston and received his M.S. from Northeastern University. In 1986, he was honored by his alma mater and presented with the Wayne State distinguished Engineering Alumni Award.

In 1956, during a vacation trip to New York, Joseph met Phyllis Cohen and they were married within the year. The Hymans have four children; Miriam, Edward, Leah, and Beth. They are blessed with one grandchild, Jeremy. Throughout their marriage and life together, Phyllis has been and continues to be, a force and an inspiration behind Joseph's numerous projects.

Mr. Hyman's career evolved around engineering. In 1961 he joined AVCO as Program Manager to work on a RADAR reflector program in support of the Minuteman ICBM Program. After leaving AVCO in 1967 he founded HYCOR in Woburn, which specializes in developing and producing RADAR and Optical Countermeasures for the Department of Defense and other friendly countries. It was at HYCOR that Mr. Hyman developed unique methods of packaging and dispersing hundreds of millions of thin hairlike filaments which are used to confuse and decoy RADAR homing missles. These techniques, called Chaff, are used on all U.S. Navy Capital ships and on many ships of NATO and other friendly Navies. During the 1973 Yom Kippur War, while using Chaff, not one of Israel's Navy ships was hit by the 69 Soviet-built missiles fired by the Egyptians.

Mr. Hyman, with all of his fine qualities, is an unassuming unpretentious person. How apt is the rabbinic dictum "Whoever shuns honor, honor will pursue him."

ROFEH INTERNATIONAL "HARRY ANDLER MEMORIAL AWARD"

Dr. Kurt J. Isselbacher is one of the world's leading physicians and teachers. Dr. Isselbacher is Chief, Gastrointestinal Unit at Massachusetts General Hospital as well as Director of the Massachusetts General Hospital Cancer Center. Throughout his medical career spanning almost 40 years, Dr. Isselbacher has been honored by medicine's leading societies and associations. An alumnus of Harvard College and Harvard Medical School, Dr. Isselbacher continues to devote his energies and renowned talents to helping his patients and sharing his research by authoring and co-authoring many articles in prestigious medical journals.

This award is presented annually to a member of the Greater Boston medical community for Outstanding Humanitarian service combined with the Highest Professional Merit.

Dr. Isselbacher's efforts on behalf of ROFEH International are but one facet of his contribution to the field of medicine which has brought him great stature and recognition. His involvement with ROFEH International typifies the selfless and altruistic devotion which characterize all of Dr. Isselbacher's achievements. Dr. Isselbacher has unselfishly devoted much of his precious time and effort to the care of patients sponsored by ROFEH International.

TRIBUTE TO LOUIS FRANCIS (RED) ANGELO

HON. JAMES A TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in order to pay tribute to an outstanding citizen of my 17th Congressional District of Ohio, Mr. Louis Francis "Red" Angelo. It is seldom that we have the occasion to honor such a fine man and member of his community. I am proud to have the opportunity to do so today.

Red has deep roots in my 17th District of Ohio. He grew up in Youngstown, OH, in depression years. He attended Youngstown Rayen High School and Youngstown University where he was a true standout in both school's football programs. After receiving his masters degree, Red returned to Youngstown as a teacher and a coach at Youngstown Chaney High School.

At Chaney, Red made his finest contributions to his community. He served as a teacher form 1949 to 1987. He also served as coach of the school's baseball, basketball, track, football and golf teams and ultimately as the school's athletic director. His efforts earned many rewards. His football teams won three city titles, and his golf teams won seven consecutive city championships.

Most importantly several young people have benefited from Red's influence. While several of Red's players were able to further their athletic futures because of Red, still more of his players and students benefited from his guidance, his leadership, and the fine example of hard work and dedication that he so embodied.

Red has been honored for his work several times. Three times he has been named Youngstown football coach of the year. In 1986 he was inducted into the Youngstown State University Sports Hall of Fame, and he is soon to be welcomed into the Curbstone Coaches Hall of Fame.

Mr. Speaker, today let us add to Red's list of accolades. Please join me in paying tribute to Louis Francis Angelo. I am honored to represent such a fine man. May his future be as bright and special as his past has been.

IN MEMORY OF AL RABY

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, my friend Al Raby died in Chicago last November. I consider myself better for having been his friend, and I am proud to note his many accomplishments so that the fight for civil rights continues.

The first word that comes to mind to describe Albert would be steadfast. When he started out for a goal, he didn't rest until it was accomplished. He considered all the ways that a goal would be best met, and most beneficial and then worked steadily toward that accomplishment. Then, he would work toward another goal, not resting on his latest success. Perhaps he was able to do this because there was a connection among all his goals, equal treatment under law for all people regardless of creed, color or sex. He was an individual who was able to inspire unity of purpose among diverse groups of people.

Al first began his work for civil rights in 1962. He was an active member of Teachers for Integrated Schools in Chicago, where the city's heavily segregated school system and housing patterns were infamous. He helped form the Coordinating Council of Community Organizations that led the fight for school desegration. In 1966, Al persuaded the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. to bring the Southern civil rights movement to Chicago. Although some consider the city a defeat for Dr. King, others mark that event as the beginning of a movement that resulted in the election of Mayor Harold Washington 17 years later. It shouldn't be a surprise that Mayor Washington's campaign manager in 1983 was none other than Al Raby.

Al served in the Peace Corps in Ghana during the Carter administration before returning to Chicago to manage the campaign. He was appointed to the Human Relations Commission after the mayor's death in 1987, and he was a partner in the Haymarket Group, a political and public relations consulting firm. Most recently he was the cochairman of a group of black and Jewish leaders formed to ease tensions strained earlier in 1988 by anti-Semitic remarks made by a black aide to the current mayor.

I am saddened that Al was only 55 when he died, Chicago and the Nation need more people like him. But with Al's memory I am certain there are many who will take up the cause and contribute to ongoing victories in the continuing struggle for civil rights.

INTRODUCTION OF H.R. 39, ARCTIC NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE WILDERNESS

HON. MORRIS K. UDALL

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to introduce again legislation to extend wilderness protection for Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to include the 1.5-million-acre coastal plain.

H.R. 39 and other legislative efforts aimed at opening up this environmental jewel to the heavy risks of oil and gas exploration and development have been the subject of intense and thorough scrutiny in many committees of many Congresses. Under the able leadership of Chairman GEORGE MILLER, the Subcommittee on Water and Power Resources held 12 hearings in the last Congress, including 2 in the villages of Kaktovik and Arctic.

The wealth of information and opinion generated by those hearings convince me more than ever that permanent protection for this spectacular Arctic wilderness is the only responsible course for us. In addition, the ominous implications of overdevelopment for the very survival of the planet are gaining worldwide attention and offer lessons that should not be ignored when making policy for the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge [ANWR]. Most especially, it should be increasingly obvious that destruction of our most special places in pursuit of an outmoded energy policy is just plain foolish.

Anyone who has been to ANWR's coastal plain knows of its stark beauty. This fragile swath of permafrost between the Brooks Range and the Beaufort Sea is anything but a barren wasteland, however.

It nurses an abundance of life, astounding in its diversity and even more astounding in its ability to cling to life in the most precarious of circumstances. The term "wildlife refuge" has special meaning here for the caribou and the mighty polar bear, the wolves, foxes, and seals as well as the more than 100 species of birds and fish that occupy this magnificent place. This 100 miles of the ANWR coastal plain is the only stretch of the Alaska coastline above the Arctic Circle that is not now under active oil and gas leasing, exploration and development, or available to it.

For some time now, however, geologists have identified the coastal plain as a highly prospective oil and gas province. The data supporting this assertion cannot be lightly dismissed, but it is extremely sketchy and based on the most preliminary geophysical work. Members of my committee are sadly familiar with such hot prospects: in the years when the Alaska Lands Act was under consideration, the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska, to the west of ANWR on the North Slope, was considered just as hot a prospect. To date, 39 wells have been sunk in NPR–A without a drop of oil discovered and no one talks about its future as an oil province. Much less is known about the geophysics of ANWR as only one well has been drilled there and its data is secret.

We do know, however, that given the enormous costs of exploration, development and transportation of oil and gas in the Arctic, discovery of supergiant fields is essential if ANWR is to be economically developable. Medium and even large-sized fields will not do it. Furthermore, oil prices will have to rise well above $30 per barrel before any sized field becomes economic. Both these factors further increase the probability that sufficient quantities of economically recoverable oil do not exist in the subsurface of ANWR's coastal plain.

For many the key question in the ANWR debate in whether oil and gas operations can be conducted in the Arctic in a way that will cause only acceptable environmental degradation. Development advocates maintain that development is compatible with the Arctic environment and they point to Prudhoe Bay as an example of an environmental success story. But the work of the House Interior Committee in the last Congress shows that it will take more than pretty pictures of caribou snuggling up to the Trans-Alaska Pipeline to make this case.

In my opinion, the really responsible answers to the environmental questions are not "yes" and "no," but "maybe," "we don't know yet," and "wait and see." Independent biologists and scientists tell us that the operations at Prudhoe Bay are having an unmistakable effect on the Arctic environment—wildlife habitat disturbed, populations displaced and disrupted, air and water pollution increasing, spills of toxic chemicals and wastes pervading the permafrost, and so on. Many of these changes greatly disturb scientists, but being careful people, they are unwilling to draw definitive conclusions.

Nor have any of these insults to the environment resulted in a catastrophe, at least not yet. But to declare, as the oil industry has done, that Prudhoe Bay proves that a massive industrial civilization can be moved into the Arctic at no significant cost to the environment is self-serving at best and grossly premature at least.

For the truth is that we simply don't know what Prudhoe Bay's long-term effects will be. Nor do we know the results of the cumulative effects of placing additional strains on this very fragile environment, by authorizing development in ANWR and elsewhere on the North Slope.

The work of Representative MILLER's subcommittee indicated clearly that there is inadequate information now available to answer the many vital questions posed by possible ANWR development. The study mandated by Congress in 1980 and completed by the Reagan administration in 1987 fell far short of the tasks assigned to it and, in my opinion, lacks the credibility and the solid information Congress said it needed in order to make a wise decision. It seems to me that it would be very much in order for the new administration of President Bush to revisit that report.

The issue raised in the ANWR debate cannot be easily resolved. They do not lend themselves to definitive answers. Much depends on one's inclinations and values. Throughout all the debates over all the years, however, one fact has remained indisputable by proponents and opponents alike.

And that is that if we allow the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to be invaded by all the accoutrements of the oil and gas industry, no matter how carefully planned and phased and limited and contrived, the wildness of a very special place will be lost forever.

I have listened to people talk of being on the coastal plain of the refuge. And as they look out over the unbroken expanse of tundra and being overwhelmed by the power of that experience. They talk of seeing a bear and wondering whether they might be the first human being that bear has ever seen. I have been there myself, and I know this to be real.

This is not something quantifiable, certainly not in monetary terms. It is not even easily identifiable. But it is very precious nonetheless and we will be much the less if we squander it. I think the world is coming more and more to realize this, in place after place, and to value it. My prayer is that we learn to value this place sufficiently before it is too late.

THE PAY RAISE PROCESS NEEDS TO BE REFORMED BY REQUIRING A RECORDED VOTE TO APPROVE A PAY RAISE, NOT TO BLOCK ONE

HON. JOSEPH E. BRENNAN

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, long before I was sworn in as a Member of Congress a procedure was established concerning congressional pay raises. This procedure changed the process from voting affirmatively to receive a raise to requiring a vote by both Houses to prohibit a raise from becoming effective. This process is wrong and needs to be reformed.

Legislation I am introducing today will correct the pay raise procedure by requiring an affirmative vote by both Houses, and if successfully enacted, the pay raise will not take effect until the succeeding Congress. Therefore, we will have to take a democratic up-or-down vote on the issue and permit our constituents to cast judgment on our decisions. Another provision of my legislation relates to the automatic increases for Members of Congress being tied to adjustments for civil service employees. My bill will sever this linkage and keep Federal civil service employees from being affected by congressional pay issues.

I have received a message, loud and clear, from my constituents in Maine. That message says to change the pay raise process. We are sent to Washington to represent our district's views and the views of the Nation. While representing those views, we must make tough choices and cast an affirmative or negative vote. I do not believe there can be any issue considered too tough for us to take an identifiable position on. Therefore, I am introducing this legislation today to alter the current pay raise process and restore a hands on approach to an important issue in the eyes of our constituents.

I urge my collegues to join me in cosponsoring this legislation and bring true pay raise reform.

TRIBUTE TO ST. VALENTINE'S PARISH OF BLOOMFIELD, NJ, ON ITS 90TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, it is with the deepest reverence and the greatest pride that I rise today to salute a great house of worship and an outstanding parish in my Eighth Congressional District of New Jersey which, for nearly a century, has not only served as a beacon of faith to countless numbers of people in the greater northern New Jersey area, but also a pillar of service to the community.

I am speaking of St. Valentine's Parish of Bloomfield, NJ, which will be marking a truly historic occasion on Friday, February 4, 1989. On that day, Mr. Speaker, the St. Valentine's Parish will be celebrating the 90th anniversary of its founding with a gala dinner-dance at the Wayne Manor in Wayne, NJ.

Mr. Speaker, I know that this event will be a great tribute and a tremendous source of pride to St. Valentine's inspirational clergy; Rev. Msgr. Richard F. Groncki, pastor; Rev. Dennis Reiff, parochial vicar; Rev. John J. Donohue, in residence; Rev. Charles J. Miller, weekend associate, and Sister Joan Schmidt, CSJ, and Sister Margaret Harrison, OP, Pastoral Associates for Catechetics.

Mr. Speaker, the special committee charged with organizing this historic event has been working vigorously to ensure its overwhelming success, and I am certain their efforts will be rewarded. For the RECORD, this outstanding group includes Chairperson Joan Conroy, Harry Rogucki, John Yannuzzi, Marybeth Levandoski, Michael Levandoski, Jeanne Watson, Rita Lynch, George Rauth, Jean Drone, Mary Ann Zadrozny, and John Zitka.

I would also like to take this opportunity to cite the excellent work of the St. Valentine Athletic Club, which in 1989 is celebrating its 66th anniversary, and its dedicated officers; Edwin Byke, president; Al King, vice president; Frank Dabice, secretary; Joseph Reardon, treasurer; Ken Donofrio, sergeant at arms; Rich Hansen, Sr., trustee; Jim Bell, trustee, and Stephen Szczepanski, trustee.

Mr. Speaker, St. Valentine's has been such a vital part of the spiritual lives of so many people from the greater northern New Jersey area since its founding in 1899 that I would like to tell St. Valentine's story by citing from its official history:

In 1898 there were over 90 Polish families in Bloomfield and Nutley, then known as Franklin, and even two societies: St. Valentine Mutual Benefit Society and the Joseph Poniatowski Society. The St. Valentine Society took the initiative in the founding of the parish. At a meeting held in the Jan Lewandowski Meeting Hall on April 26, 1898, a resolution was passed to found a Roman Catholic Parish in Bloomfield to be named "St. Valentine". A committee, comprised of Stanislaw Karow, President, Franciszek Romanowski, Vice President; Franciszek Luczak, Recording Secretary; Franciszek Zbikowski, Financial Secretary; Jan Lewandowski, Treasurer; Jozef Kuczenski, Jan Wronski, Andrzei Czubaj, Piotr Pieciulewicz and Jan Sanok, Trustees, was established to approach the Most Rev. Michael Wigger, Bishop of Newark, for permission to establish a parish. Permission was granted. A committee was established to found a Roman Catholic Parish in Bloomfield with the title of "St. Valentine".

In July 1898, the Hope Chapel and grounds on Hoover Avenue, then called Franklin Avenue, were purchased from the Broughton Presbyterian Society. Included was the carpeting, seating and stove for a total cost of $1,875. The monies for this project were loaned by the following committee members: Franciszek Romanowski, Andrzej Czubaj, Jan Sanok, Antoni Jezierny, Jan Lewandowski, Franciszek Luczak, Piotr Pieciulewicz and Jan Kliminski, the balance supplied by the St. Valentine Society. The Society had taken title to the Hope Chapel and site on October 24, 1898. Soon, thereafter, a sacristy was added to the building, an altar and a confessional were erected, and the building was made ready to serve as a Catholic Church.

The history of the parish indicates that there was a question as to whether the parish should be "Polish National" or "Roman Catholic". Both factions, comprised of good and understanding people, had a cooperative meeting of minds and decided that the Parish be "Roman Catholic". The Bishop, however, did not have a Polish priest to assign to the parish. The committee, therefore, traveled to Newark, Passaic and into New York seeking a Polish priest. In the meantime, St. Valentine Roman Catholic Church was incorporated at Sacred Heart Rectory, Bloomfield on February 16, 1899. The Officers upon incorporation were Bishop Wigger; Rev. John O'Connor, Vicar General; Rev. Joseph Nardiello, Pastor of Sacred Heart Church; Jan Lewandowski and Jan Sanok, lay Trustees.

The first priest, Rev. Konstanty Lazinski, was assigned to St. Valentine's in March 1899. He was followed shortly thereafter by the Rev. Jan Adamowski and later by Rev. Jan Stankiewicz.

Title to the land and Church was turned over to the parish by the St. Valentine Society on July 13, 1899. The church was situated on the present parking lot on Hoover (Franklin) Avenue at the corner of East Passaic Avenue. The parish was then comprised of about 100 families.

In 1900 Rev. Alexius Iwanow was assigned to St. Valentine Parish as the first pastor. The parish embarked on a road of steady development and expansion. The parishioners were happy and assisted to the best of their ability. The Parish Committee made house collections for a 50 cent monthly assessment. The Sunday collections averaged $28. In 1901, Father Iwanow took a loan of $3,000. A rectory was built which later became the parish convent.

Ludwik Cieslinski was the parish organist in 1899. Among his successors were A. Zabrzewski, S. Sokolowski and Fabian Okulski. The first choir was organized in 1904 under the name of "The Harmonia Choir".

At a parish meeting on May 14, 1905, a resolution was passed to build a new church with a seating capacity of 360 at a cost of $15,000. The first church was moved next to the rectory on East Passaic Avenue and converted into a school taught by lay teachers. In 1912, the Interior of the church was painted and a new altar was installed at a cost of $1,300. Also, a new home and property on the corner of Hoover and East Passaic Avenues was purchased and converted into a rectory. The old rectory on East Passaic Avenue was converted into a convent for the Felician Sisters who began teaching in the Parochial School in 1918. The "Harmonia Choir" adopted a new name, "St. Valentine Choir," and Sylvester Gutkowski became the church organist.

The parish grew and expanded rapidly. Many more Polish and Lithuanian families settled in Bloomfield. Families from the surrounding communities of Nutley, Belleville, Orange, West Orange, Pine Brook and other neighborhoods became parishioners. After 20 years as Pastor, Father Iwanow resigned in February 1921. The Most Rev. John J. O'Connor, Bishop of Newark, appointed the Rev. Bronislaus A. Socha as the second Pastor. Father Socha was an alumnus of Seton Hall College and the Diocesan Seminary. Father Socha soon formed a fund raising organization for the purpose of raising building funds. The first church, later to become the first school, became the Parish Hall, where social gatherings were held. The need of an organization for the young men of the parish was filed when St. Valentine's Athletic Club was organized in September 1923. In addition to the Polish language, the English language was introduced for the Sunday Gospel and parish announcements. At a parish meeting on January 20, 1924, Father Socha presented architectural plans for a new school building. With 400 families in the parish and $17,000 on hand, Father Socha began the construction of a $100,000 modern building with eight classrooms, a parish auditorium, meeting rooms and club rooms. A ground breaking ceremony was held on April 27; the cornerstone of the new building was put in place on July 6. The first gathering in the new parish hall was held on July 8. The first church was demolished and the St. Valentine Athletic Club moved into new facilities in the school building. The school was opened on September 8, 1925. The first principal was the very capable and energetic Sister Mary Veronica, CSSF. The tuition was 75 cents a month per child. The annual parish dues was increased from $3 to $5.

A "Little Flower Club" for young ladies of the parish was founded.

In 1927, the town administrators approved a resolution to build an incinerator on the parking lot across from the present church. Under the leadership of Father Socha, a committee was formed to protest the building of the incinerator. After a lengthy legal process, the town abandoned the project.

Report cards for academic and behavior grades were introduced with the school year in 1929. By 1930, the parish had grown to such an extent that four Masses on Sunday became necessary. A complete renovation of the church and extension of the convent was undertaken at a total cost of $15,000. The blessing of the renovated church took place on October 19, 1930. The new school held its first graduation in June, 1932. There were 350 students enrolled.

During the Second World War, 514 men and women of the parish served in the Armed Forces of the United States and 18 of them made the supreme sacrifice for our Country. The school children placed high in the "Schools at War" bond selling campaign with a total of $66,951.75 in War Bonds sold among the parishioners. St. Valentine School was designated a bomb shelter and storage place for food provided by the American Red Cross.

The school year 1943 saw the opening of the first kindergarten class.

The entire parish plant underwent extensive repairs, redecorating and enlargement at a total cost of $50,000, $15,000 of which was borrowed from the Archdiocese of Newark. The parish Catholic Youth Organization was chartered in 1945. The first issue of the Parish Bulletin was published on January 1, 1946. An average of 800 copies of the bulletin was distributed every Sunday. The steady growth of the parish made it necessary to increase the number of Sunday Masses to five in September, 1947. A Parent-Teacher Association was organized the same year. The PTA furnished the kindergarten and arranged outings and amusements for the students.

The school cafeteria, fully equipped and renovated by the PTA was opened on March 20, 1950. Hot lunches were served at a charge of 20 cents. The ground breaking for a new convent and an addition to the school took place in July, 1952. The convent cornerstone was laid and the addition to the school dedicated on October 17, 1953. Father Socha was elevated to the rank of Domestic Prelate with the title of Rt. Rev. Monsignor at a ceremony in Sacred Heart Cathedral, Newark, on December 5, 1954. With permission from the Archbishop, the parish proceeded with plans for a new church building in October 1955. Ground was broken for the new church on May 3, 1958. in June 1958, the track of land on East Passaic Avenue (opposite the present church), was purchased from the Town of Bloomfield.

The former baptistry was converted into chapels of reconciliation (confessionals) and the cry room became a Sunday sacristy. In order to facilitate the celebration of baptism at Sunday mass, a cross aisle was arranged in the nave of the church and a new baptismal font erected at the crossing. In Lent of 1983, reception of communion under the form of wine was introduced at all Sunday masses. After a survey, the time of the vigil mass was changed from 7 PM to 5:30 PM.

1984 marked the 85th anniversary of the parish, the 60th anniversary of the school building and the 25th anniversary of the new church. A contest among the students of the parish was held to select a slogan for the anniversary year. The winning slogan was "85 Years of Growing With Love" submitted by Brenda McManus, a fifth grade student in St. Valentine School. The observance of the 85th anniversary year was opened with a celebration of Evening Prayer followed by a reception of February 26, 1984. A dinner dance was held on March 3.

In March 1983, an adult initiation team was formed. Four people expressed a desire to be received into the Roman Catholic Church at St. Valentine's. For the first time in the 85 year history of the parish, adults were baptized and received into full communion with the Catholic Church during the celebration of the Easter Vigil of 1984.

With the approval of the Parish Council, an educational program was held on the concept of tithing and tithing was introduced as a means of parish support on April 1, 1984. An 85th anniversary commemorative medallion was struck. These were blessed and made available on September 30, 1984 after an Evening Prayer service commemorating the 25th anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of the church. In November 1984 the Felician Sisters took up residence in a house at 97 North Spring Street. The house was purchased by the parish as a convent facility.

The rectory property at 217 Hoover Avenue was sold to a developer. The money from the sale was used to renovate the former convent at 125 North Spring Street into a new rectory facility. The parish offices were relocated and the priests took up residence in the new rectory on February 1, 1985.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to present the history of this distinguished parish which has remained dedicated to helping others and guiding them spiritually. As St. Valentine's celebrates 90 years of providing unwavering spiritual guidance to the people of the Bloomfield area, I know that you and all of our colleagues here in Congress will want to join me in extending our warmest greetings and felicitations for both the service and guidance St. Valentine's has provided its community, State, and Nation.

FAIR TELEVISION SERVICE ACT OF 1989

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be re-introducing today, along with my distinguished colleague from Long Island, NORMAN LENT, and 12 other cosponsors, the Local Television Service Act of 1989. This bill is designed to remedy a void in television service for Long Island and other similarly situated areas. This remedy is long overdue, and I am hopeful that it can receive speedy consideration in Congress.

The importance of television in our daily lives cannot be denied. Polls continue to indicate that television is the principal source of news and entertainment for most Americans.

Congress recognized the value of broadcasting when it enacted the Communications Act of 1934. Section 307(b) of that law required the Federal Communications Commission to distribute broadcast licenses throughout the country in a way that would be "fair, efficient, and equitable."

The FCC tried to honor that mandate when it assigned television licenses to communities throughout the country in 1952. The Commission understandably assigned the most powerful television stations to the largest cities. In making these choices, the Commission had to distinguish between very high frequency [VHF] television channels (2–13) and ultra high frequency [UHF] channels (14–69). VHF channels generally have a more powerful signal and are therefore able to serve a larger audience than UHF channels. Consequently, the FCC generally assigned the VHF channels to the largest cities.

These assignments were to have a direct bearing on the program service which the American people would receive. For the broadcaster's principal obligation was and is to serve its community of license. Outlying areas are deemed to be of only secondary importance.

No VHF stations were assigned to any communities on Long Island in 1952. This omission was hardly surprising at the time. Long Island has a small population, and the communities of any size in the western portion were deemed to be little more than suburbs of New York City.

Much has changed for Long Island since the FCC made its television assignments in 1952. Long Island has now become a major population center of 2.6 million people with its own distinct social, economic, and political needs and interests—a stature reflected in the Census Bureau's designation of Nassau and Suffolk Counties as a separate primary metropolitan statistical area. No longer can it be said that Long Island is simply an extension of New York City.

Despite its many advances, broadcast technology cannot accommodate these population changes. It is not possible to establish a new VHF television station that can be assigned to a community on Long Island. To do so would result in impermissible interference to existing VHF television stations. Nor is there any refuge in an FCC order requiring one of the New York City stations to relocate to Long Island. Such an order would not only create the impossible task of selecting the particular broadcaster to move; of equal significance, however the selection was made, it would be unfair to require one broadcaster to bear the brunt of the FCC's inability in 1952 to foresee the dramatic changes that Long Island would experience over the next few decades.

Nassau and Suffolk Counties are not the only large PSMA to face this dilemma. Indeed, four other PMSA's have a population in excess of 1 million: the Bergen-Passaic County PMSA in New Jersey; the Anaheim-Santa Ana PMSA in California; the Riverside-San Bernadino PMSA in California; and the Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood-Pompano Beach PMSA in Florida.

The Local Television Service Act of 1989 offers a practical solution to the problem faced by Long Island and other PMSA's of more than a million persons which do not have a locally-assigned VHF television station. The bill draws upon Congress's experience in providing New Jersey with its first VHF television service in 1982. In adding a new section 331 to the Communications Act at the time Congress did not require any broadcaster to move from New York City or Philadelphia to New Jersey; rather, the legislation simply promised a new 5 year license to any broadcaster who would make the move voluntarily. This benefit was enough to inspire RKO to relocate channel 9 from New York City to Secaucus, NJ.

Similarly, the Local Television Service Act of 1989 does not require any broadcaster to relocate to Long Island or other underserved PMSA's; rather, the bill offers a positive incentive—insulation from any competing applications for one 5-year term. In other words, a broadcaster who decides voluntarily to relocate its station or have the community of license hyphenated with community in the underserved PMSA (so that the broadcaster's primary service area will include that hyphenated community) will not have to face a competing application for at least 5-years. This provision will not only protect the broadcaster, it will serve the public's interest as well. The insulation from competition will afford the broadcaster an opportunity to develop a record of substantial service to the community thus entitling it to a "renewal expectancy" under FCC policies.

There is no illusion that this voluntary incentive will immediately result in the relocation or hyphenation of television stations in all, or perhaps even any, of the affected PMSA's. For that reason, the bill also directs the FCC to conduct a study to explore other ways in which television program service for these large PMSA's can be improved. The bill requires the Commission to report its findings to Congress within 12 months after enactment.

Although the legislative process may result in refinements, we should not doubt the need for this legislation. "The life of the law," Supreme Court Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes once observed, "has not been logic; it has been experience." However logical the FCC's table assignments for television may have appeared in 1952, experience has proven—at least for Long Island and four other PMSA's—that it is inadequate to serve the needs of a changing society. For example, monitoring studies by the Long Island Coalition for Fair Broadcasting—a broad-based civic group that has worked on this issue for almost 10 years—show that the New York City VHF television stations are providing better coverage of issues and events in their community of license than to the outlying areas in Long Island. While this approach may satisfy the stations legal obligations, it does little for the citizens who live on Long Island.

The time has now come for the law to adapt to this experience. The Local Television Service Act of 1989 performs that function—and it does so in a way that advances the public good without imposing any private burdens. I therefore hope and expect that this legislation will receive the careful consideration it deserves and lead the way for better television service for millions of citizens on Long Island and elsewhere.

THE TIME IS NOW FOR A HUMAN LIFE AMENDMENT

HON. THOMAS A. LUKEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, 16 years ago this week, the Supreme Court handed down a landmark decision that allows the almost unrestricted right to an abortion. On Monday, 67,000 citizens from all across the country came to Washington to march in protest of that decision. Other prolife Americans participated in hundreds of rallies, prayer services, and other prolife events. Today, I am introducing an amendment to the Constitution that will guarantee a right to life for all persons, regardless of age, health, function, or condition of dependency, including unborn children.

The protection and sanctity of innocent human life ranks in the highest level of moral culture. Our Nation was founded with this principle among others. Yet in 1973, the Supreme Court ruled that a human fetus is not a person in the constitutional definition of the word, because nowhere in the Constitution does the work "person" have "prenatal application."

Despite the legalizaiton of abortion 16 years ago, the opposition continues to mount. Abortion is an issue that simply will not fade away. One of the reasons is the continuing medical research that is providing insight into fetal life. With regular frequency we see now information on the advances in prenatal surgery or the publication of an important study of life before birth. Several forms of fetal distress and some genetic problems can now be detected and treated by prenatal medicine. A fetus likely to be born prematurely can receive drugs that accelerate the maturation of the lungs, and drugs are available to correct irregular heart rhythms of the unborn. Blood transfusions have been given to unborn children and physicians have been able to detect and treat the inability of a fetus to assimilate necessary vitamins.

This year, the Supreme Court will be hearing the case of Webster versus Reproductive Health Services. This case, out of Missouri, may prove to be the landmark case to overturn Roe versus Wade that we have been waiting for, working for, and praying for, for 16 years.

In the Sunday Washington Post, Bob Woodward reviewed the controversy over the Supreme Court's power to have decided to legalize abortion in Roe versus Wade. He writes that legal scholars, "have argued that the court was legislating social policy and exceeding its authority as the interpreter, not the maker, of law." Not that this argument is new, but new evidence—the internal court memorandums—show us that legislative powers deemed the exclusive power of the Congress by our Constitution, may have been violated 16 years ago. I believe that now is the time to bring the lawmaking power on this most controversial issue back to the correct branch of the Government.

My amendment will recognize the unborn child as a person under the laws of our Constitution. If this amendment is adopted as part of the Constitution, laws would permit medical intervention to save a woman's life, but would require that a reasonable effort be made to save the life of the unborn as well.

In the words of President Bush spoken before 67,000 marchers,

I think the Supreme Court's decision in Roe v. Wade was wrong and should be overturned. * * * America needs a human life amendment.

THE INTRODUCTION OF H.R. 670, THE SCHOOL COMPLETION AND INCENTIVES ACT

HON. CLAUDE PEPPER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, today, I am reintroducing my bill to set a national goal to improve our high school completion rate by the year 2000. The measure calls on the State to submit plans and provides States with the incentives and resources to meet their goals. My aim is to make it the policy of the United States that all Americans should complete a high school education.

The bill safeguards that funds will be used in the schools that most need assistance and insures that graduation requirements will not be lowered.

One of the most important features of the bill is the support it provides for local experiments. Many ways have been tried; many more should be; no one approach works universally. The reasons kids drop out are legion: family problems, pregnancy, drugs, short-term economic incentives, discipline problems, academic failure, hopelessness all encourage abandoning school. My bill requires coordination with other programs—including workfare, counseling, remedial instruction, new disciplinary approaches, and drug prevention efforts. It also encourages coordination with private efforts like those of wealthy philanthropists who select a class and guarantee the college costs of all who complete high school.

I have been asked, "Why is CLAUDE PEPPER interested in dropouts?" For most of my career in public life, I have been associated with the concerns of the elderly. The first bill I introduced in the Forida Legislature allowed the senior citizens to fish without paying a license fee. This was in the days before Social Security and Medicare; even a few precious dollars out of meager pension was too much to spare just to enjoy fishing. I was not yet 30 when my bill became law and I had gained recognition as a public official interested in the elderly.

You may therefore wonder why am I—now 88 years old and just entering my middle age—disturbed about dropouts. Aristotle' view suggest an answer. "Education," he remarked, "is the best provision for old age."

But the facts about dropouts are disturbing enough on their own: about one-quarter of our children are not finishing high school, the situation is not improving, and dropout rates in the inner cities are nearly double the national norm. By the most conservative estimates, we are producing between 750,000 and 1 million new dropouts each school year.

History clouds the dismal significance of these figures. As a nation, we have struggled to attain the ideal of universal education. In this we have been an exception among developed nations and our progress should make us proud. In 1900, only 7 out of every 100 of the 17-year-olds were graduated from high school. Today the completion rate is 73 percent.

After steady improvement, however, our progress has stalled. We achieved our highest completion rate, 77 percent, in the 1969 school year and we have slipped and stagnated below 75 percent since then. There is no reason to believe this is our natural limit. Canada's completion rate is in the mid-1980's, Japan has a better than 90 percent rate, and with a large-scale national effort, I'm convinced we can improve.

The young people, particularly black and Hispanic inner-city kids, roughly half of whom will drop out before they complete high school, deserve better. We fail in our duties to those children by not enabling them to complete high shcool. As a consequence, they face enormous obstacles to success. Dropouts are more likely to be unemployed than their high school educated cohorts. In 1985, 90 percent of men with only a high school education, age 25 to 64, either had a job or were looking for work. Only 76 percent of male same-age dropouts participated in the labor force. Dropouts are also more likely to suffer periodic losses of employment and to be relegated to the lowest paying, lowest status occupations throughout their working lives. They earn 78 percent of the average earnings of those with high school degrees and only 56 percent of the average earnings of the college-educated.

Granted, no one believes that dropouts are economically disadvanted solely because they do not complete high school. The very factors, including character, leading one to drop out are doubtless economic disadvantages in themselves. No consensus has emerged on the relative importance of family background, or talent, or motivation, as opposed to years in school, as a predictor of economic success. Still, no serious study suggests that less than 50 percent of the differences in earnings between dropouts and high school graduates can be accounted for by the independent effects of staying in school.

The individual dropout is not the only one to lose. Society incurs costs when education is cut short: we bear the burden in wasted opportunities and weakened economic growth, in additional crime, in welfare dependency, and in the perpetuation of inequality. The social costs are discernible and large, even if difficult to quantify precisely. We pay additional welfare, unemployment compensation, health and crime-related expenditures and our national income and economic activity are reduced, resulting in lost tax revenues. Beyond the costs reflected in public budgets, dropouts tend not to participate in politics and other community affairs, to society's detriment, and the children of dropouts often suffer the same disadvantages, representing a troublesome decline in social mobility.

Dropouts are less productive workers than those who finish school, they will earn substantially less income over their lifetimes, so we can extrapolate that the Nation's productive capacity is diminished and our national income is reduced. A 1985 study estimates that each year's class of dropouts will forgo earnings of $228 billion over their lifetime. True, we likely would not recoup the full amount if everyone completed high school. But to recapture only one-fourth, or $57 billion, would be substantial; this deflated figure represents more than $70,000 for each dropout added to the economy.

It is estimated that dropouts cost us another 5 percent of lost income, or $11.5 billion, in additional welfare payments, unemployment compensation, crime costs, and health care demands. Behind that figure is the incalculable damage to our social fabric caused by the crime and welfare dependency attributed to dropping out.

Consider a now-familiar image: a group of idle teenagers, out of school and out of work, stands on a city street corner in the middle of the day. The picture evokes both fear and pity. Fear because young dropouts and more likely to engage in criminal activity including illicit drugs; as a group they are the most likely candidates to find themselves involved with the police, the courts, and our penal system. The tangle of connections between academic failure and criminal behavior is deep, disturbing, and difficult to ignore.

We feel pity because the tragic legacy is too often passed down from parent to child. Children are must more likely to be poor if their parents do not complete high school. About 40 percent of all children in two-parent families live in poverty when neither parent has completed high school. If both parents have completed high school, the poverty rate is only 7 percent. And poor children are three times more likely than their better-off peers to drop out themselves. Dropout parents are the surest indication that the child will be subjected to the harsh cycle of proverty and despair.

Some will argue we cannot affort to mount a large-scale, national effort. I say we cannot afford not to. Dropouts add to the deficit. A recent study estimated that new dropouts from 1 year's class, over their lifetime, will cost us $68 billion in lost tax revenues. James Catterall's December 1985 Stanford study, "On the Social Costs of Dropping Out of School," and the Education Department's "Schools that Work: Educating Disadvantaged Children" document the cost to society if we fail to address the problem. While the savings are not immediate, dealing with the dropout problem has a place in long-term deficit reduction.

This is a propitious time to act. President Bush plans to make his administration the education Presidency. Dr. Lauro Cavazos will be the Secretary of Education and Dr. Cavazos has indicated that the dropout problem is one of his priorities. It would be a shame not to accept the challenge. I plan to press for hearings and legislative action at the earliest possible time. The Education and Labor Committee has agreed to hold hearings in Miami on February 13. The measure will be one of my top legislative priorities.

We owe it to the children, and to ourselves, to act now and to act decisively.

WOMEN'S AND MEN'S CAUCUSES FOR CONGRESSMAN ED TOWNS HONOR ANA V. JEFFERSON

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, September 24, 1988, the Women's and Men's Caucuses for Congressman Edolphus "Ed" Towns held their annual dinner dance at the Fleur De Lis Restaurant. As part of this annual event, the caucuses chose to honor Anna V. Jefferson.

Ms. Jefferson is an experienced administrator, educator, and advocate with an impressive number of accomplishments, awards, and honors.

Among her many professional achievements was being a member of the New York State Senate, representing the 22d senatorial district from 1983 to 1984. She was also a member of the New York City Board of Education, from 1969 to 1982. While there, she aided in the formulation and implementation of a new computer system to supplant the outdated manual payroll system.

Ms. Jefferson received the Von King Community Service Award at the mayor's office in 1985, the Community Service Award from Brooklyn's Bridge Street AME Church, and Who's Who of American Women, among numerous others.

She is a member of many community and professional organizations such as the NAACP, the National Order of Women Legislators, National Association of Black State Senators, and the Brooklyn Women's Political Caucus.

TRIBUTE TO THE YOUNGSTOWN (OH) WORLD'S FAIR GYMNASTIC TEAM

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a very special group of young people, the Youngstown World's Fair Gymnastic Team, and their coaches. This wonderful organization recently represented my 17th Congressional District, and the United States, at the World's Fair Expo in Brisbane, Australia. It is with great pleasure that I stand to honor them today.

The Youngstown World's Fair Gymnastic Team was 1 of only 12 gymnastics teams nationwide selected by the U.S. Association of Independent Gymnastic Clubs to represent the United States and perform at the 1987 World's Fair Expo in Brisbane. The hard work of the gymnasts and their familles is truly to be commended, for the many hours the gymnasts spent in practice were supplemented with a great many hours by both the gymnasts and their families in organizing various fundraisers to help pay for their trip.

I pay tribute especially to the owner of the Youngstown Gymnastic Center, Barb Gallagher, the team's coaches Judy Mamrak, Greg Dew, and Kathy Meshula, and the team members who attended the World's Fair Expo: Christina Camardese and Lori Kolenich of Youngstown; Julie Colella of Poland; Susan Eckman and Michelle Will of Boardman; Erin Gallagher, Kerri Gallagher, and Shannon Gallagher of Petersburg; Candice Garrett of Leetonia; Nicole Giannios, Chris Meshula, and Torey Votaw of Canfield; Mindy Morrow of Washingtonville, Debbie Newell and Stacy Rish of Struthers; and Emily Miller of Salem.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House join me today in expressing my heartiest congratulations to the Youngstown World's Fair Gymnastics Team. Their efforts brought a great deal of pride to their community and honor to their country. Let us extend to them our deepest appreciation for a job well done, and our best wishes for their continued success in the future.

UNITED STATES ADVISORY COMMISSION ON PUBLIC DIPLOMACY: 1989 REPORT

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, the United States Advisory Commission on Public Diplomacy has issued its 1989 report. The bipartisan commission includes: Edwin J. Feulner, Jr., Chairman; Tom C. Korologos, Vice Chairman; Hershey Gold; Louis B. Susman; Priscilla L. Buckley; and Richard M. Scaife.

In order to give you some idea of the achievements and the goals of USIA, I wish to insert in the RECORD "A Message from the Chairman" by Edwin J. Feulner and the "Summary of Recommendations and Findings." I know our colleagues will find this report as interesting and informative as I have:

A MESSAGE FROM THE CHAIRMAN

The 1980s have been good years for public diplomacy. They have been years of positive change as the United States comes to grips with the strategic implications of the communications revolution in its foreign policy. They have also been years of revitalization for the United States Information Agency.

In this report, my colleagues and I have taken a longer term view of USIA's policies and programs than in the past. We have done so in the belief that it is time to pause and reflect carefully on recent gains—to identify those that hold promise of enduring value and to point out continuing concerns.

Throughout, we have sought to address fundamental questions.

How should USIA consolidate and institutionalize the public diplomacy initiatives of the Reagan administration?

What considerations ought to guide the Bush administration in dealing with more complex information environments and rapid technological change?

Why should the American people support international information and cultural programs, and how can we achieve a broader consensus for them?

Each of my colleagues brings unique perspectives to our examination of public diplomacy, and all have developed a deep appreciation of its long-term value. Most of us have served several terms on the Commission, and this report contains the principal recommendations developed during many rewarding years of association with USIA, its people and its programs, and with each other. I thank my fellow Commissioners for their many contributions to this report and their tireless efforts on behalf of the Commission during my tenure as Chairman.

Two other individuals played an important part in the work of the Commission: former Vice Chairman E. Robert (Bob) Wallach, who served from 1982 to 1988, and former Commissioner Herbert Schmertz, who served from 1984 to 1988. We extend our appreciation to both for their distinguished service and their many contributions to the mission of public diplomacy.

Where USIA stands today can be attributed in considerable measure to the efforts of Director Charles Z. Wick. His tenure generated an extraordinary investment in the Agency's future. He moved USIA into the age of satellite television and made things happen for the Agency in Washington and overseas. As USIA's oversight Commission, we spent many hours with Director Wick. We shared his commitment to public diplomacy even when we differed with him. We salute his achievements.

Public diplomacy depends on the efforts of hundreds of men and women who serve their country often under conditions of great hardship and personal risk. The Commission has met many of these talented individuals at home and abroad. They are performing vital and difficult work, and we hold them in high esteem.

"Opinions," Lord Palmerston said, "are stronger than armies." Americans have understood the importance of ideas in shaping world events since the Declaration of Independence. And for the past eight years the United States has been led by a President who fully understood that development of public support for sound policies requires effective, skilled communication.

We wish the Bush administration well and express the hope that it will build on the solid foundation provided by President Reagan and USIA so that we as a nation may realize the full potential of public diplomacy and make the commitment to it that is needed.

EDWIN J. FEULNER, JR.,
Chairman, December, 1988.

SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS AND FINDINGS

PUBLIC DIPLOMACY'S MISSION AND STRUCTURE

Public diplomacy is a strategic component of United States foreign policy. It should be treated and funded accordingly.

The international information and educational exchange programs of the United States government have been carried out overseas as integrated, coordinated programs since World War II. The strength of U.S. public diplomacy lies in the skillful, comprehensive use of all of its major programs through a single organization.

USIA's reorganization in 1977 followed the most extensive Congressional hearings ever held on public diplomacy. It has proven to be a wise, farsighted, and cost-effective achievement.

To avoid misunderstanding and semantic confusion, the Commission recommends the Department of State discontinue use of the term public diplomacy to characterize public affairs programs in the United States.

U.S.-SOVIET PUBLIC DIPLOMACY

The quantity, quality and extent of Soviet public diplomacy activities have increased dramatically under General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev.

By adopting Western public relations techniques and skillfully exploiting the image of a more open society, the Soviets have improved relations with the media in many countries and have greatly increased receptivity to their public diplomacy.

Glasnost and the current atmosphere of change in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe are generating extraordinary opportunities for the United States with important implications for the funding, staffing, and content of USIA's programs.

The United States should pursue increased access and opportunities in the Soviet Union: more open cities, fewer travel restrictions, more opportunities for U.S. journalists to interview Soviet officials, greater flow of U.S. materials to Soviet citizens, more opportunities for American officials to provide timely public affairs comment in the Soviet media, and increased U.S.-Soviet exchanges in all fields.

Soviet disinformation continues and requires constant vigilance and prompt exposure.

UNDERINVESTMENT IN PUBLIC DIPLOMACY

The United States continues to underinvest in international information and cultural programs, despite substantial increases in funding during the 1980s. Investment in public diplomacy is smaller today in real terms than two decades ago.

Public diplomacy requires additional resources to modernize aging facilities, to capitalize on new communications technologies, to meet the challenges of glasnost and improved Soviet policy advocacy, and to take advantage of program opportunities.

USIA'S ADVISORY ROLE

The President, the Secretary of State, and the National Security Advisor should treat public diplomacy as a central element in the planning and implementation of foreign policy.

In too many instances, USIA is not called upon to advise the National Security Council and the Department of State on the public affairs consequences of proposed policies.

The National Security Council's Special Planning Group (SPG) and International Information Committee (IIC) have not played the public diplomacy coordinating role intended by NSDD 77. Routine and effective coordination between USIA, other foreign affairs and defense agencies, and the White House Press Office is essential. The NSC should devise a coordinating structure with which it is comfortable and use it regularly.

RESEARCH

Commitment to public opinion research in foreign policy decision-making remains largely ritualistic, despite enhancement of USIA's research capability and increased use of research findings by policymakers.

USIA should tailor its research more closely to the needs of field posts and resume country studies of media habits and telecommunications trends.

USIA should give greater emphasis to attitudinal research outside of Western Europe and Japan.

USIA should develop an Agency-wide program evaluation strategy, increase the proportion of funds devoted to program evaluation and media habits research, and use all available research findings in establishing program and resource priorities.

SUMMITS AND PUBLIC DIPLOMACY

Public diplomacy should be treated as a strategic element in summit planning. Comprehensive and coordinated public diplomacy strategies for superpower summits should be developed at the highest levels of the White House, the Department of State, and the U.S. Information Agency.

Summit public diplomacy requires early guidance on U.S. policy goals; early decisions on summit themes; analysis of the anticipated public opinion impact of proposed U.S. policies; assessment of potential public affairs strategies of other nations and planned responses to them; reports on foreign public opinion and media trends; close cooperation between policymakers and the public diplomacy community; and a well-conceived plan of public affairs activities.

NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR DEMOCRACY

The National Endowment for Democracy is contributing effectively to the spread of democratic values and institutions abroad. It should be given adequate resources and broad bipartisan support.

CONGRESS AND PUBLIC DIPLOMACY

The Department of State should provide USIA with timely notice of overseas travel by Congressional delegations to permit optimum participation by Members of Congress and Congressional staff in public diplomacy programs.

ADVISORY COMMISSION

The President should appoint members of the U.S. Advisory Commission on Public Diplomacy on a bipartisan basis for overlapping fixed terms. Congress should amend the Commission's authority to require that this be done consistent with the statutory mandate of the past 40 years.

VOICE OF AMERICA

The Voice of America's shortwave broadcasting system will continue to be a vital national asset and a primary means of reaching audience in many party of the world well into the next century. VOA modernization remains an urgent priority.

The multi-year shortwave modernization program announced by President Reagan in 1982 has been impeded by lengthy site negotiations with foreign governments, delays in hiring technical staff, USIA's inexperience with major acquisitions and large-scale engineering projects, frequent turnover in VOA Directors early in the program, increased cost estimates, and unrealistic Office of Management and Budget (OMB) and Congressional spending limitations.

The National Security Council, USIA, and Congress should reexamine VOA's modernization program in terms of national needs, broadcast requirements, resource priorities, and alternative signal delivery systems. This should include early policy review of OMB limitations on the shortwave modernization program.

New communications technologies, declining shortwave listernership in some parts of the world, and competition from other broadcasters and media are challenging VOA to seek alternative transmission systems and develop more competitive programming. Increased resources are needed if VOA is to do this well.

VOA should expand its use of medium wave, FM, cable, Worldnet transponders, leasing and facilities barter arrangements, direct and package program placement, and dial-in audio services; continue to examine Direct Broadcast Satellite (DBS) and other technologies; give high priority to program experimentation; and ensure the findings of program reviews and audience research are applied to programming and modernization decisions.

VOA's editorials "present the policies of the United States clearly and effectively" as required by the VOA Charter. Efforts to tailor them to regional concerns and vigilance to assure their congruence with U.S. policies should continue.

VOA Europe and VOA Bandeirantes in Brazil are successful experiments in placement programming. VOA should pursue similar transnational partnerships in Asia, Spanish-speaking Latin America, and other areas where shortwave listenership has declined.

VOA's International Training Center for journalists and broadcasters in the developing world is contributing to the free flow of information, creating a large alumni network trained in all aspects of broadcasting, and fostering national networks patterned on VOA's programming principles and journalistic practices. The Center should be given high priority and adequate resources.

TELEVISION

Television is a powerful force in shaping international events. Through Worldnet, USIA's satellite television network, the United States has taken the lead in using television to advocate its policies and develop understanding of American society and values. Worldnet deserves adequate funding and bipartisan support.

Worldnet's satellite system and placement of more than 150 Television Receive Only (TVRO) dishes at USIA's posts is a significant achievement. USIA should given high priority to completing its worldwide network of 185 TVROs.

Worldnet's "interactive" dialogues provide foreign journalists and other specialized audiences direct access to U.S. policymakers and American experts via satellite television. The Commission comments USIA for developing this effective instrument of public diplomacy.

Worldnet has passed successfully through the inevitable growing pains of its first five years. The United States is best served if it is viewed on its merits as an essential and rapidly maturing element of public diplomacy.

Termination of Worldnet's daily program service deprives the United States of an important communications tool, adversely affects USIA's credibility with indigenous television stations and government officials, and forecloses options to future administrations in conducting public diplomacy by satellite. The Commission strongly urges Congress to provide legislative relief quickly.

USIA should prepare a statement of mission and a comprehensive development plan for Worldnet.

The National Security Council should examine the U.S. government's use of satellite television as an instrument of public diplomacy and issue a directive clarifying Worldnet's long-term goals and appropriate institutional role.

USIA should pursue use of satellite subcarrier technology to integrate delivery of VOA programs, the Wireless File, data and facsimile transmission and other services. Worldnet and the Voice of America should seek all appropriate opportunities to coordinate programming and signal delivery.

TV Marti, a proposal to broadcast U.S. government television programs to Cuba from a tethered balloon in the Florida Keys, has far-reaching implications for public diplomacy and the national interest. Funding for TV Marti should be contingent on Congressional hearings, authorizing legislation, and thorough interagency review of technical, legal, regulatory, policy, and programming issues. Funds for TV Marti should be appropriated separately and not taken from VOA's modernization budget or other public diplomacy accounts.

WIRELESS FILE

Through computerized data transmission of the Wireless File and experiments with direct delivery of File copy to foreign media organizations, USIA has greatly enhanced the quality and value of one of its most useful media products.

US-INFONET

The Commission finds US-INFONET, USIA's automated information and policy guidance system, to be a highly promising new service and recommends that it be made available to all overseas posts as quickly as local communications capabilities permit.

EXHIBITS

Carefully focused multimedia exhibits, accompanied by language-qualified American guides, are a highly effective means of communicating with millions of Soviets and East Europeans about life in the United States. USIA should give high priority to a national exhibition for China.

The U.S. should not participate in world's fairs unless it is prepared to commit the resources needed for a top quality American presence. Funding for world's fairs should not be drawn from other public diplomacy programs.

The National Security Council should respond to the findings of the World's Fair Task Force and provide a clear statement of the U.S. government's role in international expositions.

The Director of USIA should be a member of the Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee Commission.

EXCHANGE OF PERSONS

The Commission finds that international educational and cultural exchange programs administered by USIA in cooperation with private organizations provide an understanding and appreciation of the United States and are among the most effective tools of public diplomacy.

Budget reductions threaten to undermine gains made during the 1980s and USIA's ability to strengthen intenational exchange programs as intended by Congress.

The Fulbright scholarship program develops trust and good will in ways that further U.S. interests. It remains a vital and innovative model for other international educational exchanges.

USIA's increasing reliance on short-term grants for American lecturers appears less likely to achieve long-term Fulbright program objectives. The Commission encourages the Agency to assess the use of these grants.

Overseas academic counseling and domestic foreign student outreach programs are important to U.S. interests. They should be given additional resources.

Funding for the Central American undergraduate exchange program should be restored to its FY 1986 level.

Additional private sector participation in exchange programs with the Soviet Union is in the national interest. The number of U.S. and Soviet high school students participating in exchanges should be increased.

U.S.-Soviet educational exchanges should emphasize the social sciences and humanities. Reciprocity should be maintained in academic fields and overall numbers of grantees.

The Commission strongly supports negotiations with the Soviet Union for an American cultural center in Moscow.

USIA should expand its bilateral academic and cultural exchanges with the countries of Eastern Europe.

USIA's posts should use their developing automation capabilities to maintain involvement of former International Visitors and East-West center participants in post programs.

BOOK PROGRAMS

U.S. government support for book dissemination and translation programs is inadequate in countries where information about the U.S. is least available through alternative media and where Soviet distribution of low-cost subsidized books remains widespread. The Commission encourages renewed direct involvement by USIA in the donated books program and development of data on overseas markets for American titles.

SECURITY AND PUBLIC DIPLOMACY

Maintaining a secure environment for U.S. diplomats abroad should continue to be a high national priority.

Legislation and policies relating to diplomatic security must take fully into account USIA's public diplomacy mission, the need for public access to USIA's facilities, and the desirability that USIA give visible evidence of the free and open society it represents.

Direct appropriations to USIA or separately identified funds in the Department of State's appropriations legislation are required to provide adequate resources for USIA's diplomatic security needs.

Personal contact and reasonable access to facilities are essential to public diplomacy. Replacement of foreign national employees with Americans, unrealistic rules on fraternization and contact reporting, overbroad "core chancery" policies, and restrictive chancery co-location regulations threaten to cripple USIA's programs just as new opportunities are occurring in many communist countries.

MEDIA AND ADVOCACY SKILLS TRAINING

The Commission strongly reaffirms its recommendation that USIA and the Department of State provide media and advocacy skills training for all Ambassadors, Public Affairs Officers and other embassy officials likely to serve as foreign policy spokespersons prior to and during their service abroad.

FOREIGN LANGUAGE TRAINING

Foreign language proficiency is vital to effective public diplomacy. Current language training programs, personnel policies, and funding levels do not provide an adequate supply of officers with the professional fluency required for today's public diplomacy needs. The Commission recommends that USIA undertake a thorough review of its language policies.

USIA OFFICER ASSIGNMENTS

The Commission finds continued underrepresentation of USIA officers in ambassadorial and other senior positions in embassies and consulates. We recommend again that the President and the Secretary of State correct this imbalance.

USIA's officers should be assigned to a greater number and wider range of positions in the Department of State and the National Security Council. A major program of interagency officer rotation would benefit both public diplomacy and the policymaking process.

FOREIGN SERVICE TIME-IN-CLASS

The Commission finds that experienced and highly qualified Foreign Service Officers have been involuntarily retired under the "time-in-class" provision of the Foreign Service Act when need for their service continues. Congress and the foreign affairs agencies should consider revision of "time-in-class" requirements for the good of the service and to create expectations of a full career among highly qualified Foreign Service Officers.

AUTOMATION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS PLANNING

USIA has moved to a position of relative strenth in its development of automation and telecommunications capabilities. continued progress will require adaptation of new technologies into a coherent automation plan and Agency leadership that devotes personal interest and necessary resources to field and headquarters needs.

INTERNATIONAL CULTURAL AND TRADE CENTER

The International Cultural and Trade Center complex that will complete the Federal Triangle in central Washington, D.C. is an ideal permanent home for USIA, which is now located in eight headquarters buildings. The Advisory Commission supports the finding of the United States International Cultural and Trade Center Commission that USIA's mission uniquely qualifies it to be the Center's primary tenant.

A NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY

HON. MICHAEL A. ANDREWS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing pieces of legislation with several of my colleagues; a resolution calling for a national energy policy based on a core supply of domestic energy, the Energy Security Tax Act, and the Energy Security Incentive Act. Together with a fourth bill I will soon introduce the Alternative Fuels Incentive Act, these will serve as a framework for a comprehensive national energy policy.

I have been working an energy policy framework over the last several years. In the 100th Congress I introduced the Energy Security Tax Act, the Energy Security Incentive Act, and the Alternative Fuels Incentive Act. These bills are supported by independent producers and integrated companies alike. My proposals will spur domestic oil and gas production, efficiency, conservation, economic growth, price stability, and clean air.

Our country has gone without a comprehensive energy policy for too long. The results of this lack of direction are clear—wild fluctuations in energy prices, a nearly crippled domestic petroleum industry, surging imports, reduced conservation efforts, increased environmental degradation, and a growing threat to our national security.

The steady erosion of our domestic petroleum industry particularly concerns me. U.S. oil production has fallen to its lowest level in 24 years, 8.1 million barrels a day, while energy consumption continues to climb. Only half of the oil and gas drilling rigs operating 3 years ago are active today. We are rapidly approaching the point where 50 percent of the oil consumed in this country will flow through foreign rigs and by the turn of the century that dependence is likely to rise to 70 percent.

Our increased dependence on foreign oil presents significant national security concerns which we must address now. We are allowing OPEC to get back in the saddle again. As the cartel reasserts control, we will be increasingly at the mercy of the sheiks, the mullahs, and the Qadhafis. We are hastening the arrival of that day by allowing our domestic industry to be dismantled. We must not allow this progression to continue.

The Secretary of Commerce recently made a finding that petroleum imports threaten to impair U.S. national security. Proposals masquerading as good energy policy, most notably raising the Federal tax on gasoline, would make matters worse. Higher gasoline taxes will push petroleum prices at the wellhead lower, discouraging the exploration and production efforts we need to reverse the trend of recent years.

The first measure I am introducing today is a resolution calling upon President Bush to fulfill his campaign promise to develop a national energy policy based upon preserving a domestic core supply of energy. The core-supply concept would ensure a stable supply of domestically produced oil and gas as a secure foundation for satisfying our Nation's vital and fundamental need for energy. Petroleum's share of the core supply should be defined as 20 million barrels per day equivalent of natural gas, natural gas liquids, and crude oil.

The other two bills I am introducing today are designed as initial steps to implement a core-supply energy policy. The Energy Security Tax Act will impose a variable fee on imported crude oil and petroleum products. The amount of tax would be the difference between the then current price of oil and $22 per barrel. In the case of imported refined products and petrochemical feedstocks, an additional $2.50 differential will be imposed to compensate for the environmental costs domestic refiners must pay. A floor price for oil will generate price stability, benefiting both producers and consumers.

An import fee would stimulate drilling activity, arrest the decline in U.S. oil production, and add to proven reserves. Our dependence on imports would be mitigated, putting a significant dent in our trade gap. In addition, the revenues gained from an import fee would have a major impact on the budget deficit. If the price of oil were to remain at $17 per barrel, the Energy Security Tax Act could raise upward of $50 billion over 5 years.

Sure, an oil import fee will impose some short-term costs on the U.S. economy, but far less than the sustained long-term costs down the road if we allow our domestic industry to further erode. And in only a short time an oil import fee of the magnitude I am proposing would generate positive net benefits to the U.S. economy. And all the benefits accrue to Americans. We can pay ourselves now, or we can pay OPEC later.

The second bill, the Energy Security Incentive Act, will also encourage our domestic oil and gas industry to realize its full potential. Hydrocarbons extraction is one of the most heavily taxed industries in the United States. The average effective Federal tax rate for U.S. oil companies has been well above that of firms in other industries during the 1980's. Repeal of the windfall profit tax helps, but is not sufficient. Other nations are lowering their taxes on energy production and attracting investment capital to develop their resources. If our tax system is not competitive, U.S. resources will not be developed. Our economy will be the loser and our national security will suffer.

The Energy Security Incentive Act will create an oil and natural gas exploration and production credit, an oil production credit for maintaining marginal wells, and provide other incentives to our industry. For example, the bill treats geological, geophysical, and surface casing costs like intangible drilling costs; repeals the net income limitation on percentage depletion; increases the percentage depletion allowance; repeals the "transfer rule" and recapture provisions; removes intangible drilling costs from the minimum tax; and provides for a nonconventional fuel credit for tight sands gas.

This measure, also introduced by Senator BOREN, will help the struggling independents who drill about 85 percent of all wells in the United States and who have been responsible for close to half of the additions to U.S. oil reserves in recent years. The incentives I am proposing are quite modest, yet they will trigger considerable additional investment in exploratory drilling and enhanced recovery from older fields where much oil remains to be exploited.

For the longer term we should be working to make natural gas our Nation's primary energy source. The principle alternatives to oil—coal and nuclear energy—present environmental problems that we may not be able to overcome. Natural gas, on the other hand, is efficient and environmentally attractive. Use of domestic natural gas has no negative impact on the Nation's trade balance and supplies are plentiful. According to the Department of Energy, the United States has a natural gas resource base in the lower 48 States adequate for more than 60 years at the present rate of consumption.

Natural gas is already widely used in the commercial and industrial sectors. The transportation sector represents an excellent opportunity for gas to increase its share of the energy mix. If we were to convert one-half of our 16 million fleet vehicles to operate on compressed natural gas, we could slash our oil imports by 500,000 barrels a day and increase annual domestic gas consumption by 1 trillion cubic feet.

Along these lines, I plan to introduce legislation soon to promote alternative fuels use in the transportation sector. My Alternative Fuels Incentive Act will encourage fleet owners to switch to natural gas and other clean-burning fuels. I am currently reviewing various options for this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to make a serious commitment to preserving the ability of the U.S. oil and gas industry to respond to our future energy needs. The risks to our national security and economic well-being are growing. I look forward to working with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle and with the administration to turn this situation around.

MONTANA CENTENNIAL DAY

HON. RON MARLENEE

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, on November 8, 1989, the Big Sky State of Montana will celebrate its 100th year as a State. I rise today to recognize this momentous occasion for the citizens of America's great 41st State—Montana.

From the majestic Rocky Mountains of the west, to the millions of grain acres in the east; from the expansive national forests rich with wildlife, to the mines of gold, silver, palladium, copper and other precious minerals from the cores of Mother Earth; Montana has forever been viewed as the ultimate outdoorsman's paradise.

Her history is forever intertwined with the great expansion westward in the 1800's. Lewis and Clark's introduction of Montana to the world, in their famous 2-year journey in the early 1800's, proved to be the opening of the floodgates for the rush of settlers heading west. The railroads and wagon trains carried early homesteaders to Montana in search of vast fields, prosperity, and overwhelming beauty. Often in the face of harsh winters and merciless droughts, they pushed farther westward to find a renewed way of life for their families.

This centennial celebration marks the recognition of a State whose people are proud of their heritage and of their contributions to America. A people who see themselves as the heart of America—always beating with the strong, hard-working ideals that America was founded on.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to end with a quote from a famous American writer—John Steinbeck. He describes Montana like Montanan's view their precious land:

"It seems to me that Montana is a great splash of grandeur. The scale is huge, but not overpowering. The land is rich with grass and color, and the mountains are the kind I would create if mountains were ever put on my agenda. * * * Montana has a spell on me. * * * Of all the states it is my favorite and my love."

REMEMBERING FRANCISCO "CHICO" MENDES FILHO

HON. JIM MOODY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues today in remembering Francisco "Chico" Mendes Filho, who was murdered on December 22, 1988.

Mr. Mendes spent his life organizing rubber tappers in Brazil to save the irreplaceable tropical rain forests from destruction by harmful farming and "development" projects. In 1987 he won a Global 500 award from the United Nations Environmental Program for his work. His violent death by the son of disgruntled ranchers is a blow to the rubber tappers' movement in Brazil and also to the environmental community worldwide.

Brazil's tropical rain forests have been described as the world's lungs. If they are destroyed, we cannot long survive. After a summer when the United States endured the worst air quality ever recorded, new attraction is being focused on the greenhouse effect, global warming, and ozone depletion. At the core of these problems are too much pollution and the destruction of green plants and thus the Earth's natural ability to absorb the pollution. We need to attack the problem from all sides, but perhaps the most vital component is protecting the tropical rain forests in the Amazon. Chico Mendes dedicated his life to this end.

About 30 percent of the world's remaining rain forests are in Brazil; 12 percent of the country's forests are already gone, destroyed by subsistence farmers, cattle ranchers, and government agencies clearing the land for timber, minerals, and electricity. While each faction has a reason for using the forest, each is destroying its own livelihood and that of the rest of the world.

Each acre of rain forest that is cut down and burned represents more carbon pollution sent into the atmosphere, less pulled out and recycled into oxygen, and the destruction of fragile ecosystems and life forms that may not exist elsewhere. If we eliminate the rain forests, we may never have the chance to learn about the countless species of plants and animals that exists in this unique "living laboratory" of science.

Mr. Mendes succeeded in creating four "extractive reserves" in Brazil, more than 5 million acres preserved only for extracting rubber, resin, nuts, and other products that don't destroy the forest. His lifelong goal was to make more of these reserves; now it's up to the rest of the environmental movement to attain this goal.

The tropical rain forests are in the Amazon, but saving them from destruction is an international need. The United States needs to join with Brazil, Costa Rica, and other Latin American countries to solve the economic crises that lead to rain forest destruction and to create a program to protect the rain forests, for all our sakes.

We see the path we must take. Chico Mendes has blazed the trail for us. He gave his life for the sake of his precious rain forest and for the sake of the rest of the world. It is now up to us to follow his lead and to work together to ensure that Chico Mendes did not give his life in vain. He will be missed.

WOMEN'S AND MEN'S CAUCUSES FOR CONGRESSMAN ED TOWNS HONOR ALBERTO BRYAN

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, September 24, 1988, the Women's and Men's Caucuses for Congressman EDOLPHUS "ED" TOWNS held their annual dinner dance at the Fleur De Lis Restaurant. As part of this annual event, the caucuses chose to honor Alberto Bryan.

Alberto Bryan, the distinguished principal of I.S. 291 for the past 5 years, has received many scholastic honors and awards such as those from the New York University School of Education, Department of Foreign Languages and Bilingual Education, and the University of the State of New York Education Department.

Mr. Bryan is also a member of the National Association of Panamanian Educators, the Council of Supervisors and Administrators, the East New York Lions Club, and Fordham University Alumni Association, among many others.

Mr. Bryan's wife, Imogene Wison Bryan, is a teacher of science at Eastern District High School. Their daughters, Shalina and Litha Amarilis are attending college, at New York City Community College and Bethune Cookman College, respectively.

His present goal is to increase on yearly basis math and reading scores of the students of I.S. 291.

INTRODUCTION OF THE INTRAVENOUS SUBSTANCE ABUSE AND AIDS PREVENTION ACT

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing the "Intravenous Substance Abuse and AIDS Prevention Act." I am joined by my colleague BENJAMIN A. GILMAN. Senator DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN will be introducing a companion bill in the Senate.

When I first introduced this bill, there were only 38,000 AIDS cases and 25 percent were associated with intravenous drug abuse. By the end of 1988, nationwide there were more than 82,000 AIDS cases. A growing proportion of these cases—now over 27 percent—are attributable to intravenous drug abuse. Particularly alarming is the fact that most pediatric and female AIDS cases are associated with IV drug use.

Although some additional funding for drug abuse treatment for IV drug abusers was provided in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, the amounts authorized are not sufficient to address the problem at hand, based on the recommendations of the President's Commission on the HIV Epidemic. The bill I am introducing will increase the resources for IV drug abuse treatment and related counseling and testing services for those at risk of contracting AIDS because of their drug use by authorizing a grants program of $200 million to fund such services.

Moreover, it would also establish two grants programs of $100 million, each, to fund services for pregnant women and their children and for prevention programs in high risk communities in order to reduce the possibility of AIDS transmission.

Specifically, the bill authorizes $200 million for the Secretary of Health and Human Services to make grants to public and private nonprofit entities to provide treatment services to intravenous substance abusers. The grants will enable the programs to make available to such abusers, and to their sexual partners, counseling and education services to prevent the transmission of AIDS and testing to determine AIDS infection.

Priority for the services will be given to geographic areas where the incidence of the intravenous substance abuse is substantive relative to the incidence in other areas and, simultaneously, the incidence of AIDS infectionis relatively substantial. Seventy-five percent of the funding under this section of the act will be reserved for such areas. Another 25 percent of the funding will be directed toward communities where the incidence of intravenous drug use is substantial and the incidence of AIDS is not, but the development of AIDS may be prevented if sufficient treatment, counseling, and education services are provided to intravenous drug users.

One hundred million dollars is authorized for demonstration projects to reduce or prevent the incidence of AIDS infection in infants and to provide support to infants who have such infections. Priority is to be given to communities where the incidence of infant AIDS infection is substantial and the incidence of AIDS among intravenous drug users is high. Secondary consideration will be given to communities where the incidence of AIDS infection among intravenous substance abusers is substantial.

Services that may be provided under this grant program include: prenatal care for women who are intravenous drug users; services and financial assistance to parents of children infected with AIDS; services and financial assistance to encourage foster care for infants with AIDS; counseling, education, and testing services for women who are intravenous drug users and who are pregnant or at risk of becoming pregnant, to prevent the transmission of AIDS; and counseling, education, and testing services for women who are the sexual partners of intravenous drug abusers and who are pregnant, or at risk of becoming pregnant, to prevent the transmission of AIDS.

One hundred million dollars is provided for grants for projects to prevent the spread of AIDS related to intravenous substance abuse. Because the minority community is being disproportionately affected by AIDS related to IV-drug abuse, the bill gives preference to programs providing services to minority populations in any geographic area where there is substantial intravenous substance abuse. Projects funded under this provision would include education and counseling outreach projects for intravenous substance abusers and school-based and mass media efforts.

If we are ever to stop the AIDS epidemic, then we must arrest the spread of this disease among IV drug users and prevent the transmission of AIDS to the children and sexual partners of IV drug users. This bill will help us do just that. That is why I am reintroducing it today. I would urge each of you to join me as a cosponsor of this bill.

VOTER OPINIONS

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, at this time I am pleased to have the opportunity to share with my colleagues the results of a questionnaire that I have conducted among the voters of Pennsylvania's Sixth Congressional District. This annual questionnaire provides important information on the aggregate views of my district and I am grateful for the overwhelming response I received. The voter's thoughts and opinions on a number of issues facing the 101st Congress and the Nation are as follows:

PARENTAL LEAVE

The U.S. Congress is currently considering legislation that would give employees up to ten weeks of unpaid leave to care for newborn, newly adopted or very sick children and parents. Should employers be required to provide this period of unpaid leave for parents?

(1): (a) Yes—62%

(b) No—38%

(2) In your mind, what is the biggest crisis facing our Nation?

(a) Budget Deficit—30%.

(b) Trade Deficit—5%.

(c) Drugs—44%.

(d) External military threats—3%.

(f) Education—8%.

(g) Other—Write In—8% (most write-in's have mentioned the environment as biggest crisis).

DRUG TESTING

The drug problem in the U.S. has reached epidemic proportions. A number of remedies have been proposed to address this problem. Many observers have advocated the use of mandatory drug testing. Should private employers be allowed to require their employees to take tests to detect drug use as a condition of employment or promotion?

(3): (a) Yes—77%.

(B) No—23%.

CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM

In recent years, the cost of campaigns for the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate have skyrocketed. To control these high costs, the Congress is considering various reforms in the present campaign finance system. Which of the following ways of financing campaigns for the House and Senate do you prefer?

(4): (a) Provide public funding through a $1 checkoff on income tax forms—23%.

(b) Don't provide public funds but place overall limits on Political Action Committee (PAC) contributions—67%.

(c) Do not reform current system—10%.

STRATEGIC DEFENSE INITIATIVE

The U.S. is now conducting research on space-based defense systems against incoming nuclear missiles. This program is known as the Strategic Defense Initiative [SDI], but is better known as Star Wars. SDI supporters say the program is needed to protect the U.S. from nuclear attack; critics argue that SDI is too costly and can never be effective. How do you feel about the program?

(5) Do you support continued research?

(a) Yes—71%.

(b) No—29%.

(6) Do you favor early deployment?

(a) Yes—41%.

(b) No—59%.

(7) Does SDI research help other areas of scientific research and development?

(a) Yes—79%.

(b) No—21%.

(8) The Congress is now considering an increase in Federal minimum wage, now set at $3.35 per hour. Should the minimum wage be increased?

(a) Yes—64%.

(b) No—36%.

SPENDING PRIORITIES

Review the following areas of Federal spending and indicate whether they should be increased, decreased or remain the same.

(9) Agriculture:

(b) Decreased—27%.

(c) Same—39%.

(10) Defense:

(a) Increased—17%.

(b) Decreased—32%.

(c) Same—51%.

(11) Housing:

(a) Increased—31%.

(b) Decreased—27%.

(c) Same—42%.

(12) Medicare:

(a) Increased—52%.

(b) Decreased—8%.

(c) Same—40%.

(13) Social Security:

(a) Increased—45%.

(b) Decreased—6%.
(c) Same—49%.
(14) Veterans' Programs:
(a) Increased—40%.
(b) Decreased—9%.
(c) Same—51%.
(15) Education:
(a) Increased—52%.
(b) Decreased—9%.
(c) Same—39%.
(16) The Congress is examining the possible expansion of Medicare to provide coverage for the costs of home health care and for long-term care in a nursing home. This new program may require an increase in social security taxes. Do you favor a national program to provide long-term health care for senior citizens?
(a) Yes—69%.
(b) No—31%.
(17) Should companies be required to give sixty days notice in the event of a plant closing?
(a) Yes—72%.
(b) No—28%.
(18) The U.S. has been a powerful defender of democracy and liberty around the world. Our defense expenditures work not only to protect our own national security but also to check anti-democratic forces in other countries. Given how much we spend to help defend the free world, do you think any policy changes are in order?
(a) Our NATO allies and Japan should be forced to assume a greater share of their own defense costs—73%.
(b) Other nations reimburse the U.S. for the protection our presence provides—23%.

OPPOSITION TO A GAS TAX FOR DEFICIT REDUCTION

HON. ARLAN STANGELAND

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Speaker, some people are suggesting we increase the gas tax to cut the Federal budget deficit. Clearly, Congress must tackle the budget problem, but to levy a new Federal gasoline tax on the American public is not the solution.

Increased gas taxes could endanger the Nation's highway system, according to detailed testimony before the House Public Works and Transportation Committee. Such a tax would break the longstanding compact between highway users and Federal and State governments to support a pay-as-you-go system. America's transportation needs already exceed available funding; increased motor fuel taxes should not be siphoned off to address other social problems.

Besides, the more we increase Federal taxes, the less leverage we leave States to manage their own programs. For example, Minnesota already has a 20-cent-per-gallon tax on top of the 9 cents per gallon Federal tax. By doubling the Federal tax, Congress could, in effect, preempt the State from raising revenues to meet its growing infrastructure needs.

A new gas tax could also be inflationary. Individual consumers and the economy in general would suffer. For example, a 30-cent-per-gallon gas tax could put 525,000 people out of work by 1990, cut income tax revenues by nearly $2.7 billion annually, and raise the Consumer Price Index by nearly 1 percent. That same increase could double the tax burden of a two-driver family in Minnesota from $378 to $814, according to 1986 figures from the Federal Highway Administration.

Perhaps most importantly, this deficit reduction scheme would be unfair. The tax is regressive; it hits poor families much harder than others. The Congressional Budget Office indicates lower income groups pay more than 1.6 percent of their income to gas taxes while high income groups pay only 0.2 percent of their income.

The inequity would be just as great for small town America. Those who live in Western and North Central States, where long distance driving is inevitable, would have to shoulder much more of this new tax burden. Rural America would, on the average, pay 40 percent more than big city dwellers under the proposed taxing scheme.

Why should a resident of Minnesota have to pay twice as much as a resident of the District of Columbia to reduce the deficit? Rural Americans already have very limited transportation options. Why penalize as further by imposing a heavy-handed Federal tax on one of our only modes of transportation?

The gas tax may seem like an easy fix to an awful dilemma. After all, some people claim it will, in one fell swoop, erase billions from the deficit, end our growing dependence on foreign oil, and ease our choking problems with auto emissions and air pollution. But such a quick fix rarely holds up in the light of serious scrutiny. And this is the case with the gas tax.

A new Federal levy on gasoline will jeopardize our Nation's highway and infrastructure system, cause economic disruption, and break faith with rural and low-income Americans. I urge my colleagues to continue on the road to deficit reduction, but to use a different vehicle; the gas tax option just won't get us where we want to go.

THE EAST COAST AIRCRAFT NOISE ABATEMENT ACT

HON. MATTHEW J. RINALDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a bill I hope will bring relief to thousands of my constituents who have been bombarded with aircraft noise since the implementation of the Federal Aviation Administration's expanded east coast plan. I strongly urge my colleagues to support the "East Coast Aircraft Noise Abatement Act."

The FAA devised the expanded east coast plan, or EECP, to deal with the growing problems of congestion and delays at major metropolitan airports along the east coast. The EECP involved the creation of new "highways in the sky" that are intended to disperse aircraft more safely and efficiently.

Unfortunately for residents of my district, these new air routes into and out of the New York-New Jersey metropolitan area's three major airports have caused an alarming level of aircraft noise over communities which never before experienced such problems. The residents of my district are fair people who don't mind sharing the burdens as well as the benefits of economic growth. They feel now, though, and I concur, that their communities are shouldering an unfair amount of the region's noise burden.

I have been struggling with this problem for well over a year now, with mixed results. The FAA has pledged to do what it can to ease the noise over these communities, but its actions have been piecemeal at best. A careful examination of the history of this problem reveals that if the FAA had fulfilled its planning responsibilities in the first place, much of the outcry over the EECP could have been avoided.

Under current law, the FAA need not issue an environmental impact statement for flight path changes over 3,000 feet in altitude, a cap I feel has long been outdated. It is the intent of the law, however, that the FAA should anticipate problems such as the public outcry which accompanied the EECP, and take steps in the planning process to ensure that the views of concerned citizens are taken into account. This did not happen. No environmental impact statement was issued and residents were not consulted on the EECP until the plan was basically rammed down their throats.

The bill I am introducing today would take steps to rectify the noise problem over New Jersey. It would require the FAA to go back to the drawing board and issue an environmental impact statement based on an analysis of flight path changes it should have undertaken in the first place. It would also require an investigation of air safety over New Jersey since the implementation of the EECP.

Based on these two studies, the FAA would be required to report to Congress on proposed modifications in the plan, or to explain why such alterations are not necessary. Finally, the bill would stipulate that, in the future, the FAA must issue an environmental impact statement for all such changes over urbanized areas to an altitude of 10,000 feet. This last provision is intended to ensure that the FAA does not repeat its mistakes in developing similar plans for other regions of the country.

Mr. Speaker, several analyses done over the course of the past year point up the need for a comprehensive examination of EECP changes. A study commissioned by the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey found significant increases in noise levels over the affected communities. A General Accounting Office report concluded that the FAA could have done much more to anticipate the public outcry caused by the plan, and recommended the issuance of the environmental impact statement required in this bill.

The FAA's bits and pieces approach to this problem is not sufficient. Justice demands a thorough reevaluation of the implementation of the EECP, and a concrete set of proposals to make changes in the plan. I urge my colleagues to help me work toward this end.

WOMEN'S AND MEN'S CAUCUSES FOR CONGRESSMAN ED TOWNS HONOR B. MITCHELL ALTER, ESQ.

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, on Sauturday, September 24, 1988, the Women's and Men's Caucuses for Congressman Edolphus "Ed" Towns held their annual dinner dance at the Fleur De Lis Restaurant. As part of this annual event, the caucuses chose to honor Attorney B. Mitchell Alter.

Mr. Alter received a B.A. degree from New York University as well as J.D. degree from Brooklyn Law School. From 1975 to 1977, he was on the staff of the Bedford Stuyvesant Community Legal Services Corp.

Now engaged in private practice, he is a senior partner in the five attorney firm of Alter & Barbaro.

IMPROVE NUTRITION MONITORING

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, this week Members of Congress in both the House and the Senate are reintroducing the National Nutritional Monitoring Act of 1989, a bill identical to that which passed both the House and the Senate with overwhelming bipartisan votes but was pocket vetoed by President Reagan last November in one of the sillier actions of the last Administration. Their objections fall of their own weight.

The bill provides no new spending—only good management of present spending. The bill would bring what is now a multitude of independent, uncoordinated efforts into a coordinated system where, for the first time some responsibility would be able to be placed on those directing these efforts on behalf of the taxpayer. it is strange to think that perhaps fear of some actual accountability for spending tax dollars was the real reason this bill was vetoed by the Reagan administration.

Obviously, a good nutritional monitoring system is essential to the development of sound food, nutritional, and health policies at all levels of government. This bill requires a comprehensive plan to insure that those nutrition monitoring and research activities which will have the greatest payoff will be given priority and be pursued through cost-effective procedures.

The bill was not developed in a vacuum. Many of the features were recommended by a broad range of food, nutrition, and health experts in testimony before Subcommittees of the Science, Space, and Technology Committee and the Agriculture Committee. The bill incorporates recommendations of the National Academy of Sciences and even the Reagan administration's Joint Nutrition Monitoring Evaluation Committee—which was discontinued after their first report was published in 1986.

Let me quote the Joint Nutrition Monitoring Evaluation Committee's recommendations, all of which were incorporated into the bill passed overwhelmingly by both Houses of Congress last year and reintroduced this week.

The committee recommended we: Establish a mechanism for learning more about the data needs of users, especially Federal agencies; Increase the availability of nutrition information from Federal surveys; Improve comparability of data; Improve timely publication data; Continue and expand efforts to study the factors that influence food intake and nutrition status, especially among high-risk groups; Increase research to improve methods for assessing dietary intake and nutritional status; and Provide adequate resources to the national nutrition monitoring system to implement these recommendations.

Although some progress in developing a coordinated nutrition monitoring system has been made over the past 8 years, each Federal agency involved in collecting and disseminating nutritional and health information continues to follow their own agenda. The result has been waste, delay and duplication. We have a long way to go in this area. In fact, the 1988 Surgeon General's Report on Nutrition and Health stated that—

However, much more detailed information is needed to continue to identify changes in the national diet that will lead to better health for the Nation. Gaps in our knowledge of nutrition suggest future research and survillance needs.

The report gave the following examples of research and surveillance that should be addressed: How nutrient requirements translate into healthful dietary patterns; the development of biochemical markers of dietary intake to monitor the effects of dietary intervention; and the establishment of a nutrition surveillance system that will make it possible to monitor population—specific and State—specific occurrences of nutrition-related risk factors. These goals are the objectives of the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act of 1989.

History mandates that a legislative mandate is necessary to assure a National Nutrition Monitoring System exists over time to serve the needs of the public, State and local governments, and the private sector. Nutrition monitoring data are useful indicators of the economic and social health of our Nation.

In addition, nutritional and health information have a wide variety of uses and users, representing all sectors of society. Systems which relate to nutrition monitoring data, such as food production, health care, and intervention and education programs, are national in scope. Thus, there is wide agreement that a comprehensive nutrition monitoring program must be a Federal responsibility. Congress must assure that present and future efforts are in the best interests or our citizen's health and economic well-being.

I look forward to working with the Bush administration to shape a proposal which will advance our knowledge of the relationship of diet and health and result in information necessary to maintain a healthy America. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act of 1989.

NUTRITIONAL STATUS OF THE NATION

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced H.R. 677, the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act of 1989, on behalf of Representatives ROBERT ROE, DOUG WALGREN, SHERWOOD L. BOEHLERT, and 27 of our colleagues. This is not a new bill. The identical bill, S. 1081, was passed by the House on October, 12, 1988, by a vote of 311 to 84 and by unanimous consent in the Senate on October 18, 1988. Senator BINGAMAN and his colleagues also introduced this week the bill as passed by the House and Senate in the 100th Congress. The joint introduction of this bill represents our commitment to enhance this Nation's nutrition and health status monitoring system and to ensure passage of the bill early in the 101st Congress.

Why must we reintroduce this bill? Because, on November 8, 1988, President Reagan pocket vetoed the bill on the basis that "The bill would create a substantial amount of unnecessary and complex Federal bureaucracy that would hamper the achievement of the bill's goals." Quite to the contrary, the bill did not create a new bureaucracy or mandate a program administrator, but sought to fix responsibility for the coordination of current Federal nutrition monitoring activities and make more effective use of Federal and State expenditures in this area.

Apparently the President did not realize the recommendations of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Health and Human Services appear to be based on the desire to protect each department's turf rather than on the benefits which could be realized by the public. This costly and long-term battle over nutrition jurisdiction among the departments has curtailed advancement of nutrition knowledge, and is one of the major reasons why passage of the legislation we are introducing today is imperative.

The bill asks for Federal nutrition monitoring activities to do no more than what is being accomplished, without a legislative mandate, for Federal global research. The President submitted with the fiscal year 1990 budget request a report, "Our Changing Planet: A U.S. Strategy for Global Change Research." The report, developed by an interagency group of the Federal Coordinating Council for Science, Engineering, and Technology, presents an initial strategy for a comprehensive long-term plan, budget estimates by agency and by research activity. The strategy will be expanded into a comprehensive plan in 1989.

USDA and DHHS developed a joint implementation plan for a comprehensive National Nutrition Monitoring System in 1981 and an operational plan for a National Nutrition Monitoring System in 1987. However, the major objective of the implementation plan was never achieved. The critical events identified in the operational plan are not developed in a strategic manner necessary to guide actions. Neither plan identified the budgetary resources needed to carry out the critical events, mechanisims to coordinate DHHS and USDA activities with those of other federal agencies, nor lead agency responsibility for the total system or individual goals as defined. The major purposes of the legislative proposal we are introducing today is to have in place a plan which will integrate the activities of all federal agencies involved and identify priorities and estimated resources required, so that Congress and the public can determine the appropriateness of the activities and the level of expenditures requested.

In addition to a coordinated plan and associated budget, the National Nutrition Monitoring and Related Research Act of 1989 includes five major components, inadequate or absent at the present time, which could make more effective use of Federal and State expenditures for nutrition monitoring, and enhance the benefits of current Federal efforts. These five components include:

First, methods research to reduce the cost and improve the accuracy of the Nation's nutrition monitoring capabilities, as well as the assessment of the health of individuals;

Second, technical assistance to State and local government so that data they collect could make a contribution to the Federal system, and likewise, national data could be more helpful to States in allocating limited food and health resources;

Third, Advisory Council to provide scientific and technical advise and provide a forum for recommendations of groups who use and depend on Federal nutritional status data;

Fourth, Dietary Guidance to be published periodically and to be consistent among Federal agencies; and Fifth, assessment of the appropriate Federal role in assuring that medical students and physicians have access to training in nutrition and its relationship to health.

The passage of this bill is essential to assessing the nutritional and health status of our citizens, to advancing our knowledge of the relationship between diet and health, and developing sound policies to guide nutrition research, education, and intervention programs. I urge my colleagues to join in sponsoring the National Nutrition Monitoring Act of 1989.

THE COMPREHENSIVE AIRCRAFT NOISE ACT OF 1989

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, last week I joined with Congresswoman ROUKEMA to introduce H.R. 546, the Comprehensive Aircraft Noise Reduction Act of 1989, legislation designed to address the problems created by aircraft noise.

As many of my colleagues are aware, in 1987 the Federal Aviation Administration implemented a new air traffic plan on the east coast known as the expanded east coast plan, or EECP, in order to alleviate airport delays and congestion in our skies. Unfortunately, the result of the FAA's action has been the disruption of the peace and quiet of communities located up to 60 miles away from the nearest airports.

Mr. Speaker, while the FAA had good intentions, little consultation was given to the impact the new plan could have on the surrounding environment. Consequently, within weeks of implementation of the EECP, residents throughout the New York-New Jersey metropolitan area began complaining about a new intrusion into their lives, airplane noise pollution. Since then, literally thousands of citizens have complained to the FAA, the Governor, the Congress, and even to the President. Quiet neighborhoods are now being bombarded by jet noise from dawn to dusk. In some New Jersey towns, such as Freehold and Marlboro, residents have been bothered by planes flying directly over their homes as late as 2 a.m.

In response to the problems created for New Jersey as well as the lack of a national policy on this subject, Congresswoman ROUKEMA and I, along with others, introduced the Comprehensive Aircraft Noise Reduction Act of 1989. I am particularly pleased that at my urging, Congresswoman ROUKEMA broadened this bill to ensure that the residents of central New Jersey—that is, western Monmouth, Middlesex, and northern Mercer Counties—would be included within the scope of this legislation.

As introduced, H.R. 546 would require the FAA to report to Congress within 30 days on a plan to reduce noise levels caused by the expanded east coast plan in all regions of New Jersey. In addition, the FAA will be required to report to the Governor of New Jersey every 60 days on progress being made in this regard. The FAA would also be required to negotiate with the Defense Department regarding unused airspace over the Atlantic Ocean. Currently, there is a significant amount of airspace reserved for military use, even though there is no present or future need for it.

H.R. 546 would require the FAA to produce a national plan to begin phasing out the use of older and louder aircraft, called stage II aircraft. Although it is the stated policy of the Department of Transportation to help the aviation industry retire stage II planes, there have not yet been any concrete proposals issued. This bill requires the Secretary of Transportation, in consultation with the Secretary of Treasury, to submit such a plan to Congress within 6 months. Finally, H.R. 546 requires the FAA to issue an environmental impact statement for all future comprehensive air traffic plans which change routes under 19,000 feet.

Mr. Speaker, some aircraft noise is unavoidable, however the volume and frequency of the noise and the manner in which it effects certain communities can be adjusted and moderated by FAA flight patterns. Unfortunately however, the FAA instituted the expanded east coast plan without taking into account the tremendous impact which the jet noise has had upon so many communities in New Jersey. Subsequent studies conducted by the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey and by the General Accounting Office have verified the extent to which aricraft noise has become a problem in communities far from Newark Airport and have also implied that the FAA erred when they chose to overlook this possible impact. In fact, according to a report prepared by the General Accounting Office:

> . . . [the] FAA should have expected the negative reaction of New Jersey residents. In this regard, FAA could have been more sensitive to environmental concerns by conducting an environmental assessment before implementing its plan.

Had such an assessment taken place, Mr. Speaker, I believe that modifications could have been implemented to the Plan which would have reduced the impact upon peaceful New Jersey communities without compromising the necessary improvements in air traffic management.

Mr. Speaker, the Comprehensive Aircraft Noise Reduction Act of 1989 provides reasonable remedies to problems surrounding air traffic in and out of Newark, Kennedy, and La Guardia Airports and at the same time promulgates a reasonable national approach to aircraft noise abatement. Since the FAA will be implementing similar plans on the west coast as well as in the midcontinent area, I would advise my colleagues that this is not simply a local or regional problem. Chairman ANDERSON has expressed interest in pursuing this mattter in the House Public Works and Transportation Committee and I look forward to hearings on this issue early in the 101st Congress.

ANTHONY LONGHETTI RETIRES

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a truly remarkable man, Deputy Chief Anthony Longhetti. I have known Anthony for many years and would like to compliment him on his numerous contributions to San Bernardino County and wish him well during his retirement.

Anthony Longhetti was born on January 28, 1929 in Pittsburg CA. He was educated at the University of California, Berkeley, where in 1950 he gruaduated with a bachelor's degree in technical criminology. On November 26 of that same year, he married his lovely wife, Alma, with whom he has two children.

Deputy Chief Longhetti continued his education at the University of Minnesota's School of Chemistry were he worked as a crime laboratory analyst and assistant laboratory director for the Minnesota State Bureau of Criminal Apprehension. After several years of living in Minnesota, Anthony moved to San Bernardino County to become crime laboratory director at the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department. He remained in this position until 1983 when he became deputy chief, in command of the Scientific Investigations Bureau—Crime Laboratory and Identification Division.

His wide experience in the criminalistics field, including toxicology and analytical chemistry, microanalysis, firearms identification, document examination and crime scene reconstruction, Anthony has qualified as an expert witness in each of these areas in State, Federal, and military courts.

In addition to his extensive professional work in criminalistics, he taught basic courses in the field, sharing his knowledge with students at various California colleges and universities.

Deputy Chief Longhetti distinguished himself not only in his profession but in the community as well. He held presidential posts in the following local organizations: Kiwanis Club, Little League, YMCA, Easter Seal Society, and statewide Jaycees, as well as an elected member of the board of education in Rialto, CA.

Please join me in this salute to Anthony Longhetti. May he reflect on his years with San Bernardino County with great pride and enjoy the years ahead as he enters into this well deserved retirement.

UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, it was 71 years ago this week, when in the face of the Bolsheviks seizing of power, Ukraine's National Assembly met in Kiev and proclaimed the independence of their people. On January 22, 1918, the Ukrainian Central Rada proclaimed Ukraine an independent, sovereign state. Of course, the nation's self-government was short-lived, as it was crushed and absorbed by the Soviet Union. Today, 71 years later, Ukrainians still must cope with being one of many occupied republics in the illegitimate Soviet empire.

Observing Ukrainian Independence Day is particularly meaningful in light of the current situation in the Soviet Union. I personally enjoyed honoring the January 22 anniversary along with the Ukrainian Congressional Committee of Illinios, and I would like to express to them my appreciation for being named Ukrainian Man of the Year.

It is observances like Ukrainian Independence Day which highlight the consistent irony in the highly publicized and lauded initiatives of perestroika and glasnost. Concessions to nationalist sentiments, such as limited participation in elections, have been evident in the Soviet Union, from the Baltic States to Ukraine to Armenia. However, we must remember that what Ukrainians and other nationalists justifiably call for is not concessions, but autonomy. The peoples of Ukraine, Armenia, and the Baltic States were unjustly consolidated into the Soviet Union, and they are calling for their due independence. Despite all the years of Soviet Russian domination of Ukraine, the yearning for freedom is still strong. As long as this call for freedom exists, we can not afford to be satisfied with the preliminary results of Gorbachev's reform.

The Ukrainian call for autonomy and personal freedom is very simple, and includes the same rights which Americans hold so dear. The third universal of the Ukrainian National Republic, issued in 1917, proclaims the rights to freedom of speech, press, religion, assembly, and minorities, among others. Today, even these basic universal rights are not guaranteed in the Soviet Union. Exercise of nationalist self-determination and full religious freedoms still are unaccepted by Moscow.

On Ukrainian Independence Day, it is appropriate to remember that the call for autonomy and basic human rights in the Soviet Republics is still strong, and still not satisfactorily addressed by the Soviet Union. This should always play a role in our assessment of the current Soviet situation.

SAN FRANCISCO, THE TEAM OF THE 1980's.

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to an exceptional group of people. With their Super Bowl XXIII victory in Miami Sunday, the San Francisco 49ers by consensus became the team of the 1980's. They may also be a team for the ages.

The 49ers are remarkable not only for their determination and skill but also for their humanity off the field. How many times have we seen a winning coach after a football game embrace the losing coach and walk off the field with his arm around him. Bill Walsh coaches football with a level of skill that few could match. He also knows off the field the value of friendship that makes life meaningful.

Ronnie Lott has been the soul of the 49er defense since his first season. Off the field he is readily found visiting a sick child in a hospital. Joe Montana's contributions to the community include taking time out of a very hectic season to appear on national television for a missing child. We need more of these fitting examples for our Nation's young, blending the best of sport and life.

And finally, who can think of this team without the indelible image etched in the last 3½ minutes resulted in the most thrilling conclusion to a Super Bowl in the 23-year history of the game. The title of a song from my youth comes to mind in describing the team in that last few minutes—"Poetry in Motion." They are a team for the 1980's—a team for the ages.

The Cincinnati team was very tough—tougher than anyone predicted. I compliment their team and the entire 49er organization.

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF ARMSTRONG NURSERIES

HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to recognize and congratulate Armstrong Garden Centers, Inc., on the occasion of its 100th anniversary. In the area of landscaping, Armstrong is a landmark southern California name.

The southern California history of Armstrong Garden Centers began in 1889 when John S. Armstrong moved from Ontario, Canada, to Ontario, CA. The business expanded rapidly with prominent operations in the 22d Congressional District.

Since its creation this organization and its people have done a great deal to beautify and improve the environment for many southern Californians. Armstrong is renowned for its efforts on behalf of roses and fruit trees. There are no questions or problems dealing with soil, irrigation, plant pathology, pest control, or design that Armstrong is not capable of answering or solving. Mr. Speaker, Armstrong is a fine and enduring organization to which its 100th anniversary will attest.

IN MEMORY OF THOMAS PERRY ADAMS

HON. JULIAN C. DIXON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, on October 16, 1988, Los Angeles' black community lost one of its most active members and role models. I rise today to mourn the passing of Thomas Perry Adams.

Tom Perry was truly a 20th century Renaissance man. After his honorable discharge from the Army in 1954, he completed his undergraduate degree at UCLA. An outstanding athlete, he played on the 1955 UCLA football team and in the 1956 Rose Bowl game. Tom was also a founding and lifetime member of the UCLA Black Alumni Association, where he served as the first president. While attending UCLA, Tom Met Lois Yvonne Payne, whom he married in 1958.

Tom furthered his education at Southwestern Law School, and after his admittance to the California State Bar in 1969, he became a Los Angeles deputy city attorney. In 1972, he entered private practice, where as an associate with the Honorable Charles A. Pope, and later with Halvor T. Miller, Esquire, he focused primarily on criminal defense and probate law. He also served as judge pro tempore in Southgate Municipal Court on many occasions.

Tom was devoted to the community's youth, serving on the Baldwin Hills Little League Association's board of directors and coaching the Giants team for 10 years. He was a Cub Scout leader at Overland Avenue School, and served as a volunteer with the Woodcraft Rangers.

Mr. Speaker, in both his professional career and personal life, Thomas Perry Adams enriched the lives of many Angelenos. Therefore, I ask my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join me in extending sincere condolences to his mother, Blossie Adams, his wife, Yvonne, and children Gregory and Dana.

A TRIBUTE TO THE UNDERWATER ADVENTURE SEEKERS ON THEIR 30TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, the Underwater Adventure Seekers were organized in the District of Columbia on February 25, 1959, and is celebrating its 30th anniversary this year in promoting safe water sports and diving activities.

The Underwater Adventure Seekers promotes the conservation of aquatic life through various programs and activities, and is the oldest black sports scuba diving club in the world.

This organization has trained over 1,500 divers and more black divers than any diving club in the world. As part of its training programs, it assists students in the University of the District of Columbia Marine Science and Oceanography Programs through the sponsorship of field trips and other learning experiences; and

The Underwater Adventure Seekers provide instruction in swimming and other water activities to groups of all ages, and it provides rescue divers to Federal and local agencies in disasters when trained and experienced divers are needed.

Underwater Adventure Seekers is celebrating its 30th anniversary with a photography exhibition and banquet on February 25, 1989 at the Georgetown Holiday Inn, and its members are to be congratulated and commended for 30 years of service to the Washington, DC community.

CLEANING UP OUR NATION'S OILSPILL LIABILITY LAWS

HON. JOHN MILLER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, as the 101st Congress gets underway it is important to focus on some of the unfinished business from last term. Near the top of our agenda should be cleaning up our Nation's oil-spill liability laws.

Just before Christmas a tug boat collided with a barge carrying 213,000 gallons of bunker oil. This oil was spilled into the Pacific Ocean off the coast of Washington State. The damage was initially thought to be minimal. The oil was supposed to wash out to sea and gradually disappear in the Pacific Ocean. But, Mr. Speaker, Mother Nature did not cooperate. Instead that oil has fouled beaches along the coast of Washington State and Vancouver Island. Thousands of shore birds died. Miles of beaches were scarred by tar. The spill has also harmed our relations with our Canadian neighbors, who blame our Government for desecrating hundreds of miles of beaches on Vancouver Island.

Last February another barge carrying 300,000 gallons of heavy fuel oil capsized and sank in the Guemes Channel; 46,000 gallons spilled into Puget Sound. And, last year other major oilspills were reported on the Monongahela River, in the Delaware River, in Savannah Harbor and in Cook Inlet in Alaska. Across our Nation, fisheries and wildlife habitat are contaminated, businesses are disrupted and people living near the spill are inconvenienced.

We should recognize, Mr. Speaker, that oil spilled on beaches like those on the coast of Washington has a long-term effect. It does not go away quickly. Habitat that is fouled may take years to rehabilitate, tourists scared away may not come back for years. And the physical costs of a cleanup are substantial. The recent spill in the Guemes Channel cost over $3 million to cleanup. Yet, under Federal law, liability exposure for the barge operator is only $125,000. Some companies, like ARCO, quickly stepped forward to help defray the costs but under Federal law, they did not have to.

Mr. Speaker, one way to reduce the danger of oilspills is to let the shippers know that they are going to be held accountable for the real costs of a spill, not just a tiny fraction. A bill to do this was approved by the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries last session. That bill, "The Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act," would have established a new comprehensive set of rules to provide prompt, adequate, and equitable compensation to those who suffer from oilspills.

"The Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act" would also encourage prompt cleanup of oilspills and create mechanisms to reimburse Federal, State, and local governments for the costs of cleaning up a spill. It would have imposed strict "joint and several" liability for those transporting or producing oil and other long needed reforms in Federal law. Most importantly, "The Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act" would have established a clear and predictable legal and regulatory framework for claimants, spillers, insurers, and Government officials.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, I supported this bill. I spoke in favor of it in this Chamber. But, unfortunately, the bill died in the Public Works Committee. The bill was not a new idea. The House has been working on a reform package for almost a decade. "The Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act" had widespread support from the administration, from Industry, from environmental groups, and coastal States. It should have been passed into law last session. Mr. Speaker, I urge this House to promptly consider a new legislation to modernize our outmoded oilspill statutes.

TRIBUTE TO GEORGE DERN

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding individual, Mr. George Dern. Mr. Dern is this year's recipient of the Professional Community Service Award, an award presented each year by the Bernardi Multipurpose Senior Center to a local business person of the San Fernando Valley who has positively contributed to the welfare and betterment of the senior citizen community.

Mr. Dern has served the southern California community for many years. His pleasant personality and willingness to be helpful have endeared him to both his colleagues in the pharmacy business and the public he has served so well. His generous contributions of time and efforts has enhanced the lives of many senior citizens. The hours of volunteer counseling on matters regarding medications, their uses, benefits and effects, and the regularly scheduled lectures at the Bernardi Multipurpose Senior Center on important senior concerns have positively affected the lives of many. He makes himself available to the center's staff and senior members to consult on any matters regarding health and prescriptions. In addition, he is also the longtime supporter and underwriter of the newsletter at the center.

George Dern is a native of Worcester, MA. He attended the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy in Boston and is licensed in both the States of California and Massachusetts. He is married and is the proud father of three sons.

It is my distinct honor to ask my colleagues to join me in saluting Mr. George Dern, an invaluable member of my community.

STATE ENERGY CONSERVATION PROGRAMS IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1989

HON. PHILIP R. SHARP

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the State Energy Conservation Programs Improvement Act of 1989, a bill to update and streamline three State and local assistance programs administered by the Department of Energy. Similar legislation is being introduced in the Senate today.

These programs were originally created by Congress to improve the energy efficiency of our economy and reduce our dependence on imported oil. Today another important reason for these programs is the looming specter of global warming.

We should not forget, however, that these programs also provide needed assistance to help people, schools, hospitals, and small businesses cut their energy bills.

The Weatherization Assistance Program provides insulation and other conservation services to low-income households, thereby reducing their need for other types of ongoing public assistance. The Institutional Conservation Program pays part of the cost for making schools and hospitals more energy efficient, thereby increasing the percentage of their budgets that they can spend on teaching and healing. The State Energy Conservation Plans provide States with targets for increasing their energy efficiency through programs that are tailored to the specific needs of consumers and businesses in each State.

All three programs are 10 or more years old and have produced many successes. The Weatherization Program has already upgraded 3 million low-income houses, resulting in average energy savings of 10 to 20 percent each. Since its inception, the ICP Program has provided over 21,000 grants to local schools and hospitals to reduce their energy costs. The SECP Program has resulted in a number of innovative programs that are tailored to specific States' needs such as a program to encourage the use of alternative vehicle fuels in California, a Louisiana research and demonstration program to reduce energy use in the commercial fishing fleet and a Maine "interest rate buy-down" on energy conservation loans to small businesses, industry, and nonprofit organizations.

Despite these successes, some of the requirements in these programs no longer make sense, and there are new activities that States could successfully undertake to reduce the burden of energy costs on their citizens. These programs need new goals and greater flexibility to deal with the changed energy realities of the 1980's and 1990's.

One of these realities is that we must weigh the environmental impacts of all energy decisions we make. The specters of global environmental problems such as acid rain, ozone depletion, and climatic warming are all very troubling. And, while scientists and others can argue over the ramifications of these trends and the need for more comprehensive solutions, all available evidence suggests that greater energy efficiency is at least a partial remedy that does not commit us to costly crash programs and that saves consumers money.

I am under no illusions that this legislation is the answer to global warming or other environmental threats, but let us start taking the small steps needed to deal with these problems. One of the first steps should be reviewing and upgrading the conservation programs we already have in place.

A second reality we in Congress need to deal with is that the United States set a record for energy consumption last year after 14 years of roughly stagnant demand. Not only did total consumption set a new record in 1988, but the energy efficiency of the economy as a whole declined last year for the first time since 1973. For the first time, the Nation began to backslide on the tremendous gains in efficiency we made since the first Arab oil embargo—gains that have made a major contribution to reducing demand for energy and driving prices down.

This increase in consumption has implications for our economy as well as our environment. Imports of energy have been increasing at the same time that our balance of trade has worsened. If our economy becomes less energy efficient, our manufactured products will become less competitive in the world market, thereby making the trade deficit worse.

The Department of Energy's State and local assistance programs make a positive contribution to the schools, hospitals, low-income households, businesses, and farms that use their services. These programs can also make a positive contribution to our environment and our economy. However, to make the biggest possible contribution, these programs should be brought up to date. That is the purpose of this legislation, and I urge its swift passage.

THE SENSELESS MURDER OF FRANCISCO MENDES FILHO

HON. DAVID R. OBEY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, today a number of my colleagues and I introduced a concurrent resolution regarding the murder in Brazil of Francisco Mendes Filho, an Amazonia labor leader who worked diligently and unselfishly to save one of the world's greatest resources, the Amazon Rain Forest.

I am heartened by the response of the U.S. Congress as well as by the American people regarding the tragic murder of a man who struggled during his lifetime to advocate and organize workers practicing rubber tapping, an occupation which allows for sustainable economic growth using the great resources of the Amazon without exploitation. Under his leadership, rubber tappers in the western Amazon were successfully organized to work against the shortsighted bulldozing of the rain forest for cattle-raising operations.

On Wednesday, January 25, environmental and human rights leaders paid tribute to Chico's memory with a memorial service at St. Peters Catholic Church and on the Capitol steps. I regret that illness kept me from participating, however, I was pleased to hear that a good number of leaders from both the House and the Senate were able to take part in this timely and important tribute.

My heart goes out to the family and friends of Chico Mendes. Without a doubt, the world will miss this farsighted individual and will be watching and supporting those in Brazil who will ensure that Chico Mendes' work will be carried on, and that his killers will be brought to justice.

I urge my friends and colleagues to join us in cosponsoring this concurrent resolution.

TRIBUTE TO CARL R. HARTMANN

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, it is with admiration and respect that I rise today to pay tribute to Carl R. Hartmann, a lifelong resident of Wallington, NJ. Carl has held a special place in both his county and his community in his service as Bergen County clerk since 1973, and as Wallington Borough clerk since 1972.

Active in many areas of public service, Carl is a U.S. Army veteran, a member of the New Jersey National Guard, and the past commander of VFW Pavlick-Koster Post 2640.

Carl's activism on behalf of others and his sense of commitment to his borough, and to Bergen County, are qualities that we have all come to admire and respect. I, therefore, take pride in recognizing the many accomplishments of this fine friend and public servant. Carl has served as a member of Wallington's Fire Department, the Wallington Emergency Squad, and is presently a member of the Exempt Firemen's Association. He has involved himself with all aspects of community life by also serving on the Wallington Borough Council, the Wallington Recreation Commission, and as the former president of the Wallington Planning Board. Currently, Carl is president of the John F. Kennedy Memorial Library.

The responsibility and concern Carl has for others is a continuation of his father's own years of public service as a councilman in Wallington for 15 years. The tradition of serving has been passed on through the generations, as is evident in Carl's sons, Robert and Mark, and his daughter, Dorothy. His children are as active and involved in their community as their father and grandfather were, and just as dedicated and giving.

Carl Hartmann is indeed a man who deserves our respect and appreciation. It is with great honor and pleasure that I am able to pay tribute to him as he leaves his post as Bergen County clerk. I wish him continued health and happiness in the many more productive years to come, and am proud to call him my friend.

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week, on January 22, we marked the 71st anniversary of Ukrainian Independence Day. On January 22, 1918, after the Bolsheviks took power in Russia, the Ukrainian Central Council issued the Fourth Universal, proclaiming Ukraine's independence from Russia by saying, "People of Ukraine: by your own power, your will and your word, a free Ukrainian republic now exists in your land."

Exactly 1 year later, the Ukrainian Parliament passed the Act of Union which incorporated all Ukrainian land—the Western Ukrainian National Republic and the Ukrainian National Republic—into one nation.

Tragically, however, the Ukrainian National Republic fell to the Communists in the early 1920's after 3 long years of military struggle, and was divided between the Soviets in the East and the Poles in the West.

During this period of independence, the Ukrainian people were able to live under freedoms completely unknown to them before or since that time. The Third Universal of the Ukrainian National Republic, issued in November 1917, proclaimed the same freedoms for Ukrainian citizens that we find in our own bill of rights. During this time, Ukrainian citizens were able to enjoy the freedoms of speech, press, religion, assembly, and others.

Despite the Soviet domination of the Ukrainian people since the early 1920's, however, the spirit of freedom and democracy lives on in the hearts of the Ukrainian people. On behalf of the Ukrainian community of Greater Cleveland and Ohio, I want to send a message of hope and courage to those living in Ukraine today. I also want to call upon my colleagues in the United States Congress to help protect the human rights of these brave people.

A TRIBUTE TO CHICO MENDES

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Francisco "Chico" Mendes Filho, who recognized the significance of our planet's threatened rainforests and worked to preserve them. On December 22, 1988, Chico Mendes was murdered by those who have chosen to ignore the importance of global ecology in order to pursue profit.

Two-thirds of the world's living species inhabit tropical rainforests, yet an average 74,000 acres of these lands are destroyed every day. Brazilian scientists report that 20 million acres of virgin rainforests are burned each year in the Amazon Basin. These fires have produced huge quantities of carbon dioxide polluting the Earth's atmosphere and eliminating much of the plant life that normally consumes the heat-trapping greenhouse gas.

Chico Mendes worked to organize "extractive reserves" where rubber trappers like himself could continue to harvest the rubber without destroying the resources of these areas. His method was to make a series of incisions at the base of rubber trees allowing the sap to leak out without cuting the trees down. This method protected the fragile jungle soils and the plant and animal life that depend on the livelihood of the rainforest.

Chico Mendes was an extraordinary man who fought for a cause in his forest that affected us all. Man did not create the web of life, but is a strand in the web. Each strand affects the whole web. Chico Mendes, in his work to ensure the preservation of rainforests strengthened the web of life. His movement lives on with new strength and relevance as we continue the work of Chico Mendes to protect our planet.

TRIBUTE TO GEORGE CASE

HON. FRANK PALLONE, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, notice was made recently of the death in his hometown of Trenton, NJ, of George Case, a major league baseball player of uncommon ability. Shirley Povich, who for so many years covered the Washington Senators as a sports writer before his long tenure as sports editor of the Post, recalled for all of us in Thursday's editions the excitement and base stealing skill which George Case brought to the game of baseball. For those who remember George Case's brilliant feats on the diamond, herewith is Mr. Povich's column:

A CASE OF SPEED AND BASEBALL SMARTS

(By Shirley Povich)

It was a skimpy obituary they gave George Case the other day when he died at the age of 73 in his hometown of Trenton, N.J. The treatment was too short and too innocent of his place in baseball as the fastest man in spikes, unpardonably lacking a sense of the game's history. It was, sadly, a brushoff.

George Case, for nine years the pride of the Washington Senators, deserved better. If he wasn't in the super-great class of Lou Gehrig or Jimmy Foxx or Ted Williams, George Case was nevertheless a name, a famous one in baseball. He was the unchallenged speedster of his time, reigning as the No. 1 concern of American League catchers and pitchers, too, when he was on base. For five straight seasons (1939-43) he led the league in base stealing.

On base, George Case was the focus of every fan in the ballpark. Would he or wouldn't he? He created excitement simply by taking his lead off the bag. And when he went it was in his own style, not the arm-flailing and scrambling fashion of most other base stealers. Case ran with a trackman's gliding whoosh. And as an outfielder he was known to outrun a fly ball.

The supposedly unassailable American League record of 61 steals by Ben Chapman was matched by Case in 1943. In a 1946 match race with Gil Coan, the rookie hailed as the fastest man ever in a Washington uniform, Case, then with Cleveland, was clocked for the 100 yards in 10 flat, in full uniform and baseball spikes on grass. Compare it with Jesse Owens' world record of 9.4 for the distance in track suit and on a running track.

Case evoked testimonials with regularity. From Hap Hardell, Georgetown University track coach: "Put him in the starting blocks and running shoes, and you've got an Olympic gold medalist." White Sox manager Jimmy Dykes: "He's the most dangerous one-run man in the league. I tell my pitchers, first thing, keep Case off base." Cleveland Manager Lou Boudreau expressed his gladness when Case was traded to his team in 1946: "I won't have to worry any more about that pest."

Clyde Milan, the Senators coach and the man who broke Ty Cobb's season-high base stealing record and was thus an authority on speed, said in 1938: "I've seen 'em all, Cobb, Eddie Collins, Burt Shotton, Max Carey, Maurice Archdeacon and Evar Swanson and George would leave 'em in the ruck."

Case was picked up "for a few hundred dollars" by Joe Cambria in 1936 when he was playing semipro ball around Trenton. Previously Case had walked into the Philadelphia Athletics' tryout camp but was quickly dismissed by Connie Mack. Trouble was, young Case told Mack he was a pitcher. Nothing about being an outfielder he was to become.

The Senators got their first good look at him in 1937 when, after completing a series with Philadelphia, they moved down to Trenton for an exhibition game. That excursion gave cause for a smart-aleck Washington baseball writer, whose name is modestly withheld, to write, "Washington crossed the Delaware today and got clobbered, 12-5 by their Trenton farmhands," Case got three hits. The Senators also learned that in that minor league, Case had beaten out 25 of the 27 bunts he laid down.

Once, on a promise the story would not be told until after his retirement, Case said, "Stealing against the Red Sox and Tigers was the easiest. Jimmie Foxx and Rudy York, their first basemen, didn't bother much on the pickoff throws from the pitcher. They just took lazy half swipes at me and then threw the ball back. I could take longer leads."

He would not have gotten a big jump on the old Senators right-hander Alvin Crowder, who once explained why he rarely threw to first. "I don't have to bother about that. The runners know who I am and that I've got a good move," Crowder said. "I look over there and cock my head the same way every time, holding the ball against my chest. Then if I see the base runner there's no need to throw. But if I look over there and I don't see him he's too far off the bag and he belongs to me."

In 1943 with two games left and both men tied at 56, who would win the base stealing title? Case or Wally Moses of the White Sox? No problem. Case stole five bases in the next 18 innings. George was capable of things like that. He gave to the game an excitement that was within only a few to give. He made a place for himself among the most shining traditions of baseball. And this week, George Case evokes another thought: Thanks for the memories.

In the AL, he was a threat to beat out any ground ball he hit. His respectable .286 careet batting average was beefed up by his leg hits, and he still holds the AL record for hitting into only five double plays in a season in which a player has been in 150 games or more. His speed panicked more infielders, provoking more infield errors, than did any other man.

Like every other base stealer, Case admitted he stole more on pitchers than on catchers, but he also confessed, "I'm licked when that pitcher takes the ball to his chest and just holds it there, just staring at you. You're tense out there on your toes, and this drains you and kills your speed. Not all pitchers know that, though."

PILOT PROGRAM FOR VETERANS

HON. TOM LEWIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this week I reintroduced legislation to establish a pilot program under which the Department of Veterans' Affairs will contract with public and private health facilities to provide care for veterans. This pilot program, to be conducted initially in 10 counties throughout south Florida, will determine whether this type of arrangement can be used nationwide.

In my home State of Florida, 15,000 veterans move in each year from other parts of the country. Forty-one percent of these veterans are over the age of 65. However, despite these numbers, Florida has only three VA hospitals. In Palm Beach County, where a fourth hospital to serve over 160,000 veterans is scheduled for completion in 1992, veterans must make a round trip of nearly 200 miles to the nearest VA facility in Miami. This same situation exists in many rural areas of the United States.

My legislation gives immediate relief to veterans by providing them with accessible health care until a local VA facility is available. This bill will also establish whether private contracts can serve various parts of the country, without the expense of building a major health facility.

We must not foreget the sacrifices our veterans have made for our country. Enactment of this legislation will ensure that the special health care needs of our veterans are not ignored.

REQUIRE RECONFIRMATION OF FEDERAL JUDGES

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a proposed amendment to the Constitution requiring that Federal judges be reconfirmed by the U.S. Senate every 10 years.

Presently, Mr. Speaker, Federal judges serve life terms once they are appointed. The only constitutional mechanism for removal of these judges is impeachment. As we all know, impeachment is a long and arduous process. Historically it has been exercised on only 10 occasions, resulting in actual removal from office of only five judges.

In the absence of any other effective formal procedure for removal, Federal judges have been elevated to a stature unprecedented and unequaled by any other Federal official. Consequently, and to the citizenry's misfortune, there is no procedure for the removal of a judge who may be dysfunctional, dishonest or in any other way unfit to fulfill his or her constitutional responsibilities.

According to article III of the Constitution, supreme and lower court judges are appointed to office for a term of good behavior. I certainly recognize and compliment the wisdom of the framers of the Constitution who, by separating judical officials from the political process, preserved and defined the principle of separate, but equal, branches of government.

However, I continue to believe that this separation has resulted not in a more effective judicial system, but rather in a greater disparity between the various branches of government. The life tenure of these judges has them less, not more, accountable for their actions and decisions.

Moreover, the increasing use by these judges of their judicial power as a means of effecting social policy is troubling. Our judicial system was established to interpret the law, not to formulate national policy. However, within the past fifteen years, many of our Federal judges have taken to backdoor legislating on such controversial issues as school prayer and busing, and abortion. In my own State of Texas such backdoor legislating has occurred on such issues as prison overcrowding and the provision of educational services to illegal aliens. The perpetrator of overreaching judicial bounds has been Federal Judge William Wayne Justice.

I sincerely believe that neither this legislative body nor the American citizenry can stand by and watch this transgression of constitutional authority. National policy decisions should not be promulgated by our courts, but rather should be duly deliberated and decided by the people's elected representatives in Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I urge expeditious consideration of this legislation so that our Nation can once again be assured of three separate, but equal, branches of government.

A TRIBUTE TO AUDRAIN WEATHERL

HON. VIC FAZIO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding individual, Audrain Weatherl, who retired on December 31, 1988, after 40 years of active work in tunneling and the Laborer's International Union. He distinguished himself in his craft, the most dangerous in construction, in his service to his union and in his many public contributions such as his work with the Cal-OSHA Program.

Aud Weatherl was born in Detroit, the son of an auto worker. He graduated valedictorian of his class in 1942 and joined the Laborer's International Union of North America and remained a member while joining other mining unions. He also married his high school sweetheart that year and they later had two children, Daniel and Priscilla.

In 1947, at the age of 24, Aud was hired on in the mines at Rock Springs, WY and began his long career working underground. Mining jobs in copper and coal took him all over the west and taught him the art of tunneling. He had tunneling jobs throughout the USA and the world, from Colorado, Arizona, Peru, Australia, Wyoming to California. Wherever, he went Aud joined the union—United Mine Workers, Mine, Mill and Smelter Laborers—taking an active part.

In 1960, Aud became a business agent for Laborers Local 185 in Sacramento, CA to represent the "tunnel stiffs." And in 1966, the international union selected him as the international representative, representing tunnel workers everywhere. during this period, Aud became a nationally recognized authority on the worker and safety aspects of tunneling. He testified before congressional committees on tunnel safety. He also testified before and worked with the California State Legislature and administration to help improve what he considers to be the best occupational health and safety program for workers throughout the country.

In 1984, the International Laborers appointed Aud to be the assistant regional manager for the four-State—California, Arizona, Nevada and Hawaii—sector where he served until his retirement last month. In addition, he remained president of his home local union, 185, for 15 years and continued to work on the Cal-OSHA advisory committee.

To tunnel stiffs throughout the world, Aud Weatherl was known as "Mr. Underground Union." He was the one tunnel workers called whenever they had a problem. Aud has spent his life working in tunnels and helping to improve the health and safety programs of his fellow tunnel stiffs. He has a right to be proud of his association with and support work for the tunnel and mines unions and occupational healh and safety units under the Cal-OSHA program.

Mr. Speaker, Aud's friends and colleagues do not really believe he will completely retire from his work, I am sure Aud's family and friends agree that he exemplifies the spirit of a true laborer, and as Shakespeare said:

I am a true Laborer, I earn that I eat, get that I wear, owe no man hate, envy no man's happiness, glad of other men's good.

A BILL MAKING A TECHNICAL CORRECTION IN THE EDUCATION AND TRAINING FOR A COMPETITIVE AMERICA ACT OF 1988

HON. E. THOMAS COLEMAN

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a bill which makes a correction in the Education and Training for a Competitive American Act of 1988. Identical legislation was passed by the House during the final weeks of the 100th Congress but was not considered by the Senate. This bill has bipartisan support on the Education and Labor Committee. I particularly appreciate the cooperation of Chairman HAWKINS and Mr. WILLIAMS, chairman of the Postsecondary Subcommittee, in getting an early resolution of this unfinished legislative business of the last Congress.

This bill corrects a technical error made in writing the conference report on the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988. In the report, the Access Demonstration Programs were inadvertenly authorized for only 1 year, fiscal year 1988, rather than for the 4-year period of authorization, beginning in fiscal year 1989 and ending in fiscal year 1992, which was agreed to by both House and Senate conferees.

This bill makes a simply, purely technical change, correcting the drafting error and providing for the full, 4 years of authorization for the Access Demonstration Program which was originally intended.

Access is a vitally needed program which is designed to expand the college, vocational, and career opportunities of rural high school students attending schools in agricultural communities which are encountering fundamental economic and social changes.

Access, now a pilot project in northwestern Missouri, provides in-school support services for counselors, teachers, and school administrators, targeting those rural schools with the greatest need, particularly those serving low-income, disadvantaged students. Access has been successful in involving parents, business and community leaders, and the resources of the state universities in providing counseling and educational programs for rural high school students.

NATIONAL OSTEOPOROSIS PREVENTION WEEK

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce, on behalf of myself and of my colleagues, legislation to designate the week of May 14 through 20, 1989 as "National Osteoporosis Prevention Week."

Since 1985, "National Osteoporosis Prevention Week" has been signed into law by the President. Led by the National Osteoporosis Foundation, groups around the country have worked during this week to inform the public about the risks of Osteoporosis, and the need to prevent the development of this painful disease. Last year, over 50 national organizations in the fields of health, education, youth, women, and aging and numerous Federal agencies joined in support of this important week. Through their coordinated efforts, the message about osteoporosis reached 50 million poeple during Prevention Week. This year over 80 public and private organizations have joined in the effort to mobilize information to all ages about what can be done to prevent the development of this disease and how we can protect ourselves once it has developed.

Known as the silent disorder, osteoporosis is characterized by a thinning of the bones, a condition that affects 25 million Americans and causes 1.3 million fractures a year. Because it is now believed that osteoporosis is as much a product of ones lifestyle as it is a genetic predisposition, "National Osteoporosis Prevention Week" focuses attention on all stages of ones life.

For example, childhood and young adulthood are critical times in building maximum bone mass which decreases the later effects of bone loss. Thus, a diet rich in calcium and stressing weight bearing exercise are essential during this period. During middle age, regular exercise and restrictions on smoking and alcohol can keep bones strong. Menopause is a crucial time for women since the onset of osteoporosis is generally after menopause. In fact, according to some estimates, postmenopausal women can lose as much as 38 milligrams of calcium a day resulting in approximately a 1-percent overall calcium loss each year. One-third to one-half of all postmenopausal women will develop some degree of osteoporosis.

For the over-75 population, 50 percent will have some degree of bone loss. Thus, in the later years, fall proofing ones environment is of prime importance by decreasing the risk of fractures through falls. Fractures, paraticularly hip fractures, not only lead to increased mortality, but also cause an increased incidence of institutionalization and/or increased dependence on others in the community. By 2050, with the aging of the population, the number of hip fractures is expected to double or even triple. The cost of these hip fractures in 1988 exceeded $10 billion in health care costs and lost wages. In the future, these costs are expected to increase even higher.

Thus, the message of Prevention Week is to provide the information each of us needs at each stage of our lives to make informed decisions about how to keep our bones healthy.

Only a few short years ago, osteoporosis was a word that was hardly known to the general public. It is my hope that osteoporosis again will be lost to our vocabularies because it will become a disease of our past, not of our future. In keeping with that hope, I want to salute the efforts of those organizations that have worked with the National Osteoporosis Foundation on behalf of National Osteoporosis Prevention Week.

HEALTH INSURANCE COSTS OF SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of myself and 39 cosponsors, I am today reintroducing legislation to provide a 100-percent tax deduction for the health insurance costs of the self-employed. This bill is identical to the bill I introduced in the last Congress, H.R. 3065, which had nearly 100 cosponsors.

The bill amends the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to allow self-employed individuals, primarily the sole proprietors and partners in many of the Nation's small unincorporated businesses, to deduct the full cost of health insurance for themselves and their families.

This legislation will rectify a fundamental inequity in the Tax Code which serves to discourage self-employed business owners from offering health benefits to their employees. All employers are entitled to deduct as a business expense the cost of providing health insurance coverage to their employees. The owner of an incorporated business may also deduct the full cost of his or her own health insurance. In the case of an unincorporated business owner, however, his health insurance costs were fully taxable under the law as it existed prior to enactment of the 1986 tax bill.

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 addressed the unequal treatment between self-employed individuals and owners of corporations by allowing the self-employed to deduct 25 percent of the costs of health insurance for themselves and their families, provided they offer comparable health benefits to their employees. While this is a step in the right direction, it does not go far enough. Moreover, it is temporary; the 25-percent deduction will expire at the end of this tax year.

Mr. Speaker, there is no justification for continuing this unequal treatment of health insurance costs based on the legal form of a business. The lack of a full business deduction for the health insurance costs of the self-employed is a major disincentive for those business owners to provide health benefits for themselves and their employees.

We are all familiar with the alarming health insurance gap in this country. It is estimated that almost 37 million Americans have no health insurance of any kind, public or private. Nearly half of the uninsured population, more than 18 million people, are workers. The vast majority of these uninsured workers are employed by small businesses. In fact, recent studies show that nearly half of all uninsured workers are employed in firms with less than 25 employees.

It is imperative that we provide all of the voluntary incentives we can to encourage employers, especially small business owners, to provide health insurance benefits. This bill will provide a significant tax incentive for the self-employed to provide health benefits for themselves, their families, and their employees, and represents an important first step toward our goal of expanding health insurance coverage among the working uninsured.

AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY-BASED PLASTICS DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1989

HON. RICHARD J. DURBIN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which addresses an important environmental problem while encouraging the development of alternative uses of our Nation's agricultural products.

The Agricultural Commodity-Based Plastics Development Act of 1989 will promote the development of degradable plastics by increasing Federal Government purchases of degradable plastics products, especially agriculture-based products.

Mr. Speaker, throughout the world, there is a growing awareness of the need for degradable plastics. Every product we use today that is made of conventional plastics will still be with our descendants hundreds of years from now, because conventional plastics take centuries to degrade. One of our most enduring legacies for our posterity is our plastic waste.

And while it survives, plastic waste is not benign. A recent study of the Atlantic Ocean off the Northeast coast found that, on each square mile of ocean, more than 40,000 pieces of plastic are floating on the surface. This plastic waste is a hazard to fish and other aquatic wildlife, which ingest or become entangled in plastic products and die.

At the same time, plastic waste is taking up a growing share of the diminishing space in our Nation's landfills. In 15 years, plastic waste as a percentage of the volume of all municipal waste more than doubled, from 15 percent in 1970, to 31 percent in 1985. I have been told that the cost of purchasing and preparing one new acre of landfill is $500,000. So as we fill up our landfills with cheap plastics, we make inevitable the purchase of new landfills at extraodinarily high costs.

Degradable plastic products can reduce these waste problems, because degradable plastics can degrade in as little as 6 months to 2 years.

The most promising degradation technology relies on the use of corn starch, which breaks down under the right environmental conditions and hastens the degradation of the plastic in which it is embedded. Because degradable plastic products are agriculture-based, they can also provide an important new market for our Nation's farmers. This technology has the potential to utilize hundreds of millions of bushels of corn each year, which will boost our rural economy and help to restore American agriculture's prosperity.

The legislation I am introducing, which has also been introduced in the Senate by Senator GLENN of Ohio, creates incentives for the development of degradable plastics technology by providing preferential procurement by the General Services Administration of degradable plastics products, with special emphasis on degradable plastics made from agricultural products. The bill provides $20 million in each of the next 3 years, to pay for the small differential between the cost of degradable plastics and conventional plastics.

Mr. Speaker, this measure will benefit the American farmer, improve our environment, and reduce our solid waste problem. It will help show that degradable plastic is a practical technology, which should lead to much wider use of degradable plastic products. I urge my colleagues to join me as cosponsors of this legislation, and I look forward to working with them to address these important national issues.

SAM AND ERNESTINE SPRIGG'S 50TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

HON. ROBERT E. WISE, JR.

OF WEST VIRGINIA

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, today marks a very special day for two of my constituents, Sam and Ernestine Sprigg of Crawford, WV. In today's world it is indeed an occasion to celebrate a 50th wedding anniversary. Mr. and Mrs. Sprigg represent the fabric of our society in their commitment to each other. Mr. and Mrs. Sprigg have shown the same commitment to the community as they have shown to their family. Sam Sprigg is retired from the West Virginia Department of Transportation and Ernestine Sprigg served as postmaster of the Crawford post office for a number of years before retirement. These people have served their community and the fine State of West Virginia not only in their working lives but in their community involvement. Sam Sprigg is well known in Lewis County for his hospitality and Ernestine Sprigg is a constant presence in her church work and the Crawford Extension Club.

It is my pleasure to ask my colleagues to join me in offering my congratulations and warmest best wishes to Mr. and Mrs. Sprigg.

WHY PLANT TREES

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, last November 12, I joined a number of my constituents in Bucks County, PA, who are members of the Bucks Alliance for Nuclear Disarmament [BAND] in a tree planting ceremony to protest the enormous discrepancy between our Nation's defense and environmental protection budgets.

By planting seedlings that morning, we tried to show in a modest way that our continued survival on this planet depends as much on finding a solution to problems such as global warming, acid rain, and ozone depletion as it does on continuing to build up our nuclear arsenal.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the members of the alliance for their dedication to peace. They deserve our thanks for focusing attention on the fact that our choice to increase defense spending at the expense of other important programs carries with it a high cost to the health and well-being of our Nation's citizens.

I hope my colleagues will take time to read the following remarks by Mr. Paul Zimmerman, organizer of the tree planting and an article entitled "Why Plant Trees" compiled from the 1988 World Watch Report.

STATEMENT BY PAUL D. ZIMMERMAN, ORGANIZER, NATURAL SECURITY DAY

Welcome to Natural Security Day. It's thrilling to see so many of us here on this glorious morning. Our presence is our statement. Today, we are speaking with our hands and backs and shovels and shoes.

Grandmothers and grandchildren, nurses and teachers, students, taxpayers, Bucks County citizens, we are expressing our love for our planet, our connection to our land, and our dedication to our community.

And we are calling for new priorities for our Nation.

We are demanding that funds now spent preparing for nuclear war be shifted to combat a greater and more immediate threat to our security—the crisis of our environment.

This past summer, we suffered the greatest ozone pollution in the history of the Delaware Valley. That means our kids, our parents, our loved ones smoked the equivalent of two packs of cigarettes a day—we also suffered the first awful impact of the greenhouse effect in drought and heat. Foreign submarines did not invade our shores—but noxious garbage, dumped among our undersea life, shut those shores down.

The response of our Federal Government to this clear and present danger? To cut enviromental funding this coming year by 10 percent.

We're told that money is tight. But, in 1989, the Pentagon budget will rise by 4 percent, even though we are already spending at the same wartime level, in constant dollars. As we did during the Vietnam and Korean conflicts.

There are those who will argue that a wartime economy is necessary for our survival.

We say:

We cannot survive spending 52 cents of every Federal dollar on the Pentagon and less than 2 cents on our environment.

We cannot survive spending less than a penny of each tax dollar protecting our air, our land, and our water.

We cannot survive spending less in a full year combatting acid rain than we spend in one minute blowing up a nuclear device under the Nevada Desert.

But, thank God, in a democracy, we have choices.

For 121 million dollars, we can chose to plant one MX missile in the gound or plant 611 millon two-year seedlings.

We can choose to start paying more to our Federal parks system, to our U.S. Wildlife Service and our Nation's Forest Service than we spend researching space weaponry.

What we need now is a national tree-planting initiative, an ozone defense force, an acid rain treaty.

We dedicate the forest that we're about to plant to a saner, healthier future. By the spring, these beautiful trees will start replenishing the air we breathe. They will start refurbishing our ozone shield. They will one day provide a safet habitat for our birds and beasts. And they will enhance the beauty of our world.

They will also bear witness, into the next century, of our call for a new enlightened vision of national security. For that, we thank you, pines and locusts, rain trees and sweetgums lindens and dogwoods, and tulip populars. We're all in it together.

WHY PLANT TREES?

No change in the biosphere is more dramatic than the degree to which human activities have reduced forested ecosystems to remnants. The worldwide warming that threatens to raise the Earth's average temperature by 1.5-4.5 degrees celsius (2.7-8.1f) by 2050 is generating some of the most difficult questions political leaders have faced. If projected warming is to be minimized, the build up of carbon dioxide and trace gases that contribute to the greenhouse effect must be slowed, and quickly. In 1987 fossil fuel combustion emitted some 4.5 billion tons of carbon into the atmosphere while deforestation released on the order of 1 billion to 2.6 billion tons.

If remaining forest are better managed and new plantings begin to meet a substantial share of human needs, stabilizing the earth's forested areas could reduce global carbon emissions by some 1.5 billion tons, more than a fifth of 1986 emissions.

Two barriers stand in the way of ensuring that this happens. One is the gross misallocation of capital implicit in military expenditures of $900 billion annually worldwide. The other is the unmanageable "third world" debt that burdens the world economy. These obstacles must be overcome to free up the funds on the scale needed to ensure stabilization of the biosphere.

Since 11 million hectors of land (an area the size of Austria) are being cleared each year, we must make this issue a national priority, then an international one. The U.S. needs to adopt an international code of conduct similar to that of Great Britian in order to stop the rape-and-run policy that is encouraged by present World Bank and Inter-American Development Fund programs. We should also encourage a trade policy that bans the importation of any wood taken from unsustainable forests that are clear-cut, not reforested, without effective erosion programs, or are taken from areas too large to be properly managed.

The U.S. Congress is on the verge of passing a model bill on tropical forest management and is recognizing the need to preserve the plants, animals, insects, and other flora and fauna contained in forest ecosystems. Sen. Roth of Delaware and Congressman Gus Yatran of Pennsylvania are sheparding this bill through Congress and need to be supported in their efforts. The bill would require that any U.S. assistance would not finance penetration roads, large scale dams, and colonization schemes.

Global warming and the greenhouse effect may seem to present insurmountable problems. However, every tree planted, every legislative action enforced, every hand extended across political boundaries to remedy this impending catastrophe, turns the problem into an opportunity for world peace and a clean, healthy environment.

TRIBUTE TO FORTY-NINERS

HON. NORMAN Y. MINETA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, it is with great honor and pride that I take this opportunity to salute a truly great sports organization, the San Francisco Forty-Niners. On Sunday, January 22, 1989, the Forty-Niners and Cincinnati Bengals treated football fans across the Nation and around the world to a spectacular Super Bowl in Miami, FL. The Forty-Niners won the contest in dramatic fashion in the final minute of play by besting the Bengals on a Joe Montana touchdown pass to John Taylor with just 34 seconds remaining on the clock.

To say that the Forty-Niners are a great team would not suffice somehow. Throughout the rugged National Football League season, they were tested week after week, and only the hardiest of fans would have given the team much chance of achieving its third Super Bowl title in this decade. But Montana, Jerry Rice, and Roger Craig led the charge through the playoffs and to a thrilling, come-from-behind victory in football's biggest game. They exemplified the sportsmanship and courage of which all great teams are distinguished.

It is a great pleasure and source of pride for the people of my district to play host to the Forty-Niners training camp and administrative office in Santa Clara. I ask my colleagues in the House to join me in saluting owner Edward DeBartolo, Jr., coach Bill Walsh, and the entire San Fancisco Forty-Niners organization for its outstanding championship play this year and throughout the decade. They are truly the "Team of the Eighties."

EPA GRANTED PERMIT TO CONTRACTING FIRM WITH VIOLATIONS STILL PENDING FOR HAZARDOUS WASTE INCINERATOR TO BE BUILT IN VERNON, CA

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the following procedures, or lack thereof, which took place regarding the installation of a hazardous waste incinerator in a neighboring district to my own 25th District located in Los Angeles. On September, 15, 1988, nine of my California colleagues and myself wrote a letter to Mr. Daniel W. McGovern, Administrator, Region IX, of the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA], asking them to deny the California Department of Health Services' [CDHS] decision made in July 1988, granting California Thermal Treatment Service [CTTS] a permit to operate this incinerator until conducting an environmental impact review [EIR].

The South Coast Air Quality Management Distrtict [SCAQMD] concluded that initial favorable reuslts from a risk assessment and performance evaluation precluded the need for an EIR. Also, CDHS claimed that the CTTS will destroy 99.99 percent of the hazardous materials to be burned. Our concern, among others—is what happens to the remaining 0.01 percent of the hazardous materials to be burned, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week? After the calculation is tallied, this leakage will result in the contamination of the air in the San Gabriel Valley, and in residents of Vernon and adjacent communities being exposed to 2.24 tons of unincinerated hazardous waste per year.

After another permit was issued by the EPA in November 1988, Congressman MARTINEZ, Congressman HAWKINS, and myself wrote to Mr. Lee Thomas, Office of the Administrator, of the EPA to express our concerns, joining the city of Los Angeles, Mothers of East L.A., Concerned Citizens of South Central, Assemblywoman Lucille Roybal-Allard, State senator, Art Torres, and Margarito Guiterrez over the issuance of the Resources Conservation and Recovery Act [RCRA] permit. This letter of December 15, 1988, prompted the following response: EPA would "place our letter in support of those petitions in the administrative record for appropriate consideration by the Administrator."

Unfortunately, that letter was considered to be of no avail to the representatives, nor to the well-being of our citizens. We remain concerned. Why can't there be a full-fledged EIR? Yes, it is one more study—an extensive study which should not be slighted. At a time when the world is recognizing the environmental consequences of our modern technological inventions, our local, State, and Federal regulatory agencies must use the proven methods or reports available to determine exactly what amount, this 0.01 percent, damage will do to an already fragile air quality. We, in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, currently face the most severe air pollution conditions and believe that we cannot afford even a 0.01-percent air contamination.

Recently we learned from the Los Angeles Times, that the parent company which received the permits for Vernon Incinerator has been cited dozens of times for health and safety violations at infectious waste incinerators in Garden Grove and Long Beach. The article went on to state.

Twin medical waste incinerators operated by Security Environmental Systems, Inc., in Garden Grove were shut down in 1986 under pressure from the SCAQMD (the same agency which gave them a favorable performance evaluation for the Vernon Incinerator), has racked up 20 violation notices in the last 6 years, according to air district files.

Many other incidents which cause the citizens of Los Angeles grave concern are cited in the same articles. The company officials have often denied access to inspectors, and the inspectors have had to dodge outbursts and threatening behavior from the company officers. Overall the firm has received 49 violations from 1978 to 1987 involving the Garden Grove and Long Beach waste burners—some of which are still pending.

Further, I am shocked at the officials' responses. One EPA official stated, "We didn't look into it in great detail." Another State Department of Health Services official said, "I personally did not delve much into it." Other statements called the charges of violations "irrelevant." My dear colleagues, I don't think that "irrelevant" should ever be used in the same text discussing a company's authorization to operate a hazardous waste incinerator.

Before a hazardous toxic waste incinerator is installed, our citizens deserve every available safety review and precaution offered by the agency, specifically the one agency created to protect us. The construction of this incinerator will be harmful to the local residents and many of them are children who will have to breathe and be exposed to this toxic environment on a daily basis. The builder of this incinerator, who has been guilty of other violations and still possess control, insist a full EIR should not be completed. This hazardous waste incinerator should not be built.

MEDICARE INPATIENT HOSPITAL CAPITAL EXPENDITURE AMENDMENTS OF 1989

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 27, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I am today reintroducing the medicare inpatient hospital capital expenditure amendments. The bill is designed to limit Medicare's reimnbursement of hospital capital-related expenses to support of only those institutions and services which are truly needed.

Given the Reagan administration's fiscal year 1990 budget, I believe that this proposal is particularly timely. The Reagan administration had proposed to pay hospital capital costs under Medicare at cost minus 25 percent.

I wish to make clear that, absent any other alternative, I will support the 25-percent reduction. The capital cost explosion in Medicare demands a strong response. However, I am concerned that the Reagan administration approach may not be the best alternative we can devise.

I believe there is a better way and that is to establish a system whereby each State makes deliberate, considered decisions about the levels of capital expenditures each hospital should incur. A limit would be established so that the States' decisions would not result in capital expenditures higher than the budgeted level.

Such a system would assure that needed hospitals would receive a level of capital reimbursement necessary for renovation or expansion.

Capital expenditures by hospitals appear to be out of control. Over the last 5 years, with an increase in inflation of 17 percent as measured by the GNP deflator, expenditures by Medicare to reimburse hospitals for their capital expenditures rose 76 percent during the same period. Looking at it another way fixed assets per hospital bed—often referred to as bricks and mortar—rose about 12 percent per year while total assets—including moveable equipment—rose about 14 percent annually.

Moreover, if no action is taken, Medicare's aggregate payments to hospitals are estimated to rise at an average rate of 11 percent per year between 1989 and 1993. This will rise Medicare capital payments per case from $482 to $661, an increase of 37 percent.

These increases will occur while use of hospital facilities reaches ever higher levels of inefficiency. Average occupancy for hospitals is now just over 64 percent for staffed beds, having dropped from a level of about 75 percent over the last decade. In other words over one-third of the hospital beds in the Nation which are staffed are standing idle every single day.

What is perhaps most disturbing is that 54 percent of all hospitals have an occupancy rate below 50 percent and only 5 percent of hospitals have an occupancy rate above 80 percent.

The cost of these empty beds is startling. The Reagan administration's private sector initiative known as the Grace Commission estimated that each of these empty staffed beds cost $40,000 per year, a very conservative estimate based upon 1979 costs. Nevertheless, this estimate produces a total of almost $14 billion in wasted resources.

Equipment and services have been proliferating at a very high rate as well. In many cases hospitals have expanded services beyond the capacity which can be sustained, leading to situations in which the volume of service provided is below the level necessary to maintain the competence of the staff.

This is especially true with respect to cardiac care. For example, in Arizona the relaxation of capital expenditure review laws has led to an increase in the number of open heart surgery units from 7 to 17 in just 2 years. During this period charges for open heart surgery increased 50 percent.

Of much greater concern is that an investigation by an Arizona newspaper revealed that death rates for open-heart patients in Phoenix jumped sharply after capital reviews were dropped. The highest mortality rates were found in hospitals which on average did not meet the minimum volume standard of 200 procedures per year generally accepted as the level necessary to maintain competence. These hospitals suffered a mortality rate twice that of the group of hospitals above the minimum volume.

The normal rules of economics do not appear to apply in any meaningful way to hospitals. A good example of this has occurred in Houston, TX which has been suffering through a recession related to the drop in oil prices. Since a capital expenditure review law was relaxed in 1985, nine new hospitals have opened. There is currently $1.5 billion in hospital construction in progress and occupancy rates in Houston have fallen from 75 percent prior to deregulation to below 60 percent today. In Houston hospital expansion is going forward notwithstanding the fact that the community's ability to pay for more and more hospital facilities is severely constrained.

Hospital capital expenditures ignore the normal rules of economics in another important respect as well. More capacity to provide more services does not lower prices as it does in other areas of the economy—it simply raises volume and expenditures. Health economists discovered some time ago a phenomenon called the "Roemer effect"; that is, the more hospital beds and services built, the more hospital beds and services used. Hospital utilization rates are higher when the supply of beds and services is high. Therefore, the high rate of excess capacity in beds and services leads directly to unnecessary admissions and procedures.

Given the high rate of expansion of specialized cardiac units, it is not surprising that a recent article in the Journal of the American Medical Association found that 14 percent of heart bypass surgery was unnecessary and 30 percent was questionable. Bypass operations doubled from 137,000 in 1980 to 284,000 in 1986.

The so-called procompetitive health care strategy employed by the Reagan administration has paid insufficient attention to questions surrounding access to hospital services. Although we have clearly over-invested in the hospital industry as a whole, many hospitals, including public hospitals and those serving the indigent, are undercapitalized. We have failed in our attempts to regionalize expensive tertiary services such as intensive neonatal care and burn units. We have developed adequate trauma networks in only two States, while many which have been developed in other States, including my own State, California, are now falling apart.

Protecting access to health services in the Nation's rural areas demands our special attention. Average occupancy in rural hospitals has dropped from 52 percent in 1983 to below 40 percent in 1988. Occupancy has been decreasing the fastest in the smallest hospitals, rural hospitals with less than 100 beds.

These data suggest that rural patients are voting with their feet and driving the extra miles to obtain care at the nearest regional hospital with its broader range of services. No amount of throwing additional money at these small rural hospitals through increases in the PPS rates will assure their survival in the face of this phenomenon. What is needed is a creative effort in every region of the country to find ways to assure access and to redefine the role small rural hospitals will play in a well-planned, rational system of rural health care.

The question of how to reimburse hospitals for their capital costs and how to restrict unnecessary capital expenditures has occupied a great deal of attention in the Congress over the last few years. The prospective payment system was adopted in 1983 as the method of hospital operaing cost payment. Payment for capital-related expenses was not included in PPS due to uncertainty about the impact of including capital reimbursement in the system. Capital continues to be reimbursed on a retrospective cost basis.

Congress directed the Secretary of Health and Human Services to study and report to the Congress on a proposal to include capital in the prospective payment system. The report was submitted in March 1986, proposing a system for capital costs which would pay hospitals a flat amount per Medicare admission based upon the actual national average capital payment per admission at that point in time. This system was to be implemented October 1, 1986. Given concerns about the impact of this proposal on specific hospitals, Congress first delayed its implementation until October 1, 1987, and then again until October 1, 1991.

During the same period, based upon promises that market competition would slow the medical arms race, the Reagan administration successfully ended Federal support for capital review programs.

This has left us with the worst of both worlds. On the one hand, we have in effect told the States that we no longer care about their efforts to restrain hospital capital expenditures, leaving 14 States to drop their capital review programs, while many others focus on reviews of nursing homes where the States have a much more direct financial interest. On the other hand, we have retained a retrospective cost-based reimbursement system which creates distortions which demand correction.

The retrospective cost-based or cost passthrough system assures that hospital managers will be insensitive to interest rates or to less-expensive alternative methods of financing. Because cost-based reimbursement exceeds actual costs in the first several years after a capital project is put into service, cost-based reimbursement includes strong incentives to begin new projects. This leads hospitals to invest in facilities that are not needed by the population served, thereby creating additional excess capacity. The passthrough also creates strong incentives to substitute capital for labor or other operating costs, particularly as operating cost reimbursement is controlled through prospective payment and capital payments are not.

Medicare's present reimbursement methodology contains another perverse feature, as well. Medicare pays hospitals for capital based on Medicare's proportionate share of inpatient services provided by the hospital. The approach is insensitive to whether or not the hospital is full or half-empty. For example, if a 400-bed hospital has half of its beds filled by Medicare patients and half filled by non-Medicare patients, Medicare will pay for about half of the hospital's capital costs. However, if the same hospital has one quarter of its beds filled with Medicare patients, one quarter with non-Medicare patients, and one half of its beds empty, Medicare will still pay half of the capital costs for its entire plant. In essence, Medicare is subsidizing the hospital for its empty beds.

I have argued in the past that the best way to deal with these sets of problems is to pay hospitals a single rate for both capital and operating costs, based upon average costs per admission, adjusted for case mix, labor costs, and other factors. Unfortunately, this proposal has engendered the violent opposition of the hospital industry and has not been enacted. Wide variation in hospital-specific capital costs has also raised questions about the effect such a proposal may have on access to individual hospitals.

The proposed legislation I am reintroducing today is an effort to provide a comprehensive response to the various issues surrounding the capital expenditure dilemma. It represents an effort to balance the need to provide appropriate incentives within individual hospitals versus the need to guide the entire hospital care delivery system in an efficient manner, taking into account the population's need for services.

My proposal requires each State with an urban hospital occupancy rate below 85 percent and a rural occupancy rate below 75 percent to establish a system to review and approve the capital expenditures of new hospitals which cost more than $1 million or which create new beds or services. If the State did not create such a system, Medicare would not reimburse hospitals in the State for their capital expenditures.

In response to those who would point out that capital expenditure review systems have not been as effective as we had hoped in the past, my bill provides the essential missing ingredient in assuring the success of these programs—an overall limit on capital expenses against which competing proposals can be evaluated.

The bill imposes a limit on the amount of new capital which can be approved annually in a state equal to the amount Medicare would have spent on fixed assets if payments were made on a per admission basis. Reimbursement for the capital expenses of fixed assets would continue on a cost basis for both old and new capital. Reimbursement for moveable equipment would be on an allowance basis with the allowance based upon the average proportion of total cost attributable to capital costs for moveable equipment in fiscal year 1987. The allowance would be phased in over 3 years.

The capital target for fixed assets would be derived from the proportion of total Medicare reimbursement represented by average capital costs in fiscal year 1987. The target would increase each year as Medicare admissions and the hospital update factor increase. The Secretary would be authorized to make exceptions and provide adjustments as needed.

In order to assure that the capital expenditure review process is based upon an explicit assessment of the need for investment in health care in a State, the bill requires each State to develop an inpatient hospital plan. The plan would address access to hospital facilities, identification of hospitals and parts of hospitals which should close in order to reach the occupancy targets, regionalization of inpatient services, the special needs of public and other disproportionate share hospitals, and the special needs of AIDS patients.

The bill would treat rural facilities differently from urban facilities in recognition of the unique circumstances facing rural hospitals. The States would not be required to review the capital expenses of rural hospitals if the State developed a plan for rural health. The plan would provide a strategy for stabilization of rural health care through regionalization of services, development of alternatives to traditional inpatient hospital facilities, and recognition of the unique transportation needs of rural communities, regarding both emergency and nonemergency health needs.

An important component of my bill is that it would allow Governors to designate local review agencies to provide for review of capital investment proposals at the local or regional level. I have included this provision, notwithstanding the problems in coordination which have occurred in the past with similar structures, because I believe something very important has been lost in the health care system over the last several years with all the talk about competition and market share.

Health is a community affair, one about which everyone in a community ought to have a right to speak. Decisions about hospital care are not ones which should be closely held in the powerful hands of administrators, doctors, or trustees. We should have a forum in which communities may debate the future of health care in that community. After all, well over half the revenue of hospitals is derived from public sources. It seems unreasonable to deny the public the right to debate capital investment decisions supported by their own money. My bill would allow, but not require, the designation of agencies at the local level to perform this role.

Reimbursement of capital costs is the most important remaining area in which the Congress has not reached consensus regarding Medicare hospital payment policy. My bill presents an effort to provide a new approach which mixes the best of the old and the new in order to provide a reasonable, orderly response to the need for a hospital capital investment policy.

A summary of the bill follows:

MEDICARE INPATIENT HOSPITAL CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AMENDMENTS

SUMMARY

I. Payments for capital-related costs of inpatient hospital services

Medicare payments to hospitals for their capital-related costs would end in a state on October 1, 1990 unless:

(a) The state entered into an agreement to review proposed capital expenditures in the state, or

(b) The average occupancy of licensed hospital beds exceeded 85 percent in urban areas and 75 percent in rural areas in the state.

II. Requirements for State capital expenditure review

The State would be required to establish a process for capital expenditures reviews which met the following requirements:

(a) All proposed capital expenditures by hospitals in urban areas of the state exceeding $1 million would be reviewed;

Approvals would not exceed the capital-payment ratio limitation (described below);

(c) Reviews would consider the relationship of the proposed expenditure to the Inpatient Hospital Facilities Plan (described below); the need of the population served for the proposed service, equipment, or facility; the availability of alternative, less costly, or more effective methods for providing the service; and the extent to which the proposed services would be available to all the residents of the service area, particularly the indigent;

(d) Reviews would be performed consistent with procedures and criteria established in regulation, decisions would be made in public meetings, opportunity would be afforded for public hearings, and the state would provide for appeal;

(e) Any decision of the state regarding a review would be based solely on the agency's review and record of the review; and

(f) An application for an expenditure would include a timetable for completing the review and any approval could be withdrawn if the state found that a good faith effort to meet the timetable was not being made.

III. Capital-payment ratio limitation

State approvals of proposed capital expenditures for other than moveable equipment (and, at the states's option, for other than rural facilities) would be limited by a capital-payment ratio limitation.

The Secretary would establish a limit for each state for each fiscal year in order to assure that the ratio of capital payments to operating cost payments did not exceed the national level of that ratio in fiscal year 1987. The effect would be that capital payments could grow to faster than DRG payments.

In establishing the limit, the Secretary would project the estimated amount of DRG payments and capital payments in the state for future years when new capital projects would come on line. The Secretary would also take into account the impact of capital reimbursement for moveable equipment paid on a fixed basis (described below.)

In consultation with the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission, the Secretary would be authorized to adjust the ratio from time to time to take into account unforeseen circumstances and changes in medical practice.

IV. Inpatient hospital facilities (IHF) plan

Each IHF plan would be designed to assure that the needs of the states' residents for inpatient hospital facilities are met; include occupancy targets; and be developed in consultation, with appropriate mental health, mental retardation, alcoholism, and drug abuse authorities.

Each plan would be required to identify which hospitals would be closed in order to meet the occupancy targets, provide for regionalization of inpatient services, and address the special needs and circumstances of disproportionate share hospitals and AIDS patients.

V. Rural hospital capital expenses and rural health plan

The state would not be required to review proposed capital expenditures for rural hospitals in the state. If the state chose not to review rural facilities, its capital expenditure limit would be adjusted accordingly to exclude rural expenditures.

The state would be required to develop a rural health plan which would have as its major focus the assurance of access to inpatient and other health services by low density rural populations. The plan would be required to address, at a minimum:

(a) The regionalization of services;

(b) Alternatives to traditional inpatient hospital facilities; and

(c) The need for special emergency and other health-services related transportation needs.

VI. Local review

The State review plan may provide for designation of local review agencies to assist in reviewing capital expenditures. If local agencies were designated, the state review agency would be required to take into account the recommendations of the local agencies regarding proposed capital expenditures.

VII. Reimbursement for capital expenditures

Reimbursement for approved and existing capital expenditures for fixed assets would continue to be made on a cost pass-through basis. Reimbursement for new and existing capital expenditures for moveable assets would be made through a fixed add-on to per admission payments for operating costs. The add-on would be phased in over three years.

VIII. Federal support for State capital expenditure review

The bill would authorize grants to states from the Part A Medicare Trust Fund.

Each State would receive, on a 75/25 matching basis an amount equal to .70 per person if the state chose not to designate local review agencies and $1.00 per person if the state so chose; however, no state could receive less than $1.0 million nor more than $7.5 million without local agencies or less than $1.25 million nor more than $10 million with local agencies.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, January 31, 1989

The House met at 12 noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

We pray, gracious God, that when we have those opportunities to be Your good people doing good things in our world, we may not easily fall to the excuses that keep us from truly hearing Your word and acting upon it. May not the fear of possible disappointment or difficulty slow us from demonstrating the courage that You would have us show by loving and serving You and all people, now and evermore. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON] will kindly lead the Members in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. SKELTON led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE BILL NICHOLS

(Mr. SKELTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, what does one say about the death of a close friend? In the case of my good friend Bill Nichols, the first place to begin is to talk about Bill Nichols the man. He was a quiet fellow, the kind of retiring southern gentleman who thought long and hard before he spoke. He was also a man of his word, a loyal friend and colleague who played the game of politics in an honorable fashion. Another important characteristic of the man was his independence. He listened to many, but in the end when Bill Nichols decided to act he did so after consulting his own conscience. Maybe most important of all, Bill Nichols was a quietly religious man. He took part every Thursday in our congressional prayer breakfasts and derived strength and comfort from those weekly get togethers.

These personal qualities can be seen in the accomplishments of Bill Nichols the legislator. Substance, not style, is what mattered to Bill Nichols. One need only look no further than the time and effort he devoted to his work on the Armed Services Committee. When Bill Nichols spoke, people listened—on the Hill, at the Pentagon, and elsewhere in Government.

Elected chairman of the Investigations Subcommittee in 1982 Bill Nichols had the sad task of investigating the Beirut bombing of the Marine barracks that led to the death of 241 American servicemen. From that came his interest in defense organization, to make the system work better if he could. Years of patient work on defense matters culminated in 1986 with the passage of the most sweeping reorganization of the Department of Defense since its creation in 1947. Those of us on the Armed Services Committee, in recognition of Bill Nichols constant devotion to the welfare of the armed services, named the measure the Bill Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986. Now known as the Goldwater-Nichols Act, it was a substantial accomplishment and symbolized our recognition of a man who had given so much in the line of duty to his country.

Yes, like many of his generation Bill Nichols served his country in World War II. He used to say that he had put "a little bit of time in the service—combat time." He crossed the beaches at Normandy and lost his leg in the subsequent fighting, earning both the Bronze Star and Purple Heart. Maybe this is why Bill Nichols identified so readily with the men and women who serve our country in uniform.

It says something about Bill Nichols that he died in his office, early in the morning, at a time when many would have expected him to be enjoying a well-deserved break from his duties. He will be missed by those of us who had the good fortune to work with him. He was a wise man, an able counselor, and a good friend. His presence here on Capitol Hill will be missed. The country has lost a devoted public servant.

LET US NOT COUNT ILLEGAL ALIENS

(Mr. PETRI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, after the 1980 census, California gained extra congressional seats due to illegal immigrant populations. Those seats should have gone to Georgia and Indiana.

There is something fundamentally wrong when voters in States with large numbers of illegal aliens have a greater voice in choosing representatives in Congress. In addition, we are granting representation to individuals who would be deported if our laws were enforced.

Today, I, along with 42 original cosponsors, am introducing legislation to correct this ridiculous situation. My bill will direct the Census Bureau to exclude illegal aliens from the count used for reapportionment of the House.

This is not an anti-immigrant bill. This is simply a bill designed to provide fair and equal representation for the legal residents of this country.

I invite all my colleagues to join me as cosponsors.

OUR COMMITMENT TO THE NATION'S DEPOSITORS

(Mr. KANJORSKI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, last week the Treasury Department announced it was considering imposing a user fee on deposits at savings and loans, banks and credit unions in order to inject new funds into the Federal deposit insurance funds.

Many of us in Congress and the general public responded quickly to deflate this trial balloon, the Treasury's action has unwittingly led some people to withdraw, and many to consider withdrawing, their funds from federally insured institutions.

In order to reassure the American people that their funds are not in jeopardy, and in order to encourage them to leave them in their local financial institutions, I am today introducing legislation reaffirming that the full faith and credit of the U.S. Government stands behind the deposit insurance funds.

This legislation is identical to legislation passed nearly unanimously by the Congress in 1982 to resolve a similar crisis of confidence.

I invite all of my colleagues to demonstrate their commitment to our Nation's depositors by cosponsoring this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, since Federal deposit insurance was first enacted over 50 years ago, no one has ever lost a penny in insured funds. The 101st Congress can and must demonstrate its commitment that all funds up to the $100,000 limit are safe, and will continue to remain safe.

STOP ANY FURTHER CUTS IN MEDICARE

(Mr. INHOFE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. Speaker, as uncharacteristic as it is for a conservative to be saying this, I rise today to urge those individuals working on the budget process here in this House, across in the other body, as well as in the White House, to give very serious considerations to not making any further cuts in Medicare.

Mr. Speaker, we have a crisis that is almost upon us, and it seems as if we only address something when it becomes a crisis.

In my home city of Tulsa, OK, two of our four major hospitals had a major operating loss last year, and here on the Hill we found only 3 weeks ago that there are some top officials suggesting we go to a socialized medicine system for the United States of America similar to that which they have in Canada, that which they have in Great Britain.

Mr. Speaker, what do we find as being the most offensive thing about a socialized system? It is that Government will determine who is going to be rejected in receiving health delivery systems. Not medical decisions, but Government decisions.

This is something that cannot happen in the United States of America, and I suggest to my colleagues that in the crisis that is upon us right now that hospitals are giving serious considerations to a rejection system that is taking place at the present time.

So, Mr. Speaker, I urge all my colleagues to join in a resolution to stop any further cuts in Medicare.

INTRODUCTION OF THE NORTHERN CALIFORNIA HIGH TECHNOLOGY EXPORT ASSISTANCE ACT

(Mr. MINETA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, today I proudly join my very good friends and distinguished colleagues from California [Mr. EDWARDS and Mr. PANETTA], in introducing the Northern California High Technology Export Assistance Act.

Northern California's Silicon Valley Area is home to many of America's premier high technology companies. These companies are a crucial part of our Nation's high technology future, and they have the potential to lead the fight in restoring U.S. competitiveness in world markets.

But Silicon Valley's high technology firms have been struggling with the difficult problem of trying to comply with a U.S. export licensing system that is complex and often confusing.

This bill will establish a regional export licensing office in northern California to provide high technology exporters with assistance in interpreting and complying with U.S. export control laws—assistance that is currently unavailable in Silicon Valley or northern California.

I respectfully urge the consideration of my colleagues for this important pro-trade legislation.

MOST SAVINGS AND LOANS ARE HALE AND HEARTY

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, the American public can be assured that the proposed fee on deposits in savings and loan institutions is a dead duck. And that same public can be assured that the viability and sincerity of the savings and loan institutions generally across the country generally are intact, and they need not worry about the full faith and credit of those institutions. There are some that are in trouble because of mismanagement and some other local problems, but this is not obtained across the Nation.

In Pennsylvania, for instance in my own area, most of them, or all of the institutions, are intact, and the report recently issued indicates that from the standpoint of management and fiscal integrity the savings and loan institutions are hale and hearty.

Mr. Speaker, the public confidence in the savings and loan institutions and the Congress of the United States will solve the outstanding problems as they occur.

IN SUPPORT OF THE NORTHERN CALIFORNIA HIGH TECHNOLOGY EXPORT ASSISTANCE ACT

(Mr. EDWARDS of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my California colleagues, Mr. MINETA and Mr. PANETTA, in introducing a bill to establish a regional export licensing office in northern California.

For exporters in northern California, obtaining an export license from an agency in Washington can be both frustrating and sometimes costly. The Bureau of Export Administration has made progress in streamlining the licensing process, but the problems of time and distance still remain obstacles for northern California businesses in their efforts to obtain export licenses.

A northern California office would provide Silicon Valley exporters with much-needed local assistance in applying for export licenses. A regional office already established in Los Angeles receives over 300 calls per day, with 40 percent of those coming from northern California. Northern California exporters submit three out of five of all California licensing requests—worth some $26 billion a year.

There is a great deal of debate these days about how the Government can best encourage improvements in the number of U.S. exports overseas. Establishment of a northern California export licensing office is one of the most direct ways the Federal Government can assist U.S. exporters. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this measure.

POSSIBLE BUDGET SAVINGS

(Mr. SMITH of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing the election of George Bush tells us, it is this: Americans don't want new taxes.

Over the last 20 years, every dollar of revenue raised has been followed by $1.85 in increasing spending. The truth is, tax hikes have never balanced the Federal budget.

How can the deficit problem be solved? Not by simply slashing programs or raising taxes, but by making tough choices.

For example, it is time to look at whether Europe and Japan should bear more of their defense burden. Today, America spends $180 billion to defend these countries.

Presidents Kennedy and Johnson were able to cut between 5 and 8 percent in wasteful spending from their budget each year, using the rescission power. If the President applied this power to the current budget, savings could amount to between $50 and $80 billion annually.

These are only a few of the strategies we can employ in our deficit fight. Congress and the administration can solve the deficit problem if we establish priorities, weed out waste, and manage the taxpayers' money more wisely.

INTRODUCTION OF BILL DECLARING JUNE 23, 1989, AS COAST GUARD AUXILIARY DAY

(Mr. HUTTO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Speaker, today Mr. JONES of North Carolina, Mr. TAUZIN, Mr. DAVIS of Michigan, and I are introducing a House resolution authorizing and requesting the President to issue a proclamation designating June 23, 1989, as "U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary Day".

For 50 years, auxiliarists have been helping others by teaching boating safety courses, providing courtesy marine examinations, and, of course, assisting disabled boaters. The fellowship that comes from sharing similar interests and goals is the glue that holds the auxiliary together. The Coast Guard auxiliary is one of the most effective voluntary organizations in our Nation.

There is no greater thrill to a distressed boater than to have an auxiliary vessel arrive, and a "hearty thank you" is the only pay an auxiliarist ever expects. Auxiliarists are truly the boater's friend and the friend of an estimated 70 million Americans who enjoy water-related recreation each year.

With the ever-increasing number of recreational boaters, the voluntary efforts of the Coast Guard auxiliary will become even more important than today. I believe it is time that we recognize the personal sacrifices of the 30,000 members of the auxiliary and I ask my colleagues to support this resolution.

CENTRAL CATHOLIC HIGH SCHOOL'S CHAMPIONSHIP SEASON

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COYNE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, last August 15, some 65 students reported for the first practice session of the football season at Central Catholic High School in Pittsburgh. In many ways, it promised to be a football season like any other: These dedicated young men—like their predecessors in past years—were committed to practice hard, play hard, and do their best, and head coach John Fischetti was ready to guide them through the season.

No one could have predicted that Central Catholic would have a historic championship season that would culminate in its winning the Quad A–PIAA State Championship on a freezing day last month.

Central Catholic's season began with two scrimmages held with new opponents, Montour and North Hills; but the first regular season exhibition game was with Central Catholic's longtime rival, North Catholic. Central won that game 34 to 13, a sign of things to come. Indeed, they ended the season with 10 victories, 2 ties, and only 3 losses.

The climax of the season came at Penn State's Beaver Stadium on December 10 when Central Catholic was pitted against Cedar Cliff High School of Harrisburg, which was the eastern regional champion. The first half of the game was harrowing, and Central Catholic was behind by 7 to 0 at half-time. But they came from behind in the second half to win with a score of 14 to 7. Every Pittsburgh football fan will remember that day.

I would like to congratulate John Fischetti, head coach; Dave Saville, Bill Morton, Tony Velgich, and Rick Capretta, the assistant coaches; Larry Michelangelo, the athletic director; Brother Martin Zewe, Central Catholic's principal; and, most important, every player on the winning team. They did an excellent job and they have made Pittsburgh proud.

THE CONGRESSIONAL PAY RAISE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GIBBONS). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBLE] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I doubt that I will use the entire 60 minutes, but I want to visit informally for the next few minutes with my colleagues and with the viewers.

I have no detailed text. I have no precise notes from which to read, but this will rather be informally executed.

I want to discuss the very delicate and fragile subject of the proposed salary increase. This is a matter that has elicited much discussion back in my district, but I hear virtually nothing said about it on Capitol Hill.

I am reminded of the old adage which goes that everyone wants to go to heaven but no one wants to die. By the same token, everyone in the Congress, I suppose, wants a pay raise, but no one wants to discuss it, and I think as the 30-day deadline continues to tick away, we in fact need open and notorious discussion about this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I will share what happened to me last Saturday night in my district. I attended a rally at one of my high schools for the purpose of raising money for the muscular dystrophy foundation or fund, and I called one of my friends and asked him to solicit to this very worthwhile goal. He told me he would contribute, and he then said to me surprisingly, "I think the proposed salary increase should be approved." He said, "I think you people in the Congress deserve more than you are making in salary." He said, "I am sure there are some up there who do not," and I am equally certain that he is correct.

There are 540 Members in both bodies, and I am sure that some in that group probably do not deserve what they are being paid in exchange for the performance of their duties. I am conversely, however, in agreement with my constituent when I say that most of us, I think, do deserve it, but I think that is not the issue.

Mr. Speaker, I think the issue is that we are going too much too soon. It is my belief, based upon discussions with many constituents in my district, that most of the people in America probably would not disagree with our receiving a modest increase in salary. I believe furthermore, however, that the proposed increase exceeds the parameters of modesty. It is almost, after all, close to a 50-percent proposal, and I think given our other fiscal problems on this Hill and in this country, it is perhaps grabbing too much of the pie in one fell swoop. I repeat, I think most of the people would not object to a modest proposal to provide an increase for those of us who serve in the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, another feature, I think, that words against us in this area is that our image when it comes to handling Government money, and incidentally I like the impersonal way that we refer to "Government money;" Government money, after all, is money that belongs to taxpayers, and our image is not an enviable one. In fact, I think that we are probably regarded lightheartedly when it comes to this, because we do not have a good track record on spending money prudently and wisely in this body. In fact, that is part of our problem now is because of almost a half a century of imprudence and recklessness when it comes to spending money; we have been content with collecting $5 million on the one hand and spending $10 million on the other.

Mr. Speaker, just as an example, and these are just things I have observed recently, and Lord only knows how many people in this town are driven to work in chauffeured limousines, highly ranking military officials, highly ranking Government officials, some Members of Congress, I am sure. Incidentally, I am not chauffeured to work. I chauffeur myself to work in my own automobile, and I doubt that those others who are chauffeured to work have any more taxing mental problems plaguing them than I have plaguing me.

My point is that would be a good exercise to decommission all of those chauffeured limousines, let folks drive to work for themselves. This is a symbolic gesture that I think would be well received back in our respective districts.

I ran into a workman in this very building about a year ago, and I said to him, "How are you doing today?" He said, "I am doing fine." He said "You would be doing fine, too, if you had 15 people performing the work that 3 could perform," and then he said, "Well, it might require 5, but," he said, "we are on a job right now that 5 of us could take care of, but 15 are assigned to do it and half of us are standing around doing nothing."

Mr. Speaker, I read the other day that the third Member of this body has now been paid in excess of $1 million in his retirement congressional pension fund. Is this the sort of thing that is well-received back home? It would not be well-received if I were back home receiving it—the grandfather clause, and we all are familiar with it, that permits Members of Congress, if they qualified datewise when it become effective, to keep dollars that approximate $1 million in amount in campaign contributions to apply to their own personal use. Certainly this is a violation of the spirit of the law if not in fact the letter. These are the sorts of things that, I think, we must first correct before we start talking about a 50-percent proposal in hiking our salary accordingly.

Last summer a dairy farmer in may district visited me. In fact, I had his family on this very floor, and each time I see them they remind me of it, how proud they were to be here, but when he prepared to go back home, Mr. Speaker, he called me aside in my office, and he said, "HOWARD," he said, "if I had one penny out of every dollar that is wasted in this town in 1 day," and I interrupted him and I said, "Billy, you would never have to milk another cow."

My point is people readily see the waste that goes on in this town, and in this body, and I think that we first need to correct that before we start talking about a salary increase in the magnitude that is being discussed.

Mr. Speaker, I have heard, and I am trying to do this in such a way as to annoy neither the proponents nor the opponents of the pay raise, I am trying to put both sides of the coin forward, and that is why I gave my illustration at the outset that my constituent back home is in fact in favor of it and thinks we are entitled to it, and I want that on the table. But many of the opponents of the salary increase say to turn it back, do not take it. That is hardly the solution, because if the salary increase does, in fact, become effective, then at that time it becomes the prescribed salary for Members of the Congress. That is the salary that is paid for serving in this body, so I think it is foolhardy to indicate that if one does not want it, turn it back in, because the damage has been done once the effective date comes in to play and if, in fact, the law activates at that time.

There has been other discussion about whether or not Federal judges and other top-ranking officials in the Government should be fed from the same spoon as those of us in the Congress, and I think they should. I do not see what is special about Federal judges or top Government officials. After all, public service by definition means sacrifice. What has become of the willingness to sacrifice in discharging public service? I think many people overlook that. Yes, I think the Federal judges and the top Government officials should also have to wait in line for a salary increase of the proportion that is proposed in the matter that is under discussion now.

Mr. Speaker, I just believe, and I am about to wind down, but I think as we approach the deadline, I think we must be ever mindful, and we must be ever cautious, about what we are about to do.

I wrote to the Speaker of the House last month about a week before Christmas, and I urged the Speaker in my letter to please see to it that a recorded vote was taken on this issue prior to the expiration of the 30-day deadline. Members may recall that if no action is taken in the 30 days, and the 30 days expires, then it becomes automatic, and I think that is another feature that is troubling and bothersome to my constituents, the fact that we are not willing to stand and be counted. If this matter is brought forward for a vote, a recorded vote is taken, and these names are illuminated on the wall behind me.

And then we can see who votes for it and who votes against it. That at least is accountability.

Incidentally, I want to thank the Speaker for the letter I received from him yesterday, as did all of my colleagues, indicating that those of my colleagues who want a vote on this matter, if we would simply return the survey to the Speaker by I believe the deadline is today, he said that if a majority requested a recorded vote that there would indeed by a recorded vote. I thank the Speaker for having sent that to us. But I want to find some fault with the way he is going about it. I do not think it is a good precedent to establish to permit the membership to determine whether or not we have a recorded vote. If this occurs, in fact, who knows when next week or next month another sensitive, controversial, delicate piece of legislation may surface, and some Member may say my gosh, we do not want a recorded vote on this, let us take a vote, and if most of the membership oppose it, then we will have a voice vote and go on about our business.

I think that is a bad precedent and I hope that the Speaker will not be guided by that if, in fact, a majority does vote not to have a recorded vote.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that as we go into the waning days of this 30-day bomb that is ticking away I want us to proceed very cautiously. I want us to proceed very deliberately, because the damage that could arise if this pay raise does become effective without a recorded vote, the resulting damage could be irreparable to this Congress. The people in the hinterland, in my district, in your districts, I assure my colleagues, do not like the way it has been handled thus far. We still have time to bring the ship about and avoid the reefs and the shoals that await us if we continue to be reckless in our pursuit.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

ST. DON BOSCO: EDUCATOR TO THE WORLD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. GIBBONS). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, today, January 31, is the 101st anniversary of the death of St. Don Bosco, a pioneer of education for poor youth whose vision and work has grown from his northern Italy of the mid-19th century to over 100 countries.

Born in extreme poverty in 1815 in Savoy, that part of northern Italy which straddles the Alps, and ordained in 1841, he founded the Order of St. Francis of Sales, known more commonly today as the "Salesians." In 1859, with Sister Mary Mazzarello, he founded a congregation of nuns, the Daughters of Mary, Help of Christians.

Today, the fathers, brothers and sisters of these orders number about 40,000 persons, providing education, religious instruction, and recreation to tens of thousands of young boys and girls, men and women giving hope, opportunity, faith and purpose to their lives. This is true throughout Latin America and the Caribbean, Africa, Asia, the Near East, the South Pacific, Europe and North America.

Don Bosco was a priest who heard a special call to bring all young people to an awareness that God truly loves them. By word and by action, he stood against the age and reached out to the orphaned and abandoned children of the streets of his northern Italy. He taught them trade skills. He restored their dignity. He gave them a living faith.

Don Bosco's philosophy was practical: love the young. This sincere identification with the young effected confidence and trust that would reach thousands of boys and girls in his lifetime. Today, it reaches several million boys and girls.

Don Bosco's legacy lives on in a way that even he, a man of great vision, may never have imagined. Archbishop Fulton J. Sheen once told the Sale-sians: "The Salesians remind me of the multiplication of the loaves and fishes. The growth of your society is nothing short of a miracle. You have worked out a very practical solution to today's educational problems. You work for the poor. You teach trades. You know how to keep youngsters happy. Stick to that sort of work and the miracle will go on."

Mr. Speaker, that miracle has gone on. From Sodertaije in Sweden, just below the Arctic circle, to Ushuaia, just above the Antartic Circle, from New York to San Francisco, to Hong Kong, Bangkok, Rangoon, Calcutta to Cairo, they bring their loving help to over 2 million boys and girls.

The statistics are almost overwhelming: Orphanages, 220; clinics and hospitals, 219; nurseries, 864; schools, 3,104, of which 5 are located in my congressional district.

And, the Salesians give their lives and their work freely, receiving no salaries.

This miracle is not remote. It occurs here in the United States, and it occurs in my State of New Jersey. In my congressional district, the Salesians have schools and other facilities in Ramsey, Newton, Mahwah, Haledon, and North Haledon. Elsewhere in the State, they have schools in New Brunswick, Dunellen, Elizabeth, Paterson, Philipsburg, Atlantic City, and Kenilworth. Our State is stronger, better for that education.

Don Bosco would have enjoyed thoroughly living in our age. It is well known that he embraced technology with open arms. The printing press in his school in Turin was the most modern in that city. His machines and books appeared in the great national exhibition of industry, science and art in 1884.

He took his place in the world of technology, for he put his Salesians in the marketplace. He wanted to build "good citizens" for the new society: Citizens who would be tradesmen, teachers, professionals of every kind, farmers, mechanics and the like. He embraced knowledge and truth wherever it was to be found: In the universities, in schools, in industry.

Mr. Speaker, Don Bosco and the Salesians have made an invaluable and indelible mark on the march of civilization. His legacy is a master lesson to Congress as we address the problems of contemporary society.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues know, I have devoted much of my work in Congress to the plight of those who are hungry, both in the United States and overseas. My work on the House Select Committee on Hunger has brought me into much contact with those addressing the hunger problem, both by short-term relief and long-term development assistances.

I have become increasingly aware of the critical importance of agricultural education throughout the lesser developed areas of the world. If done properly, agricultural schools at the high school and college levels can have real impacts on the economies, societies, even the governments of their areas. Their graduates manage farms, provide agricultural extension services and the education to others that brings. Family incomes among farming communities are increased, sometimes by an average of four to five times, a matter of profound importance when we are seeking to move farmers in many areas away from the drug-related agriculture upon which they have become dependent. The building of middle classes in these countries can help foster democratic movements. Pressures of the cities are reduced as families, especially the young, remain in the rural areas and smaller communities.

Agricultural education is little different from any education, and it must be enhanced constantly. Failures to introduce diversified crops, to introduce new technologies, to bring aboard knowledgable faculties, to manage the school and its finances effectively, to improve or update curriculums, to assure job placements for the graduates, all may result in failure.

The agricultural schools of the Salesians, sometimes called Salesian schools and sometimes called Don Bosco schools, after the founder of the Order of St. Francis de Sales, Giovanni Melchior Bosco, or John Bosco, are making an important contribution today, as they have since the last century. In Latin America alone, they have agricultural schools in Argentina, Brasil, Uruguay, Peru, Colombia, Chile, Bolivia, Ecuador, Venezuela, and the Dominican Republic. The same is true in Africa, although much more work must be done there, for the Salesian presence is not as longstanding as it is in Latin America, and in Asia.

Many thousands of students are studying in their schools today, learning through "hands on" education what makes crops grow, yields increase, and so forth. They learn what to avoid, as they learn what also to do. As students they begin contributing to the betterment of their people.

Don Bosco was dedicated to the betterment of the human condition; he worked tirelessly, yet confidently and genially, to improve that condition. In doing so, he brought together a congregation, first of men, then of women, to assure the continuation of that work. As one of his biographers wrote, he was "dedicated to the betterment of the human condition because God is at work in that world, and he felt he had no other choice but to be there, too."

This is a model needed not just among youth but also among all people, of all ages, and I want to join my colleagues on this the 101st anniversary of St. John Bosco's death in recognizing his accomplishments and thanking his followers for their contribution to relieving world hunger.

THE AMERICAN CONSERVATION AND YOUTH SERVICE CORPS ACT OF 1989

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce along with Representatives MATTHEW MARTINEZ, MORRIS UDALL, SILVIO CONTE, BILL RICHARDSON, CONSTANCE MORELLA, ROBERT LAGOMARSINO, and a total of 64 distinguished colleagues, the American Conservation and Youth Service Corps Act of 1989. This measure, which would establish a national program of matching grants to State and local youth service and conservation corps as well as education and training assistance, is based on two separate measures from the 100th Congress: Representative UDALL's H.R. 18, the American Conservation Corps Act, and my H.R. 460, the Voluntary National Youth Service Act. I am very pleased that my good friend and colleague, Representative MARTINEZ, chairman of the Subcommittee on Employment Opportunities, who has always been a strong supporter and who guided the measure through his subcommittee last session, has signed on as an original cosponsor and pledged to move this bill. In addition, I am delighted that my distinguished Senate colleague, Senator DODD, is introducing a companion measure today, and I look forward to working with him to enact this legislation.

Youth service is an issue that is attracting more and more attention, both here in Congress and around the country. Already, thousands of young people are working full time in over 50 full-time youth service and conservation programs throughout the States. Thousands more participate in these corps on a part-time basis, while many others are taking part in programs connected with their schools and colleges. Many of these programs are growing, and many other new ones are being created. Here in Congress, several youth service measures were introduced in the 100th Congress, and more are expected in this Congress. President Bush, during his campaign, voiced support for a youth service proposal similar to the one being introduced today.

I firmly believe that America's youth are the most precious natural resource we possess. However, our economy still often does not provide enough opportunity to find a productive and respectable place in society. Consequently, the lives of scores of young people have been damaged or destroyed by drugs, alcohol, and crime. Moreover, even many of those youth who are gainfully employed have turned increasingly inward, more concerned with making and spending money for personal gain than with the condition of their fellow person. We as a society are partly to blame for this lack of opportunity on the one hand and of social responsibility on the other, and we as a society can and must do something about this.

There are three important factors which seem relevant to the above concerns. First, while overall unemployment has been declining for some time, as of January 1, there were still nearly 2.5 million youth from 16 to 24 without jobs, and these comprised over 37 percent of all unemployed. While total national unemployment is not 5.5 percent, youth joblessness is twice that, 11 percent, with rates of 9.3 percent for whites, 13.6 percent for Hispanics, and 23.8 percent for blacks. While there are some indications that the employment picture for youth is improving, there is still a long way to go, and many of the newly created jobs are still low-paying, low-potential service sector tasks.

Second, the tightening of Federal purse strings over the past 8 years has shifted the burden for social programs to States and localities, which simply do not have the resources to compensate for lost funding. The private sector, which was to step in and fill the gap, has certainly made contributions but has been unable to cover all the bases. Consequently, vital community services have been cut back, significantly cut back in many areas. The large Federal budget deficit still facing us means that this trend is unfortunately likely to continue.

Finally, the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching released a report a few years ago on the state of higher education that indicated a lack of creativity and civic responsibility among college students. While this trend is changing, and groups such as Campus Compact are actively encouraging college youth to do public service work, the pressure of repaying student loans is forcing many graduates to pursue careers in which they will be guaranteed high salaries. Public service jobs are routinely bypassed for more lucrative private sector positions. A national voluntary youth service and conservation corps program, especially one with an education component such as is included in our amendment, could go a long way toward encouraging college students to do public service work, during and after their formal education.

I raise these concerns today because I believe that a national youth service corps program of the type before you today would have a direct impact on all of these areas, and would be a key component of a system of national service. Such a program would be an innovative means of restoring lost social services to our communities and performing vital conservation tasks. It would also provide youth with a constructive alternative to unemployment, and to solely pursuing personal gain, that would serve as a powerful lesson in citizenship. I firmly believe that if we can demonstrate to our young people that society badly needs and values their services, we can go a long way toward relieving the problems outlined above. In addition, recent surveys have shown strong support for voluntary youth service among the American people. For example, a Gallup poll taken in December 1987, showed 83 percent favoring the establishment of a voluntary program allowing youth to enroll in either civilian or military service.

As you know, there is clearly a large number of pressing unmet human, social, and environmental needs that could be met by a national youth service program. Richard Danzig and Peter Szanton, in their recent book, "National Service: What Would It Mean?" estimated that up to 3.5 million positions could be filled by youth service workers each year to help fill the gaps without displacing current workers. These included over 1 million in education, over 700,000 in the health field, nearly 1.5 million in child care, over 165,000 in conservation and the environment, and 250,000 in criminal justice and public safety.

In addition to meeting many pressing needs, we will, by offering an opportunity to perform public service, meet the needs of many youth for a useful role in society and meaningful transition to adulthood. Millions of young volunteers and corps members have already discovered a greater sense of purpose and a renewed spirit of brotherhood through participation in community service projects. The value of such projects is evident to many young people. A recent survey in Minnesota found that approximately 75 percent of Minnesota high school students would support a statewide voluntary youth service program, and that about 50 percent would actually participate. When youth enthusiastically enroll in the California Conservation Corps, whose motto is "Hard Work, Low Pay, Miserable Conditions," they must clearly be involved for much more than the money, and participants gain at least as much as the recipients of the services.

As I stated at the outset, State and locally initiated youth service programs such as the California corps have sprung up all over the country. At last count, there were 33 year-round State and local service and conservation corps and, including summer programs, a total of 50 in operation involving over 50,000 young people, and this number is growing rapidly. Although the scope and form varies considerably from one program to another, they all share a common dedication to the ideals of renewed activism, social responsibility, and helping youth reach their potential.

In the 98th Congress, I first introduced the Voluntary National Youth Service Act, which would establish a program of matching grants to States and localities operating youth service programs. The Subcommittee on Employment Opportunities held hearings on this and on other youth service measures in September 1985 and June 1987. This bill would begin an incremental process of developing a nationwide voluntary youth service program dedicated largely to serving human and social needs. It would be well-complemented by an American Conservation Corps [ACC], a similar program of matching grants for Federal and State conservation programs in a modern version of the New Deal's famed Civilian Conservation Corps. ACC bills were acted on by both the 98th and 99th Congresses. In the 98th, both the House and Senate passed ACC bills, but the measure was pocket-vetoed by the President. In the 99th, the House and Senate passed somewhat differing versions of the bill, and these could not be reconciled before Congress adjourned.

In the 2d session of the 100th Congress, Mr. UDALL graciously consented to combine his ACC bill and my youth service measure into one unified proposal. Mr. MARTINEZ held four hearings on this measure, dubbed the Martinez-Panetta amendment to H.R. 18, last spring, and his subcommittee marked up and passed the amended version of H.R. 18 last October. Numerous changes and improvements were made during and after the amendment's consideration. Representative MAJOR OWENS, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Select Education, the other education and labor panel with jurisdiction, sent a letter to Representative HAWKINS discharging the measure. However, neither the full Education and Labor Committee nor the Interior Committee had the opportunity to take up the measure before Congress adjourned.

Numerous changes and improvements were made during and after the amendment's consideration, and the freestanding bill being introduced now is the result of this process. The program to be created by this bill would be called the American Conservation and Youth Service Corps, and will consist of an American Conservation Corps and Youth Service Corps. Each of these will be very similar to the programs that would have been established, respectively, by H.R. 18 and H.R. 460 in the 100th Congress. Both programs will be open to young people from 16 to 25 for year-round participation and from 15 to 21 only for the summer component. While open to all eligible youth, special efforts would be made to recruit and enroll those who are economically disadvantaged, as defined by the Job Training and Partnership Act. During their service in the program, participants must be directly paid at least 50 percent, and up to 110 percent, of the minimum wage. Their total benefits, however, must be at least 100 percent and not more than 160 percent of minimum wage, thereby guaranteeing that no program could provide a wage and benefits package below the minimum wage. The balance of these benefits would be provided under a new youth skills enhancement section applying to both parts of the corps, and which requires participating agencies to including a training and education component in their programs. The measure would also establish a national commission on youth service opportunities based on measures introduced by Representatives TORRICELLI and SIKORSKI.

To describe the programs in greater detail, the American Conservation Corps would operate both Federal and State grant components. Work projects would include conservation of forests, public lands, and wildlife; revitalization of urban areas and preservation of historic and cultural sites; erosion and pest control, and development and maintenance of recreational sites; and energy conservation and production of renewable energy. The ACC would have separate portions operated by the Interior and Agriculture Departments. States would be required to provide a 50–50 match of Federal funds, and to provide a mechanism for participation by local government and nonprofit organizations.

Work programs under the Youth Service Corps could include opportunities in nonprofit social service organizations, nursing homes, hospices, hospitals, schools, libraries, day care centers, parks, or State and local government agencies. Other service categories could include the rehabilitation or improvement of public facilities, literacy training, weatherization and basic repairs to low-income housing, and other energy conservation projects. While, as you can see, there is some overlap with ACC projects, YSC programs focus more on meeting human and social as opposed to environmental needs. In addition, the YSC will be administered through the ACTION agency, which oversees Federal volunteer service programs, by a new Assistant Director created for this purpose. Unlike the Conservation Corps, this Assistant Director would, as in H.R. 460, be authorized to make matching grant not only to States but to localities as well to maximize local participation.

The title on youth skills enhancement, an important component shared by the service and conservation sections, significantly strengthens the education and training components of both H.R. 18 and H.R. 460. This title requires that all agencies and projects receiving assistance under this act use at least 10 percent of available funds to provide in-service training and education, including remediation, basic skills enhancement, high school equivalency, and college classes. An additional 10 percent must be used for postservice educational assistance and training. The assistance provided can include vouchers, scholarships, grants, and adult education and skills classes. The act also requires a skills assessment of all participants when they enroll as well as vocational counseling during service, and requires that any eligible youth who have dropped out of school enroll in a high school equivalency program in order to participate.

This title ensures that participating youth will receive not only valuable work experience and the opportunity to serve, but equally valuable education and training as part of their youth and conservation service, and they will therefore be able to build on and make the most of their term of service. In addition, job training programs under the Job Training and Partnership Act [JTPA] may refer eligible youth to the corps, the JTPA and other current training and service providers may in turn participate.

Dropout youth who are ineligible for the Conservation and Youth Service Corps shall be referred to relevant education and training systems, and State job training coordinating councils [SJTCC's] shall have a 30-day period for comments on applications submitted under both the service and conservation programs. A maximum of 15 percent of funds may be used for administrative purposes, and project and administrative funds for local programs must, except for a very small amount, be passed through. In addition, a maximum of 5 percent is set aside for part-time demonstration programs of no more than 15 hours per week. This takes account of the many such programs, especially those operating in schools and school districts, that are springing up around the country, and involving many more in community service projects.

To prevent the program from adversely affecting employment of current workers, extensive antidisplacement and nonduplication provisions modeled on those of the Community Service Renewal Act have been developed and included. I feel that these provisions, which were developed in cooperation with representatives of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, provide ample protection for current and future workers from any possible displacement by youth service workers. Finally, the Commission on National Service Opportunities would provide a valuable opportunity to use the experience of these service and conservation programs to actively study the whole question of national service.

This youth service/conservation measure would lend needed support to existing programs to expand their scope, while encouraging other States and localities to launch new programs. The focus would be largely at the State and local levels, yet a national program would supply the coherence. This type of incremental approach, preserving and encouraging local autonomy and diversity, is the type favored by many youth service organizations, such as the National Association of Service and Conservation Corps, as the beginning of a national program. It is also similar to the approach embodied in the Youth Engaged in Service [YES] Foundation proposed by President Bush during his campaign. As proposed, this Foundation also envisions a system of matching grants for a variety of youth service and volunteer projects. I look forward to working with the President, and to those who support his idea in Congress, as this proposal is developed.

Mr. Speaker, this bill would not create another job training program. While these are certainly very important, the corps strongly emphasizes service, to communities, States, and our country. This call to service is not issued lightly, and it is the entire Nation, in the long run, which stands to gain the most from the more outward-looking citizenry that would develop from such a program. A national conservation and youth service corps program would offer young adults a renewed opportunity to earn a sense of pride and self-respect, and fulfill many pressing national human, social, and environmental needs. Fellow colleagues, I fervently hope that Congress will take timely action, and build on extensive previous efforts, to create the American Conservation and Youth Service Corps as part of a national system of service.

IT'S TIME TO REQUIRE STATES TO PROVIDE REFORMS IN PRIVATE ADOPTION PROCEDURES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, more and more prospective parents seem to be bypassing licensed agencies in favor of independent or private adoptions. Independent adoptions, which are legal in all but a handful of States, generally are arranged through a third party. This "facilitator" is frequently a lawyer or doctor.

There are many reasons for the popularity of independent adoptions. The adopting couple faces less of a waiting period for a healthy infant. Many requirements such as age, religion, infertility, length of marriage, and housing may not be present in independent adoption. The biological mother receives many advanages. Medical and personal expenses are paid for by the adoptive couple, and in some cases, an additional cash payment will be made to the biological mother. The child is placed directly in a home, instead of spending a period of time in foster care, which may happen in agency adoptions. Independent adoption is seen as more personal and confidential.

Nevertheless, there are serious problems with independent adoption. The interests of the couple are often put above the welfare of the child. The adoptive parents may be inadequately prepared or unsuitable. The biological mother may be pressured to give up her child, and may be unaware of her legal rights. In some extreme cases, independent adoption may be little more than baby selling, which is illegal in all States.

In agency adoptions, a licensed professional must investigate the prospective home before placement occurs. This is not always true in an independent adoption. In many States, the home study does not occur until after the child has been placed. This does not guarantee that the child will be placed in a secure, permanent home. In the event that a post-placement home study receives a negative recommendation, the court is reluctant to remove the child, feeling that it may cause more damage than good.

The facilitator is usually not trained to determine the best home or parents. Few doctors or lawyers are trained to assess the ability of adoptive parents to provide for the emotional needs of the child. Instances occur where the adopting couple is not screened at all.

An example of this is the death of Lisa Steinberg in New York City. The birth mother gave Joel Steinberg, a lawyer, $500 to arrange for her child to be adopted by a family in Manhattan. Steinberg and his girlfriend, Hedda Nussbaum, kept the child without completing adoption procedures. The child was found unconscious on November 2, 1987, in Steinberg's apartment, and she died 2 days later. Yesterday, Steinberg was found guilty of first-degree manslaughter.

In letters from constituents and in studying the situation, I believe that the area of independent, private adoptions does require some establishment of minimum standards. The health and safety of thousands and thousands of babies is at stake each year, and clearly there are some abuses.

Therefore, I am introducing a bill to link Federal payments of Social Security title IV-E funds to a State's willingness to enact reform legislation in this area by the year 1993. My bill will require that at a minimum, the following areas must be addressed and approved by the Secretary of Health and Human Services:

In any type of adoption, the prospective parents and their home should be investigated by a licensed agency that is trained to assess the ability of the couple to provide for the emotional needs of the child.

Independent adoption sometimes borders on "baby selling" since there may be no limitations to the amount of money that the birth mother or lawyer can receive. An itemized declaration of all costs should be submitted to the court during the adoption proceedings. This will help control the great amount of money which gives independent adoptions a bad name.

In many independent adoptions, the birth mother does not have her own legal representation, and is often unaware of her legal rights. The lawyer of the adopting couple is under no obligation to inform the birth mother of her rights or alternatives. Many women are discouraged from changing their minds about the adoption. They are unaware that there are other options open to them, such as temporary foster care or keeping the child with outside support. Only after researching all of her options, can a mother decide that adoption is the best choice for her.

All parties involved in this sensitive matter should be guaranteed legal representation. As part of the birth mother's expenses, the prospective couple should be required to pay fees for the birth mother to have her own counsel, if she cannot afford one.

Many States do not require a social and medical history of the biological parents to be submitted. Many experts suggest that adopting parents have the right to accurate information about the child's background to plan for the child and help the child grow up with a sense of identity. The child has a right to his medical history in the event of future illness. This is a complex and emotional subject, however, and I believe that it is the kind of question which should be addressed in hearings on this legislation and on the general issue of adoption policy. Therefore, my bill does not require the States to take any action in this area. Perhaps the testimony of expert witnesses can give us guidance on these questions.

States have different requirements for the deadline to file the adoption petition. It is possible for the placement never to be finalized, leaving the child in legal limbo. No one is held responsible for bringing the placement to the attention of the court and mandating its finalization or for the removal of the child. A couple afraid that the court will not approve their adoption, may never bring the adoption to court, leaving the child with questionable legal status within the family. The adoption petition should be filed not later than 1 year after the placement to prevent this from occurring.

I hope that this bill, inspired by some inquiries and concerns expressed by constituents who attempted private adoptions, will help lead to hearings on this whole issue. If the hearings reflect on a national scale the kinds of problems some of my constituents have encountered, then clearly we should enact this legislation.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

ADJOURNMENT

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p.m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Thursday, February 2, 1989, at 11:00 a.m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

485. A letter from the Deputy Assistant Secretary (Logistics), Department of the Air Force, transmitting notification of the decision to convert to contractor performance the commissary resale warehouse function at Mather Air Force Base, California, which was found to be the most efficient and cost-effective method of accomplishment, pursuant to Public Law 99-190, section 8089 (99 Stat. 1216); Public Law 100-202, section 8074 (101 Stat. 1329-75); to the Committee on Appropriations.

486. A letter from the Chairman, Commodity Futures Trading Commission, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation entitled, "The Futures Trading Act of 1989"; to the Committee on Agriculture.

487. A letter from the Acting Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a review of the President's second special impoundment message for fiscal year 1989, pursuant to 2 U.S.C. 685 (H. Doc. No. 101-24); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

488. A letter from the Secretary of Transportation, transmitting a report of a violation of the Anti-deficiency Act in account 69x8020, State and Community Highway Safety Program, for fiscal years 1986 and 1987, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 1351; to the Committee on Appropriations.

489. A letter from the Auditor, District of Columbia, transmitting a copy of a report entitled, "Review of the University of the District of Columbia Contract Number GA/A88110 (Dow, Lohnes & Albertson)", pursuant to D.C. Code, section 47-117(d); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

490. A letter from the Potomac Electric Power Company, District of Columbia, transmitting a copy of the Balance Sheet of Potomac Electric Power Company as of December 31, 1988, pursuant to D.C. Code, section 43-513; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

491. A letter from the Secretary of Education, transmitting a copy of Final Funding Priorities for Certain New Direct Grants Awards under the Office of special Education, pursuant to 20 U.S.C. 1232(d)(1); to the Committee on Education and Labor.

492. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting the Department of the Navy's proposed lease of defense articles to Portugal (Transmittal No. 7-89), pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2796(a); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

493. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of State for Legislative Affairs, Department of State, transmitting notification of a proposed license for the export of defense articles or defense services sold commercially under a contract in the amount of $50,000,000 or more, to Egypt (Transmittal No. MC-5-89, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2776(c); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

494. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting a copy of the price and availability estimates provided to foreign countries, and requests received for Letters of Offer during the quarter ending December 31, 1988, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2768; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

495. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of State for Legislative Affairs, transmitting a listing of gifts by the U.S. Government to foreign individuals during fiscal years 1987 and 1988, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2694(2); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

496. A letter from the Chairman, Board for International Broadcasting, transmitting the Board's annual report on its activities, as well as its review and evaluation of the operation of Radio free Europe/Radio Liberty for the period October 1, 1987, through September 30, 1988, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2873(a)(9); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

497. A letter from the Chairman, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, transmitting the Commission's annual report on contract competition covering fiscal year 1988, pursuant to 419; to the Committee on Government Operations.

498. A letter from the Director, National Science foundation, transmitting a report on compliance with the requirements of the internal accounting and administrative control system, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 3512(c)(3); to the Committee on Government Operations.

499. A letter from the Chairman, Copyright Royalty Tribunal, transmitting the annual report for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988, pursuant to 17 U.S.C. 808; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

500. A letter from the Deputy Secretary of Transportation, transmitting a report describing the Coast Guard's planned fiscal year 1989 drug interdiction level of effort using funds made available in regular appropriation acts; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

501. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Army (Civil Works), transmitting the second review and comments of projects authorized under the Water Resources Development Act, 1986, pursuant to Public Law 99-662, section 903(a)(2) (100 Stat. 4184); to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

502. A letter from the Deputy Secretary of Transportation, transmitting a revised estimate of the cost to complete the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1991, and September 30, 1992, pursuant to 23 U.S.C. 104(b)(5); to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

503. A letter from the Deputy Secretary of Transportation, transmitting activities under the Commercial Space Launch Act and any legislative recommendations for fiscal year 1988, pursuant to 49 U.S.C. app. 2621(a); to the Committee on Science, Space and Technology.

504. A letter from the Deputy Secretary of Transportation, transmitting the Department's report on aircarft design and equipment which minimize incidence of fire or explosion, pursuant to 49 U.S.C. app. 1421 nt.; jointly, to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation and Science, Space, and Technology.

SENATE—Tuesday, January 31, 1989

The Senate met at 2 p.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Reverend John Stait, personal assistant to the Chaplain, will lead the Senate in prayer.

PRAYER

The Reverend John Stait offered the following prayer:

And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.—John 8:32.

God of truth, righteousness and justice, may this Word from the Bible be a reality in our lives. Help us to see we are never more free than when we are a slave to truth—that we experience maximum independence when we live in dependence on Thee—and we are never more bound and dependent than when we try to live independent of Thee.

Gracious Father, forgive the ease with which we surrender to tyrants because we will not be captive to Thee. Lead us in the freedom that emancipates from all tyrants which enslave and destroy.

We pray in His name who is truth incarnate. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Under the standing order, the majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of proceedings be approved to date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROCEDURE ON CONSIDERATION OF NOMINATIONS TODAY

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as if in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that at 3 p.m. today, the Senate go into executive session to consider the nomination of Carla Anderson Hills, to be U.S. Trade Representative, under a time agreement of 40 minutes equally divided between the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD], or their designees; provided that no motions be in order and that at the conclusion or yielding back of time the nomination be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed, without any intervening business, to the nomination of Robert Adam Mosbacher, to be Secretary of Commerce, under a time agreement of 40 minutes equally divided between the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH], or their designees; provided that no motions be in order and that at the conclusion or yielding back of time the nomination be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed, without any intervening business, to the nomination of Samuel Knox Skinner, to be Secretary of Transportation, under a time agreement of 40 minutes equally divided between the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH], or their designees.

Provided further; that no motions be in order and that at 5 p.m., the Senate proceed without any intervening business to a 30-minute vote on the nomination of Carla Anderson Hills, and upon completion of that vote, the Senate proceed without any intervening business to a 10-minute vote on the nomination of Robert Adam Mosbacher, and that upon completion of the vote, the Senate proceed without any intervening business to a 10-minute vote on the nomination of Samuel Knox Skinner.

Provided further, that upon the disposition of these nominations, the motion to reconsider, en bloc be laid upon the table, the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nominations, and that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the several requests of the majority leader?

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I had one request on this side that the vote occur at 4:45.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I renew the unanimous-consent request as previously stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the several requests submitted by the majority leader? The Chair hears no objection. It is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to request the yeas and nays on all three nominations with one show of seconds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? There being no objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I now ask for the yeas and nays en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient show of seconds?

There is a sufficient show of seconds.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, for the information of Senators, I will describe the proposed legislative schedule for today and the remainder of the week.

As indicated in the unanimous-consent request, we will proceed at 3 o'clock to executive session to consider the three nominations of Mrs. Hills, Mr. Mosbacher, and Mr. Skinner.

There will be 40 minutes of debate on each of the nominees, and the votes will occur back to back beginning at 5 o'clock. The first vote will be 30 minutes; the next two votes will be 10 minutes each.

Between the time I and the distinguished Republican leader will conclude our remarks and 3 o'clock, I will, following his remarks, request unanimous consent for a period of morning business.

PROPOSED SALARY INCREASE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as I have said publicly many times, I plan to have a vote on the pay raise in the Senate prior to the expiration of the 30-day deadline for consideration of the President's pay recommendations, which deadline is midnight, February 7.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

The Governmental Affairs Committee is holding hearings on various resolutions relating to the pay raise on today and tomorrow. It is my intention to bring the matter before the Senate on Thursday or Friday of this week. Senators should be prepared to discuss and vote on this issue then. Eleven proposals relating to the pay raise were introduced last Wednesday by five principal sponsors.

I am talking to the sponsors and am consulting with the Republican leader regularly, in an effort to determine the best and most fair way to proceed to consideration of this issue. Not surprisingly, each of the sponsors with whom I have talked to to date would like his resolution to be considered by the Senate. I will continue to talk to the Republican leader and other Senators, in an effort to determine the most fair and appropriate manner for the Senate to consider this matter, and I will keep Senators advised promptly as these discussions proceed.

Mr. President, I now yield to the Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the majority leader. We discussed procedures on the pay raise during our policy luncheon, and I indicated that I hoped the 11 chief sponsors of these 11 different resolutions, Democrats and Republicans, might come together somehow so we can agree on which course or courses to follow. There may be more than one. Some may insist on a vote on each of theirs, but hopefully at the time we vote we can reduce the number.

I am pretty certain what the outcome is going to be: The pay raise is going to be rejected. I do not know how many times we need to do that. Some have different ways of doing it, but I hope that we can do it on Thursday, if at all possible. Some of my colleagues would rather not do it on Friday, but I know the majority leader has a problem, depending on what comes out of committee. So we will certainly cooperate with the majority leader.

In the meantime, I will try to assemble Members on this side who have resolutions, hoping that we might be able to come to some agreement on which one or ones might be offered. If we could take it up, say, Thursday afternoon, at 2 o'clock or later, it might be that we could complete action on it that day. I will be in touch with the majority leader, and I certainly wish to cooperate in every way possible. We will be available for any consultation he may wish.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the distinguished Republican leader.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for morning business, for speeches only, for a period not to extend beyond 3 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LAUTENBERG). Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE NFL'S TEAM OF THE EIGHTIES

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise to make a statement celebrating the National Football League's "team of the eighties," and I make this statement on behalf of myself and my colleague from California, Senator CRANSTON.

Quite understandably, Mr. President, it is with great pride that we honor the Super Bowl XXIII champion San Francisco 49'ers. On January 22, 1989, the 49'ers defeated the Cincinnati Bengals 20 to 16 to win the most exciting Super Bowl yet. With their unequalled third Lombardi trophy of the decade, the 49'ers have solidified their claim as "The NFL's team of the eighties."

With 3 minutes and 10 seconds left in the game, and with 92 yards between them and the end zone, quarterback Joe Montana led the 49'ers on one of his patented comeback drives. In 11 plays consuming a little over 2½ minutes, San Francisco drove down the field and hit pay dirt. The winning score came on a 10-yard pass from Montana to wide receiver John Taylor.

San Francisco was led by Super Bowl Most Valuable Player Jerry Rice, in addition to the superb quarterback, Joe Montana.

Rice, who was last year's National Football League Player of the Year, caught 11 passes, tying a Super Bowl record. Those 11 passes netted 215 yards, a new Super Bowl record, and he also scored one touchdown.

Joe Montana, the Super Bowl's highest rated quarterback, added to his reputation as being the game's best pressure quarterback by passing for 357 yards, also a new Super Bowl record. The Associated Press offensive Player of the Year, Roger Craig, contributed 74 rushing yards and 101 receiving yards in 8 catches.

In particular, I would like to pay a special tribute to head coach Bill Walsh. After 31 years, he announced his retirement from coaching. Coach Walsh has joined Vince Lombardi as the only head coach to retire after winning a Super Bowl. Bill Walsh has led the 49'ers to six straight playoff appearances and three Super Bowl victories. In his 10 years as head coach of the 49'ers, he rebuilt the team into a powerhouse and compiled an impressive 102-63-1 record.

Once again it is on behalf of not just Senator CRANSTON and myself but I think all those who are football fans, and more importantly who appreciate the kind of contest that we saw in the Super Bowl, the sportsmen have another role beyond that of simply providing us tremendous entertainment and spectacle on television. They have a role as literally role models for the young. I think that in this Super Bowl we saw this discharged as well. So in addition to fine play we saw two teams that were superbly coached. We saw two teams put out an enormous effort and there is much in that to tell America's youth.

So it was with pardonable pride and with a good deal more that we celebrate these three championships in this decade by a team that truly deserved the title "the National Football League Team of the Eighties."

I might say I am looking forward to providing the team, if they are able to be here at the appropriate moment, and they are expected to visit the White House on Friday, with some, I am told superb Cincinnati chili which I have won in a gentleman's wager with Senator GLENN who, of course, was putting the honor of Cincinnati on the line with that bet, and perhaps there will be enough because of his generosity not only to feed the 49'ers but interested Senators who wish to participate in that victory feast.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LAUTENBERG). The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID].

CAMPAIGN REFORM

Mr. REID. Mr. President, during these opening days of the 101st Congress, I have reflected on my 2 years in the Senate. In doing so, I am reminded of the song, "I Could Have Danced All Night." When it comes to campaign finance reform, that night can stretch into 53 long hours. Last year on this issue we literally debated all night, considered amendments all day, and concluded in a stalemate, after 53 hours of dancing, dancing, for nothing.

The debate raged nonstop for 2½ days. We got nowhere. The forces opposing reform got what they wanted: negative campaigns, lots of 30 second spots assaulting character, and expensive campaigns where money reigns supreme.

Now, those who oppose campaign spending measures are already threatening filibuster. Again.

Mr. President, we cannot allow a repeat performance. We must abandon this ritual dance around the campaign reform dance floor.

In the last 14 years, the cost of a campaign for the U.S. Senate has increased by 555 percent. We are overwhelmed by the need to raise money for the next election.

Yet when asked to change the system we criticize, too many of us run scared. We want reforms, but not until our next election is concluded. When will this end, Mr. President? Have we made any progress? The answer, I think, is "no."

My election in 1986 was a hard-fought race. My opponent and I together spent $4.5 million in the relatively small State of Nevada.

This past November, the Senate candidates from Nevada spent well over $6 million. In just 2 years, Nevada's Senate campaign cost jumped a staggering $1.5 million. The price of candidacy grows increasingly prohibitive with each passing year. In 1986, congressional campaign spending reached a total of $451 million.

Scores of campaign spending proposals were submitted in the 100th Congress. I introduced one of those bills—a measure to toughen the enforcement powers of the Federal Election Commission, and I cosponsored S. 2. Numerous recommendations will again be submitted for consideration. It is time to act.

Escalating spending makes elections a mockery. Vast sums of campaign-bound money casts a shadow over the democratic system of which we are so proud. As our campaign treasuries swell, we find innovative, ingenious methods of using that money.

The technological revolution has arrived in campaigns. Campaigns are run by computers. Demographic indicators dictate targets and messages. "Grassroots" now means sending electronically processed mailgrams. When I started in politics it used to mean person-to-person contact. The technology is so advanced that we can group people into lifestyle clusters and send them letters with a personal touch.

How ironic, Mr. President, that we now use computers to personalize our campaigns.

Current spending constraints are woefully inadequate. What kind of system allows for independent expenditures of millions of dollars with no restrictions? Independent expenditures have increased by 1,000 percent since 1976.

In the Nevada Senate race this year, I was shocked to see a last-minute infusion of over half a million dollars by special interests. They inundated the airwaves and flooded the mailboxes. Nevada was not the only State subject to this final blitz of independent spending.

One of the largest independent expenditures in Nevada was attributed to a special interest group of foreign automobile dealers. They paid for all kinds of advertising—TV, radio, and mailers. The subject of their efforts was neither trade nor commerce—it was Social Security. I understand that most independent expenditures are protected under the umbrella of "freedom of speech." But where do we draw the line? We must draw it.

When do Americans begin to feel that they no longer have a say in who governs our country? When does the democratic process break down?

The disintegration of the democratic fabric is apparent at all levels of government campaigns. In New York City, Donald Trump is talking about spending $2 million of his own money for television commercials in the New York mayors race. He wants to make sure his candidate wins. What happened to the concept of one man, one vote? What kind of incentive do Americans have to participate and vote when a small number of individuals and groups can exert such influence over the outcome?

When Jimmy Carter was President, he observed this crisis of confidence in our electoral process.

He spoke of a Congress "twisted and pulled in every direction by hundreds of well-financed and powerful special interests." His prediction of disillusionment was broadly criticized. But he was right.

In recent elections, nearly half of the voting population has not participated.

The integrity of the Congress is at stake. The health of our country is before us. How can we effectively represent our constituents and serve our country when we are pressured to raise what amounts to a minimum of $10,000 a week for every week of our 6-year term? And this monumental undertaking would only fund a campaign of $3 million. That figure is well below the going rate to successfully fund a Senate race. We must take campaign finance reforms off the shelf this year. To my colleagues, I emphasize: there is no time like the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator CHAFEE be permitted to submit and ask immediate consideration for a resolution honoring Mr. Bailey Guard and there be no amendments or motions in order with respect to the resolution and that there be a time limitation of 5 minutes on consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Rhode Island.

BAILEY GUARD COMMENDATION

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, under the present conditions I send to the desk a resolution. It is presented on behalf of myself, Senator BURDICK, and all the present and past members of the Environment Committee and including the distinguished occupant of the chair, the distinguished majority leader and, as I mentioned, those who previously served in the committee, including Senator SIMON. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A Senate resolution (S. Res. 27) commending Bailey Guard for his dedicated, faithful, and outstanding service to the United States Senate and the Nation.

Mr. CHAFEE. Will the Chair be good enough to alert me when I have used 3 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will comply.

Mr. CHAFEE. Thank you Mr. President.

Bailey Guard has served 32 years on the Senate staff. A part of that time was as a staff director and minority staff director of the Environment Committee. Part of it was as administrative assistant to the honorable John Sherman Cooper, the Senator from Kentucky, who many of us know so well.

Previous to coming to the Senate, Bailey Guard served our Nation with distinction during World War II as a B-17 and B-29 pilot instructor.

I know I speak for many Members of the Senate, and certainly all of those who have had the opportunity to serve on the Environment Committee, when I salute Bailey Guard for the excellent job that he has done. He has been knowledgeable, he has been calm, he has been constructive, and he always clearly understood the issues, which are extremely complicated, as we all know, in that committee. Whether they were dealing with clean air or clean water, RCRA, Superfund, or whatever it might be, he was always willing to go out of his way, to go that extra mile not only for the Republican side of the Environment Committee but also for the Democratic side as well.

So, Mr. President, it just seems little that we can do to recognize this distinguished gentleman who served so well and so long—32 years.

I convey this message with heartfelt thanks to him, and we recognize as well his family for the wonderful service that he has given to us all.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, in behalf of the distinguished chairman of the committee, Senator BURDICK, myself, and all of the Democrats who are cosponsors of the resolution, as well as all of the Members of the Senate, I join Senator CHAFEE in commending Bailey Guard for the high quality of his service.

Some years ago Woody Allen made a movie called Zelig, which was based on the premise that if one associates with people over a long period of time, one acquires the attritubes of those associates. Bailey Guard is a living example of the validity of that premise. He associated with Senator John Sherman Cooper, Senator Robert Stafford, and Senator JOHN CHAFEE over a long career in public service and in the process, on his own and through that association, represented fairness, character, and integrity, the qualities which have exemplified the careers of Senators Cooper, Stafford, and CHAFEE.

Mr. Guard was the ultimate of fairness, responsibility, and dedication of public service on the committee. We all commend him for his service. We all will miss him. And, for his good and ours, I hope he continues to associate with Senator CHAFEE so he will continue to maintain those attributes.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, now I know how the distinguished majority leader became the majority leader. In commending Bailey Guard, he also lauded three individuals at the same time. That is pretty good. And who can argue with the appraisal that he gave? So we send Bailey Guard on with the very best wishes for good health and happiness in the future.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with the majority leader and Senator CHAFEE in sponsoring this resolution which really is too little to say thanks to Bailey Guard.

Today, we are saying goodbye to a man of competence and integrity who has been a devoted employee and our trusted friend. As pointed out here, Bailey Guard worked for more than 32 years on the Senate staff. For 22 years, he has been the Republican staff director of the Environment and Public Works Committee.

I have had the pleasure of working with Bailey on a variety of highway construction issues, water resources, and environmental legislation. He has always been fair and direct.

Given his direct responsibilities, when I came on the committee, to Chairman Stafford, he often approached some of the committee's legislation from a different vantage point directly opposite of my own. Nevertheless, he was unfailingly courteous, forthright, and helpful to me and my staff. And that attitude made possible a professional relationship which has meant a great deal to this Senator.

Business aside, I count Bailey Guard among the kindest and most decent people I have known. I wish him a full and happy retirement. In closing, Mr. President, I say Godspeed to Bailey and Elza Guard.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, Bailey Guard has worked for the Senate of the United States since November 27, 1956. For most of that time, he was either minority or majority staff director of the Committee on Environment and Public Works. Much to the regret of many, today he is retiring from a long and honorable service.

Bailey began his 32 years of service in the office of Senator John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky. In 1967, he became minority staff director of what was then the Committee on Public Works, and headed the Republican staff of that committee for the next 21 years.

Over the span of 17 Congresses, Bailey worked for only four Members of the Senate. John Sherman Cooper, Howard H. Baker of Tennessee, James Buckley of New York, and Robert T. Stafford of Vermont. But in another sense he has worked for every member of the Public Works Committee since 1967, both minority and majority.

When I first became a member of the Committee on Public Works in 1973, our friend and former colleague Jennings Randolph was chairman, and former majority leader Howard Baker was ranking member. The committee had a reputation for addressing issues in a nonpartisan manner. I soon learned that this was nothing less than the truth.

Under the leadership of Senators Randolph and Baker, and later Stafford and BENTSEN, the committee produced a myriad of legislative initiatives through a consensus of the members based on thoughtful, nonpartisan consideration of the issues. Some of the major public works and environmental legislation enacted in those years are the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, Superfund, the Safe Drinking Water Act, and measures affecting highways, water resources, public buildings, economic development, fish and wildlife, nuclear regulation, and disaster relief.

Bailey Guard played a key role in the nonpartisan atmosphere of the committee. Democratic staff directors changed over the years; leadership of the Republican staff remained with Bailey. With intelligence, honesty, and humor he assisted and advised staff and Members on both sides of the aisle. His enthusiasm never waned, and he maintained his strong belief in the integrity of the Senate as an institution.

Mr. President, I hope Bailey will enjoy a well-deserved, fruitful retirement, and I wish him and his lovely wife Elza every good thing in the years ahead.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, a good friend is leaving the staff of the U.S. Senate. After a period of service that dates back to November 1956—a period that spans 18 Congresses—Bailey Guard is retiring as Republican staff director of the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

We will miss him greatly, for he has added immeasurably to the workings of this body, to the civility and effectiveness of this institution.

When I was elected to the U.S. Senate, I was selected to serve on what is now the Committee on Environment and Public Works. I was the young kid on the block, and I needed a lot of guidance. Bailey provided it. He did so with great skill and understanding of how the Senate operates, and how Members can serve effectively.

I am certainly in his debt. I know practically every one of my colleagues is, too.

A clear indication of how much we all counted upon Bailey is the fact that he was never a one-member staffer. Before most other committee staff members, he reached out to help all of us, not simply the member for whom he worked. He offered advice that was honest and straightforward.

Bailey Guard joined the staff of the Senate as an employe of our good friend, Senator John Sherman Cooper. Bailey served Senator Cooper until Senator Cooper's retirement at the beginning of 1973.

When Senator Cooper retired, Senator Howard Baker wisely retained Bailey as staff director for the Republicans on the committee. A few years later, Senator James Buckley did the same thing when he became ranking member. And, of course, so did Senator Robert Stafford, who took on the role of ranking member, and later chairman, in 1977.

The confidence that each showed in Bailey says something about Bailey, but it also says a great deal about the intelligence that each of those members showed in retaining Bailey.

Bailey's mark on legislation over that long span of time is also remarkable. He had a great impact on all the environmental legislation over the past two decades: The Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, solid waste, and Superfund laws. But his role has gone far beyond that, into issues such as highway policy, nuclear policy, ocean pollution, Federal building policy, disaster assistance, and so much more.

Bailey has been a magnificent employe to the Members of the Senate. He also, I know, has been a wonderful leader to those whom he hired.

Before closing, I do want to mention one other thing about Bailey, which most of you do not know. During World War II, he trained bomber pilots, teaching hundreds of pilots who fought for this Nation. And for 2 years of the period, he was stationed in Rosewell, NM. Bailey's two daughters were born at St. Mary's Hospital in Roswell.

And so as you leave us, Bailey, we certainly extend to you and Elza, your three children, and your grandchildren, the very best. You did a magnificent job, and this Nation thanks you.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I would like to take just a minute to join my colleagues on the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee to pay tribute to Bailey Guard.

During his 22 years of service for the committee, substantial changes have been made in the Nation's attitude and approach to environmental responsibility. In large part that progress is due to the frequently unacknowledged, staff, like Bailey Guard, whose commitment and dedication to sound stewardship reach far beyond election cycles and carry the institutional memory and record from one Congress to the next.

I particularly remember Bailey's role in the 1986 Clean Water Act and Water Resources Development Act. As a native of Park Ridge, IL, Bailey was quite familiar with the needs of the Metropolitan Sanitary District of Chicago. He was also committed to carrying through on the policies and principles legislated in the 1986 act. I cannot say the Bailey was thrilled with the task before us. But I can say that without his personal efforts, the final compromise could not have been reached. Those efforts, on behalf of Mr. Stafford, were much appreciated.

There is much said about public service and there are a lot of misconceptions about the glamor of it all. In his inaugural address, President Bush touched on the importance of these unelected, unthanked employees. And I agree with him. The Bailey Guards of this Nation deserve our respect and gratitude.

As Bailey leaves this body, I want to extend my best wishes to him and his family. I especially want to thank him for the years of service to his country and for his efforts in making Government a tool of the people.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise today to honor Bailey Guard on the occasion of his retirement from the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee. Bailey, a native of Park Ridge, in the great State of Illinois, has had a long and distinguished career with the Environment Committee, serving as a clerk and its staff director in the minority and majority since 1977.

When Bailey retires we will be losing someone with a historical memory of the Senate. Bailey has served on the Environment and Public Works Committee under four Republican chairmen: Senator John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky, Senator Howard Baker, Jr. of Tennessee, Senator James Buckley of New York, and Senator Robert Stafford of Vermont. Many great works have been produced out of that committee during Bailey's tenure there. In addition to Federal highway acts, nuclear regulatory and major public works acts, Bailey has played no small part in such significant legislation as the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, the Safe Drinking Water Act, the Resource Recovery and Conservation Act, and the creation of Superfund.

Bailey Guard is truly a great American for his dedication to the country as a soldier in World War II, where he served as an USAF B-17 and B-29 pilot instructor, and as an employee of the U.S. Senate since 1956. I am proud to acknowledge that he hails from my State of Illinois, and I wish him comfort and enjoyment in his retirement.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, today we say goodbye to a true friend of the Senate. Bailey Guard, for more than two decades the Republican staff director of the Environment and Public Works Committee, was a friend to each member who served on the committee and friend to the institution which is the Senate as he saw to the faithful execution of our rules and traditions. He is retiring today with an admirable record of long service to this body we all love.

The Senate is served by all kinds of people. Some stop here only briefly on the way to other careers. Some are driven by a particular issue, concern or challenge which they put into bills and resolutions and oversight reports. Some come to serve the interests of a single member and his or her agenda. And some—it is usually those like Bailey Guard who have the privilege of long association with the Senate—put the needs of this great deliberative body at the top of their own agenda.

Issues come and go. Members come and go. But the fundamental principles on which this institution operates are a long heritage that must be tended carefully if the Senate is to continue serve the Nation effectively. It his ability to understand and uphold those principles over many years, during the terms of many Members, and through the storm of many contentious legislative struggles which has made Bailey Guard such a valuable asset to the Environment Committee and to the U.S. Senate.

The Senate is a special place. Sometimes one has to be gruff in defending the interests of this body. And Bailey can be gruff. Sometimes what this place needs most is the simple kindness of a good-hearted human being. Bailey is a ready friend. And sometimes this place needs to hear the unvarnished honesty of plain common sense. And Bailey has always shown his common sense in ample measure.

Mr. President, it is a privilege to be heard as a cosponsor of this resolution honoring Bailey's service in the Senate. It is but small return for all that he has given over the years. We wish all of the best for Bailey, his wife Elza, and their family in the years ahead.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 27) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution (S. Res. 27), with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 27

Whereas Bailey Guard became an employee of the Senate of the United States on November 27, 1956, and since that date has ably and faithfully upheld the high standards and traditions of the staff of the Senate of the United States for a period that included eighteen Congresses;

Whereas Bailey Guard has served as Staff Director and as Minority Staff Director of the Committee on Environment and Public Works from January 1, 1966, until the present;

Whereas Bailey Guard served prior to 1966 as Administrative Assistant to The Honorable John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky;

Whereas Bailey Guard served his Nation with great honor and valor during World War II as a B-17 and B-29 pilot instructor;

Whereas Bailey Guard faithfully discharged the difficult duties and responsibilities of his positions on the staff of the Senate of the United States with great efficiency, devotion, and dedication;

Whereas Bailey Guard's clear understanding of the challenges facing the Nation has left his mark on landmark legislation in the areas of the environment, public works, economic development, and agriculture;

Whereas Bailey Guard is retiring from the Senate of the United States on January 31, 1989: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States commends Bailey Guard for his exemplary service to the Senate and the Nation, and wishes to express its deep appreciation and gratitude for his long, faithful, and outstanding service.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this resolution to Bailey Guard.

HABEAS CORPUS REFORM ACT OF 1989

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States affords every individual specific protections in judicial proceedings. Those constitutional protections are being jeopardized under the pretense of a legitimate search for justice.

Our courts are increasingly burdened by frivolous and dilatory petitions which impede the timely disposition of legitimate claims—including legitimate habeas corpus requests.

On January 25, joined by my colleagues Senator NUNN, MACK, and BRYAN, I introduced the Habeas Corpus Reform Act of 1989. The Habeas Corpus Reform Act is designed to protect prisoners' right while it protects the integrity of our judicial system.

The bill proposed includes a number of reforms of the current Federal habeas corpus process.

For State prisoners: it imposes a 1-year limit on habeas corpus applications, normally running from exhaustion of all possible State habeas corpus petitions and appeals.

For Federal prisoners: it imposes a 2-year limit on Federal habeas corpus applications, normally running from the time of final judgment on the original Federal determination of guilt.

This legislation also clarifies present law—establishing the requirement that a State prisoner must ordinarily raise all claims in accordance with State rules of procedure or be barred from asserting such claims in a Federal habeas corpus proceeding, and clearly states that a Federal habeas court petition may be denied on the merits without requiring prior exhaustion of State remedies.

Finally, this legislation seeks to relieve the administrative burden on district courts and simplify the appellate process by providing that an appeal from the district court in a habeas corpus proceeding may not be taken unless a certificate of probable cause is issued by a circuit judge.

There are at least four reasons that establish an urgent need for the reforms that this legislation would provide.

First, the number of petitions filed is increasing at an alarming rate.

Beginning in the late 1970's, the filing of Federal habeas corpus petitions by State prisoners increased significantly; 1987 filings of 9,524 surpassed the all-time peak figure and represented an increase of 35 percent over the 1978 filings.

Given recent trends, 1988 will probably reflect the highest number of State petitions ever filed for Federal habeas corpus relief.

Second, a significant number of these petitions simply duplicate earlier litigation.

According to a Department of Justice study of six district courts and one circuit court, more than 30 percent of the State prisoner habeas corpus petitions were filed by persons who had filed one or more previous Federal habeas corpus petitions. More than 44 percent had previously filed at least one petition in State court.

Third, Federal district courts and courts of appeals are unable to keep up with these increases. In 1986, in both Federal district courts and U.S. courts of appeals, the number of habeas corpus cases filed exceeded the number of habeas corpus cases resolved.

Although State habeas corpus petitions in 1985 constituted less than 8 percent of all Federal appeals filed, they constituted almost 19 percent of the backlog in Federal courts.

Fourth, many petitions are filed years after the crime, when evidence is stale or nonexistent. The Department of Justice study found that almost one-third of the habeas corpus petitions were filed more than 10 years after conviction.

In response to this crisis, Chief Justice William Rehnquist has appointed a commission to survey habeas corpus reform proposals. This commission, headed by retired Supreme Court Justice Lewis Powell, has begun to gather information on the extent of the problem and is expected to report to Congress later this year.

Last year the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 included a provision to ensure that habeas corpus reform proposals receive timely action in the 101st Congress.

In section 7323 of the Act it was provided:

Beginning on the date the Chief Justice of the United States forwards to the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and the House of Representatives the report and recommendation of the Special Committee on Habeas Corpus Review of Capital Sentences, appointed by the Chief Justice of the United States and chaired by Justice Lewis Powell, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate shall have 15 days of session thereafter to introduce a bill to modify Federal habeas corpus procedure after having fatihfully considered the report and recommendations of the Special Committee. If no such bill is introduced by the chairman within the 15-day period, such bill may be introduced by the ranking minority member of the committee within an additional 10 days of session.

We hope the Habeas Corpus Reform Act of 1989 will offer focus to the public debate and complement the efforts of the Powell Commission.

Habeas corpus is a cherished constitutional right of all Americans. Our proposal will enhance the potential of habeas corpus to achieve justice expeditiously through a reduction of unseemly litigation and delay.

It will bring us closer to timely justice for society and the accused.

Our responsibility is to ensure that the system works in the way it was origianlly intended, with equal and timely dispensation of justice in all habeas corpus cases.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of S. 271 be printed in the RECORD, to be followed by a statement in support of S. 271.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 271

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Habeas Corpus Reform Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINALITY OF DETERMINATION.

Section 2244 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d) When a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court fails to raise a claim in State proceedings at the time or in the manner required by State rules of procedure, the claim shall not be entertained in an application for a writ of habeas corpus unless actual prejudice resulted to the applicant from the alleged denial of the Federal right asserted and—

"(1) the failure to raise the claim properly or to have it heard in State proceedings was the result of State action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States;

"(2) the Federal right asserted was newly recognized by the Supreme Court subsequent to the procedural default and is retroactively applicable; or

"(3) the factual predicate of the claim could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence prior to the procedural default.

"(e) A one-year period of limitation shall apply to an application for a writ of habeas corpus by a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court. The limitation period shall run from the latest of the following times:

"(1) the time at which State remedies are exhausted;

"(2) the time at which the impediment to filing an application created by State action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States is removed, where the applicant was prevented from filing by such State action;

"(3) the time at which the Federal right asserted was initially recognized by the Supreme Court, where the right has been newly recognized by the Court and is retroactively applicable; or

"(4) the time at which the factual predicate of the claim or claims presented could have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence.".

SEC. 3. APPEAL AND REVIEW.

Section 2253 of title 28, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 2253. Appeal

"(a)(1) In a habeas corpus proceeding or a proceeding under section 2255 of this title before a circuit or district judge, the final order shall be subject to review, on appeal, by the court of appeals for the circuit where the proceeding is had.

"(2) There shall be no right of appeal from such an order in a proceeding to test the validity of a warrant to remove, to another district or place for commitment or trial, a person charged with a criminal offense against the United States, or to test the validity of his detention pending removal proceedings.

"(b) An appeal may not be taken to the court of appeals from the final order in a habeas corpus proceeding if the detention complained of arises out of process issued by a State court, or from the final order in a proceeding under section 2255 of this title, unless a circuit justice or judge issues a certificate of probable cause.".

SEC. 4. PROCEDURES UNDER RULE 22 OF THE FEDERAL RULES OF APPELLATE PROCEDURE.

Rule 22 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure is amended to read as follows:

"RULE 22.

"HABEAS CORPUS AND SECTION 2255 PROCEEDING

"(a) Application for an Original Writ of Habeas Corpus. An application for a writ of habeas corpus shall be made to the appropriate district court. If application is made to a circuit judge, the application will ordinarily be transferred to the appropriate district court. If an application is made to or transferred to the district court and denied, renewal of the application before a circuit judge is not favored; the proper remedy is by appeal to the court of appeals from the order of the district court denying the writ.

"(b) Necessity of Certificate of Probable Cause for Appeal. In a habeas corpus proceeding in which the detention complained of arises out of process issued by a State court, and in a motion proceeding pursuant to section 2255 of title 28, United States Code, an appeal by the applicant or movant may not proceed unless a circuit judge issues a certificate of probable cause. If a request for a certificate of probable cause is addressed to the court of appeals, it shall be deemed addressed to the judges thereof and shall be considered by a circuit judge or judges as the court deems appropriate. If no express request for a certificate is filed, the notice of appeal shall be deemed to constitute a request addressed to the judges of the court of appeals. If an appeal is taken by a State or the government or its representative, a certificate of probable cause is not required.".

SEC. 5. STATE CUSTODY; REMEDIES IN FEDERAL COURTS.

Section 2254 of title 28, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by amending section (b) to read as follows:

"(b) An application for a writ of habeas corpus in behalf of a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court shall not be granted unless it appears that the applicant has exhausted the remedies available in the courts of the State, or that there is either an absence of available State corrective process or the existence of circumstances rendering such process ineffective to protect the rights of the applicant. An application may be denied on the merits notwithstanding the failure of the applicant to exhaust the remedies available in the courts of the States.";

(2) by amending subsection (d) to read as follows:

"(d) In a proceeding instituted by an application for a writ of habeas corpus by a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court, a full and fair determination of a factual issue made in the case by a State court shall be presumed to be correct. The applicant shall have the burden of rebutting this presumption by clear and convincing evidence.".

SEC. 6. FEDERAL CUSTODY; REMEDIES ON A MOTION ATTACHING SENTENCE.

Section 2255 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) striking the second paragraph which begins "A motion for such relief" and the penultimate paragraph which begins "An appeal may be taken"; and

(2) adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"When a person fails to raise a claim at the time or in the manner required by Federal rules of procedure, the claim shall not be entertained in a motion under this section unless actual prejudice resulted to the movant from the alleged denial of the right asserted and—

"(1) the failure to raise the claim properly, or to have it heard, was the result of governmental action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States;

"(2) the right asserted was newly recognized by the Supreme Court subsequent to the procedural default and is retroactively applicable; or

"(3) the factual predicate of the claim could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence prior to the procedural default.

"A two-year period of limitation shall apply to a motion under this section. The limitation period shall run from the latest of the following times:

"(1) the time at which the judgment of conviction becomes final;

"(2) the time at which the impediment to making a motion created by governmental action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States is removed, where the movant was prevented from making a motion by such governmental action;

"(3) the time at which the right asserted was initially recognized by the Supreme Court, where the right has been newly recognized by the Court and is retroactively applicable; or

"(4) the time at which the factual predicate of the claim or claims presented could have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence.".

LEGISLATION COULD CUT THE FLOW OF INTERMINABLE LEGAL APPEALS

The execution of Ted Bundy has brought an outpouring of philosophical opinions concerning the mentality and motivations of this mass sex killer whose only public show of remorse, if any, surfaced shortly before he was put to death last Tuesday.

The final chapter in the ugly saga of Bundy also has rekindled interest in a more practical side of the Bundy case: how he was able through legal maneuvers to evade his ultimate date with the electric chair for almost 10 years.

One day after Bundy's execution, two U.S. senators, Bob Graham, D-Fla., and Sam Nunn, D-Ga., filed legislation in Congress to limit the power of federal judges to review appeals in state capital-punishment cases. Its purpose is to limit the time for filing and disposing of death-row appeals.

The idea is by no means new. For example, former U.S. Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., won Senate approval in 1985 of similar legislation, which became bogged down in the House of Representatives. Chiles' bill placed a three-year limit on post-conviction legal questions a defendant could raise based on existing issues, as opposed to new evidence.

Under the proposed new legislation, a convicted killer would have one year after exhausting state remedies to file a federal attack on a conviction, and two years to challenge a federal order denying such an appeal.

"No one," Graham said, "is well-served by excess court delays." He noted the sharp rise in death-row appeals, to nearly 10,000 a year. Graham has firsthand knowledge of the subject. During eight years as Florida governor, he signed 155 death warrants, all but 16 of them—including three for Bundy—blocked by appeals. Graham's successor, Gov. Bob Martinez, has signed 64 death warrants, four resulting in executions, including Bundy's.

But the proposal to cut federal appeal time has its dissenters, as it has had in the past. Larry Spalding, who heads the state's publicly funded bureau to provide legal help to indigent Death-Row inmates, says federal judges are in a better position to rule objectively in death-case appeals because they are not subject to election, as are state judges.

It is a matter of record that death-row appeals ultimately wind up in the federal courts and are decided there. No one can argue with a defendant's right to appeal. But allowing the system to be manipulated by frivolous appeals only frustrates the ends of justice. That is not the purpose or intent of the law. It calls for change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE PRESIDENT CHIANG CHING-KUO OF THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, last November after the election I had the opportunity to accompany Ruby Chow & Associates, a trade group and delegation from Seattle, WA, with people from the State of Oklahoma, Washington State, and my own State of Idaho, to the Republic of China on Taiwan. It was an enjoyable experience. My good friend Jim Hertz from Idaho, a friend and associate, and I were the two people from Idaho on the trip.

Much as I had expected, that island country was exceedingly prosperous, as evidenced by her $6,000 per capita income, her $74 billion foreign reserve, her mumerous downtown skyscrapers and well-groomed business executives going about their business in sleek European and American cars. Taiwan's economic success, I was told more than once by business and political leaders, is due to the leadership of their late President Chiang Ching-kuo and to the planning of Minister K.T. Li, architect of Taiwan's continuous economic expansion and growth.

Taiwan's economic success is matched by her progress in political liberation. Martial law and one party rule have given way to the national security law and the establishment of the opposition party—the Democratic Progressive Party. In fact, street demonstrations against the ruling party or government agencies have been so commonplace that many citizens yearn for the more tranquil times of the past.

During my visit with President Lee Teng-hui in his Presidential office, President Lee assured me that Taiwan would continue her process of democratization. A Cornell-educated scholar turned statesman, President Lee spoke glowingly of his own and his country's affection for the United States, of his strong desire to strengthen with the United States, of his opposition to any Taiwanese independence movement and lastly of his hope for a reunified China under the principles of freedom, democracy, and equal distribution of wealth.

President Lee is a courtly gentleman of deep Christian faith and personal modesty. He was born on Taiwan and enjoys immense popularity among his people. His leadership is bold and inspiring. After having successfully presided over the 13th National Party Congress and having installed a youthful Cabinet last summer, he challenged his countrymen to seek new approaches to old problems. In recent months, Taipei has returned to the Asian Development Bank, has established formal ties with the Bahamas and has upgraded its unofficial ties with France and Egypt. Additonally, Taipei has allowed her citizens to have much greater people-to-people and other cultural contacts with their friends and relatives on the mainland. All these new actions indicate a nation and a people with increasing confidence in themselves.

Most government and business leaders expressed reasonable satisfaction with the current working relationship between Taipei and Washington. What irked them and made them feel unappreciated was the continuing U.S. pressure on them to appreciate their currency, even though it has appreciated more than 40 percent in the last 18 months and their trade surplus with the United States had been reduced from US$16 billion to about US$10 billion in 1988.

Citizens in my State have noticed a great difference in the openness of their markets for our produce and other goods that they have exported to Taiwan. It is becoming a bigger and better market all the time for Idaho producers of many various crops and products.

The Taiwanese have asked that their currency be allowed to remain stable for 6 months and then be revalued should their trade surplus with the United States continue to grow. They also have asked that the United States not threaten retaliatory measures against them as a way of settling trade disputes.

While I think the United States has some justifiable concerns, I believe we have an obligation to listen to their side of the story. For example, not too many of us realize that Taiwanese factories are mostly small or at best medium-sized enterprises, as compared to their counterparts in Japan or in South Korea; thus, Taiwan's economy is much less able to withstand any sustained economic upheaval. Seventy percent of Taiwan's output would suffer adversely, I was told, if there were any further appreciation of their currency. If their exports were to shrink overnight, social dislocations would result, thus jeopardizing Taiwan's democratic reforms and inviting unwanted military attention from the Chinese mainland.

Mr. President, in the 1990's, the Pacific rim countries, including Taiwan, will play an ever increasing role in this global economy and will affect the well being of every American. Let us nourish our traditional friendship with the Republic of China. Yes, we have trade conflicts with them and will continue to have them. But let us solve them harmoniously without rancor or acrimony. To threaten them with retaliatory measures, such as evoking section 301, would be counterproductive and contrary to the interests of the alliance we have formed with the Republic of China over many years. The bottom line is that an economically strong and democratic Taiwan is in the United States' best interests.

Mr. President, on the first anniversary of the passing of our friend, the late President Chiang Ching-kuo of the Republic of China, I wish to join my friends in the United States Congress in paying tribute to Mr. Chiang, unquestionably one of the 20th century's great world leaders, and at the same time, in assuring President Lee Teng-hui that his advice and counsel will be sought through his representative in Washington: Minister Ding Moushih, whose many years in the diplomatic service will most assuredly benefit both Taipei and Washington.

Also, Mr. President, I would strongly urge President Bush to travel soon to the Republic of China in Taiwan and reassure those fine people of our continued friendship and support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some figures and facts on trade with the United States from the ROC on foreign exchange, and how they have reduced tariffs on 3,803 items in 1988, and their determination to shrink that deficit with the United States.

I thank my colleagues for their indulgence.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES

The ROC is the fifth largest trading partner of the United States. In 1988, the ROC imported from the United States a total of $13.002 billion, or an increase of 74 percent over the 1987 figure; exports to the U.S. amounted to $23.427 billion, or a 1 percent decrease compared with the 1987 figure. The ROC recorded a trade surplus of $10.425 billion with the U.S., a reduction of 16.5 percent compared with that of 1987.

In 1988, the ROC's imports from the U.S. constituted 26.19 percent of total imports, while 38.7 percent of the ROC's total exports went to the U.S. market, a decline from 47.8 percent in 1986, and 44.15 percent in 1987.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE

The ROC's foreign exchange reserves amounted to $74 billion at the conclusion of 1988. The New Taiwan dollar (NT$) has appreciated 46.58 percent against the U.S. dollar since the Plaza Accord meeting in September 1985. The exchange rate adjusted from NT$40.53 = US$1 on September 21, 1985, to NT$27.65 = US$1 on January 23, 1989.

TARIFF REDUCTION

The ROC cut tariffs on 3,803 items of imports in 1988, and has stated its determination to shrink by 1992 its average nominal import tariff rate to 7% and its average effective import tariff rate to 3.5%.

HELSINKI COMMISSION CODEL TO U.S.S.R.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, this past November I had the opportunity to accompany the Helsinki Commission to the Soviet Union. The purpose of this historic trip was to discuss human rights with members of the Supreme Soviet. We traveled at the invitation of Soviet leadership.

Congressman STENY HOYER and Senator DENNIS DECONCINI led the delegation, and I especially want to commend them for their leadership. This was the first time a congressional delegation held a dialog with Soviet officials on the sensitive subject of human rights. And Congressman HOYER and Senator DECONCINI made sure we were well prepared to hold the Soviets to our subject.

During our week-long meetings we discussed a wide range of issues—from freedom of religion and the press to freedom to travel and emigrate. The Soviets noted their own progress—emigration is the highest it has been since the late 1970's. And, in the last 2 years, hundreds of political prisoners have been released. As of now, it looks like General Secretary Gorbachev's glasnost and perestroika have made some difference.

One of the clearest signals of the changes underway in the Soviet Union came at a lunch hosted by our delegation. We invited our Soviet hosts to share a meal with us and Soviet dissidents and refuseniks. The Soviets, apparently ready to face their harshest critics—those people who have not been able to emigrate—accepted our terms.

Several refuseniks—among them, Yuli Kosharovsky and Abe Stolar—sat opposite the very Soviet leaders who have repeatedly dashed their deepest hopes. For the first time, Kosharovsky spoke directly with Rudolf Kuznetsov, the head of the all union office of visas and registration—the agency which grants or denies the right to leave. Kosharovsky praised Soviet leadership for this human rights dialog. But he noted the progress yet to be achieved.

Many citizens are stil denied the right to leave because of some secrets allegedly possessed by some family member. In fact, the week we were there, young Slava Uspensky—age 19—got a refusal until 1996, all because his grandmother supposedly worked on classified matters at the Ministry of Agriculture. Incidentally, she retired in 1976, so her secrets will follow Slava for 20 years, if the Soviets have their way.

And still others cannot leave because a parent will not give permission. The Soviets, in some form of perverse interpretation of family responsibility, require a parent to release an adult child, seeking to emigrate, from any obligations which may—or may not—arise in the future. This rule effectively drives a wedge between family members.

Soviet leadership told us in no uncertain terms—that secrecy rules would continue to play a part in emigration decisions and these financial releases would still be required, even under new legislation which we hope the Soviets pass very shortly.

So the dialogue was unprecedented and historic. For the first time, the Soviets listened to our criticisms without denouncing them as an unwarranted interference with internal affairs. They willingly revisited their history, finding fault with the lack of attention to individual rights.

But in spite of this new attitude, there are many issues still to be resolved. While the Soviets may show us a church, religious freedom does not yet exist. While their newspapers begin to print more criticisms, the fact remains that all the printing presses are owned and operated by the Government. And while some political prisoners have been freed, other citizens are still harassed and arrested for expressing their views.

We in the Congress must continue to be vigilant. We are the best hope for getting the Soviet Government to secure fundamental human rights for their citizens. We must keep the pressure on and demand recognition of individual rights across the board, not just in particular cases.

Former Secretary of State Shultz rewarded the Soviets for the improvements they have made in the human rights arena. The Soviets will host a Human Rights Conference in 1991 as part of the Helsinki review process. Secretary Gorbachev wanted this conference very much. To win it, he satisfied many of our conditions: he ended the radio jamming, he released many political prisoners, he resolved many of the divided family cases, and he improved emigration. It proves that our strong and firm human rights policy gets results.

But there is still a long way to go in the Soviet Union before religious freedom exists, before open emigration is achieved, before justice is dispensed fairly. So even though Secretary Gorbachev has won his Human Rights Conference, he must understand that we are not yet satisfied. There is much progress to be achieved. We will continue to seek full performance by Secretary Gorbachev of the Helsinki commitments. Deeds, not words, must be the measuring stick.

We must remember that the Soviet Union is not and has no intention of becoming a democracy. Moscow will continue to dictate policy. So long as that principle guides the Soviet Union, the human rights of its citizens will depend upon the whim of those who sit at the top.

PRESIDENT REAGAN'S FAREWELL ADDRESS: DON'T FORGET AMERICAN HISTORY

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, President Reagan in his January 11 farewell address to the Nation counseled the American people not to forget American history. Mr. Reagan is absolutely right: If we forget our history, we cannot for long maintain our freedom.

Too often, the struggle to institute representative government in the British settlements in North America during the 17th century is forgotten or just dimly remembered. This struggle laid the foundation of American liberty and I am convinced that we must renew, as a top priority, this important part of our history.

Let me quote what President Reagan said. I thoroughly agree with him.

> Finally, there is a great tradition of warnings in Presidential farewells, and I've got one that's been on my mind for some time * * * we've got to teach history based not on what's in fashion but what's important. * * * If we forgot what we did, we won't know who we are. I am warning of an eradication of the American memory that could result, ultimately, in an erosion of the American spirit.

The President's wise counsel reflects the thinking of many Americans who are deeply concerned about what can be described as an eradication of the American memory. Such an eradication of the American memory, if unchecked, will lead not only to an erosion of the American spirit; it will lead ultimately to a loss of American liberty. Thus, it is enormously important that we understand the miraculous formative period of our Republic—from the beginning of the 17th century to the year 1789—when the foundations of American liberty and self-government were laid down.

Mr. President, another distinguished President—John Adams—was concerned in his day about a proper understanding of our formative period. In a letter written in 1818 to his friend, Judge Tudor, President Adams observed:

> * * * the principles and feelings which produced the Revolution ought to be traced back for two hundred years, and sought in the history of the country from the first plantations in America.

Mr. President, with the 101st Congress we are entering our third century as a sovereign and independent constitutional Republic. It is appropriate, therefore, to reflect on President Reagan's warning and on President Adams' words.

I am sure that Senators would agree that the unique character of American Government derives from two fundamental first principles, two pillars of our Government: local self-government and national union. Both of these principles emerged in our formative period. Today I will comment on the development of representative government based upon the principle of local self-government.

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT IN 17TH CENTURY BRITISH NORTH AMERICA

During the 17th century, representative government was instituted in 21 British settlements in North America and in the Caribbean. Virginia, in 1619, was the first to establish representative government; John Pory was the first Speaker of the House of Burgesses. New York, in 1683, was the last to establish representative government.

Americans today have inherited the tradition, the principles, and the practices of almost 400 years of local self-government which those who came before us fought and died to defend. Our institutions of representative government are unique in the world and must be perpetuated. Our institutions can be perpetuated only if we are firmly grounded in our own history and know how and why these institutions actually developed in practice.

Our history makes it self-evident that representative government is not an abstract ideal. Nor is it a mere classroom theory. Representative government is, rather, a form of government which has been practiced here for almost four centuries.

AMERICAN HISTORY AND POLITICAL CULTURE ATTACKED

Mr. President, in the life of nations, a frequent recurrence to first principles of government is necessary in order to secure and to promote the common good and the common defense. Today, we confront moral and political crises at home while our national security is perilously threatened from abroad as at no time in the past.

During this century, American political culture has been under a systematic attack. As part of a settled design, alien concepts of government—particularly Marxism in its various forms—have been and are being introduced into our society. The object has been to subvert our traditional political institutions and to erase the true political history of this Republic and its institutions.

The chief instruments of this campaign against America—against its culture, its institutions, its history—have been the large tax-exempt foundations, our schools and universities, and the print and electronic media. American history has been distorted, manipulated, and eradicated by any number of teachers, intellectuals, and journalists. The hidden purpose of this campaign is the gradual overturning of our political institutions and the eventual formation of a world government on the ruins of once sovereign and independent states including our own.

Mr. President, representative government was established in the New World by men and women determined to exercise and to defend their liberties and to transmit these liberties unimpaired to their posterity. Today, as President Reagan has warned us, we need to defend our institutions and our way of life through a deepened understanding of our own history.

The heritage of local self-government that patriotic men and women have bequeathed to us is priceless. It is a living heritage of principles, practices, and institutions which govern our lives to this day.

We must never forget that it was the accumulated experience of local self-government for more than 150 years which enabled the Founding Fathers to establish the form of Government which we enjoy today under our Constitution.

Too often, we overlook these 150 years of early American history and culture. These years constitute the formative period of our Nation. The experience gained in respresentative government during these years provided the basis for national union and the basis for the establishment of our constitutional Republic.

BRIEF CHRONOLOGY OF THE RISE OF SELF-GOVERNMENT IN BRITISH NORTH AMERICA

Mr. President, based upon the date of the first representative assembly in each settlement, what follows is a basic chronology of the rise of self-government in British North America. In 17th-century England, the New Year was said to commence on March 25 rather than January 1. In the brief description that follows I have adjusted the years to reflect our current practice. While the current calendar adds 10 days to the 17th century calendar, I have left the months and days in the old style of reckoning.

In Virginia, English settlement was first established in 1607. The first representative assembly opened on July 30, 1619. There were 22 delegates. A bicameral legislature was instituted prior to 1660.

In Bermuda, English settlement was first established in 1612. The first representative assembly opened on August 1, 1620. There were 16 deputies. The legislature remained unicameral.

At Massachusetts Bay, English settlement was first established in 1628. The first representative assembly opened on May 14, 1634. There were 24 deputies. The legislature became bicameral in 1644.

In Maryland, English settlement was first established in 1634. The first representative assembly for which we have records opened on January 25, 1638. There were 24 deputies. There is reason to believe that an earlier assembly may have occured but this has not yet been documented. The legislature became bicameral in 1650.

In Connecticut, English settlement was first established in 1636. The first representative assembly opened on May 1, 1637. There were 12 deputies. The legislature became bicameral in 1698.

At Plymouth, English settlement was first established in 1620. The first representative assembly opened on March 5, 1639. There were 17 deputies. The legislature remained unicameral.

At New Haven, English settlement was first established in 1638. The first representative assembly met in June 1639. There were 4 deputies. The legislature remained unicameral.

In Barbados, English settlement was first established in 1627. The first assembly met in 1639. There were 22 deputies. The legislature became bicameral in 1639.

In St. Christopher, English settlement was first established in 1624. The first representative assembly met in 1642. There were 24 deputies. The legislature became bicameral in 1672.

In Antigua, English settlement was first established in 1632. The first representative assembly met during 1644. We do not know the exact number of deputies. The legislature became bicameral 1682.

In Rhode Island, English settlement was first established in 1637. The first representative assembly opened on May 19, 1647. There were 24 deputies. The legislature became bicameral in 1696.

In Montserrat, English settlement was first established in 1632. The first representative assembly was held after 1654. We do not know the number of deputies. The legislature became bicameral in 1696.

In Nevis, English settlement was first established in 1628. The first representative assembly was held in 1658. We do not know how many deputies there were. The legislature became bicameral after 1672.

In Jamaica, English settlement was first established in 1655. The first representative assembly met on January 20, 1664. There were 20 deputies. The legislature became bicameral in 1664.

In North Carolina, English settlement was first established in 1663. The first representative assembly met in 1665. There were 12 deputies. The legislature became bicameral in 1691.

In South Carolina, English settlement was first established in 1670. The first representative assembly met in July 1671. There were 20 deputies. The legislature became bicameral in 1691.

In East Jersey, English settlement was first established in 1664. The first representative assembly opened on May 26, 1668. There were 10 deputies. The legislature became bicameral in 1672.

In West Jersey, English settlement was first established in 1675. The first representative assembly opened on November 21, 1681. There were 34 deputies. The legislature became bicameral in 1696.

In New Hampshire, English settlement was first established in 1633. The first representative assembly opened on March 16, 1680. There were 11 deputies. The legislature became bicameral in 1692.

In Pennsylvania, English settlement was first established in 1682. The first representative assembly opened on December 4, 1682. There were 42 deputies. The legislature remained unicameral.

In New York, English settlement was first established in 1664. The first representative assembly opened on October 17, 1683. There were 18 deputies. The legislature came bicameral in 1691.

Reviewing the rise of representative government in British North America and in the Caribbean we can discern the influence of Virginia, Massachusetts Bay, and Barbados in particular. Trade and commerce closely linked the British settlements as did marriages and intercolonial migration. Political developments in each area—and in England and the Continent—were closely observed and this knowledge added to the common store of experience in local self-government.

It is fair to say that Virginia paved the way for American liberty by establishing representative government in 1619. In New England, the example of Massachusetts Bay influenced directly the development of representative government in Connecticut and in Plymouth. Indirectly, it influenced New Hampshire, East Jersey, New York, and Nova Scotia. Barbados directly influenced the development of representative government in all of the Leeward Islands, Jamaica, and South Carolina.

Mr. President, all Americans can be proud of our centuries-long heritage of local self-government. I hope that we and our posterity remain free and perpetuate our institutions of representative government. The American people owe a debt of gratitude to President Ronald Reagan for the warning in his farewell address against the eradication of our historical memory. Studying the formative period of our great Republic—1607 to 1789—is a good place to begin to put President Reagan's words into individual action.

I yield the floor.

SECRETARY FRANK CARLUCCI

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, as President Bush's new administration takes office, I want to take a moment to congratulate a member of President Reagan's Cabinet for his exceptional service to the country.

Frank Carlucci's distinguished career of over three decades of public service stands as an inspiration to all those working for the Federal Government today and those young people considering Government service as a career in the future. After joining the State Department as a Foreign Service officer in 1956, Frank Carlucci rose through the ranks of the Foreign Service, eventually serving as Ambassador to Portugal during the mid-1970's.

Before 1981, Frank Carlucci served three successive Presidents of both political parties—President Nixon, President Ford, and President Carter—in key management positions in the Office of Economic Opportunity, the Office of Management and Budget; the Department of Health, Education and Welfare; and the Central Intelligence Agency. In all, Frank Carlucci has been nominated by four Presidents to serve in a total of seven positions requiring confirmation by the U.S. Senate. This is certainly a testament to his outstanding abilities and his distinguished career of Government service.

During the 8 years of President Reagan's administration Frank Carlucci has made an extremely important and valuable contribution to our national security—first as Deputy Secretary of Defense under Secretary Weinberger; then as Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs; and since November 1987 as Secretary of Defense.

As Deputy Secretary of Defense from 1981 to 1983, Secretary Carlucci was the driving force behind a series of 32 initiatives—later dubbed the "Carlucci initiatives"—to reform and improve the Defense Department's procurement process. These initiatives, such as stable budgeting and greater use of multiyear procurement, still stand as a health prescription for the continuing problems of the Defense acquisition system.

In January 1987 President Reagan brought Frank Carlucci back into Government service as Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs. Frank Carlucci's firm and steady hand went a long way toward rebuilding and restoring the National Security Council staff in the aftermath of the Iran/Contra revelations.

With Secretary Weinberger's retirement in 1987, President Reagan nominated Frank Carlucci to be Secretary of Defense. Although there was only a little more than a year left in the Reagan administration, Frank Carlucci moved with his customary energy and dedication to meet the challenges and address the problems he found in the Defense Department. He was a key administration spokesman for the INF Treaty in the Senate ratification debate, and later in implementing the treaty. He brought a sense of fiscal realism to the planning and budgeting process in the Pentagon. Working with Congress he developed the process that will result in the first closure in over a decade of unneeded military bases around the country. And throughout his tenure, he maintained a close and productive relationship with the Congress.

Mr. President, Frank Carlucci took over the Department of Defense in a period of declining defense budgets, and he inherited a 5-year Defense plan that had to be radically adjusted. His stewardship of the Defense Department has laid the foundation for the Bush administration to adjust to inevitable fiscal constraints without doing grave damage to our defense capabilities. In short, Frank Carlucci took on a difficult job and he did it well.

I congratulate Frank on his outstanding career in the service of our country and extend my best wishes for the future to him and his wife Marcia.

THE FISCAL CONDITION OF THE NATION'S HOSPITALS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the Congress has before it the formidable task of reducing the Federal deficit. In the coming months we will be called upon to make difficult decisions about reductions in many important domestic programs. While I am committed to making significant progress in reducing the deficit this year, I am concerned about the serious adverse impact further reductions in Medicare payments to hospitals will have on their fiscal viability.

According to the American Hospital Association, this year more than 50 percent of the Nation's hospitals will lose money treating Medicare patients. In 1989, the average hospital operating margin from Medicare will be minus (−) 5.5 percent. More than 26 percent of all hospitals will have losses of 20 percent or more.

In my home State of Maine, with a population of slightly over 1 million, there is a shortfall of more than $60 million between costs of services provided by hospitals to Medicare patients and reimbursements to hospitals for those services from the Federal Government.

The shortfall in Medicare payments to hospitals is no longer limited to rural hospitals; one out of every two urban hospitals will lose money treating Medicare patients. This year all categories of hospitals, except those over 685 beds, will lose money from Medicare.

The prospective payment system has been successful in controlling the costs of hospital services under Medicare. Hospitals have become more efficient and have provided more cost-effective services. But, over 400 hospitals have closed since PPS began in 1982—nationally, a hospital is closing every 5 days. While some of these closings represent more efficient delivery of acute care services, many of the most recent closings jeopardize access to care for all patients, not only Medicare beneficiaries.

Under current law, hospitals are scheduled to get the full market basket update for Medicare reimbursement. The fiscal year 1990 Reagan budget proposes a 1.5-percent reduction in market basket for all hospitals as part of an overall reduction in the Medicare Program of more than $3 billion. While the Congress has not yet seen the Bush administration's fiscal year 1990 budget, I expect that it will also include a significant reduction in Medicare spending.

It is probable that Congress will ultimately be forced to make reductions in Medicare as part of the overall effort to reduce the deficit. As we examine the specific proposals for savings in the program, it is my intention to work diligently within the context of the total budget to assure an update in Medicare payments to hospitals as close to full market basket as possible.

While striving for cost containment in the Medicare Program we must not allow access and quality of care to be jeopardized. I will work with my colleagues to achieve a reasonable balance that will allow the Nation's hospitals to continue to provide quality health care for the elderly and for all Americans.

THE 51ST INAUGURATION

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, when we as a nation recently inaugurated a new President of the United States we also commemorated the 200th anniversary of the first Presidential inauguration. From the flags representing 1789, 1889, and 1989, which draped the west front of the Capitol, to the Bible upon which Presidents George Washington and George Bush each took their oath of office, we were strongly reminded of the great continuity of our political institutions and traditions. It was a stirring moment.

Before these memories fade as we plunge into the work of the 101st Congress and the new Presidential administration, I wish to pay tribute to Senators WENDELL FORD, chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies, and TED STEVENS, ranking Republican member of the Senate Rules Committee for their superb planning of this event, and for the tasteful and decorous manner in which the inaugural ceremonies were conducted. Having attended many Presidential inaugurations during my three-dozen years in Congress, I was impressed by the carefully orchestrated and impeccably implemented program. Even the weather cooperated to make it a memorable day.

I also want to extend my congratulations to Mike Ruehling, the executive director of the joint committee, and to the many other staff members and citizens who contributed to this bicentennial celebration. We Americans, regardless of party, had much to be proud of as we witnessed the 51st consecutive Presidential inauguration. From 1789 to 1989, our system has permitted the peaceful transfer of political power, through the free vote of the people. That fact is indeed worth celebrating, and Senators FORD and STEVENS are to be commended for helping us to celebrate it in such an appropriate manner.

FAREWELL SENATE LUNCHEON HONORING SECRETARY OF STATE GEORGE P. SHULTZ

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, on January 18, Senator LUGAR and I had the honor to host a luncheon for Members of the Senate to pay tribute to George P. Shultz as he completed his distinguished service to the Nation as Secretary of State. A large number of Senators from both sides of the aisle were present to join in commending Secretary Shultz for his achievements in foreign policy and for the excellent bipartisan working relationship he established with the Senate. I believe that the proceedings at the luncheon will be of interest to all of us, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the proceedings were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROCEEDINGS AT THE LUNCHEON IN HONOR OF SECRETARY OF STATE GEORGE P. SHULTZ, HOSTED BY SENATOR EDWARD M. KENNEDY AND SENATOR RICHARD G. LUGAR, IN THE SENATE CAUCUS ROOM ON JANUARY 18, 1989

SENATOR KENNEDY

I want to welcome everyone to this luncheon. If you read your New York Times yesterday, you might have noticed a photograph of Secretary Shultz in Vienna on page 12 and another photograph of Senator Lugar in Korea on page 3. All of us were holding our breath as to whether our guest of honor and our co-host were going to be able to make it here today.

I think all of us in this room understand very well that aside from the President of the United States, Secretary Shultz is the most popular man in Washington. All of us feel very fortunate to have the opportunity to be one of the very selected few that will have the chance to say good-by to Secretary and Mrs. Shultz. We'll have more to say in just a moment. Senator Lugar.

SENATOR LUGAR

We're grateful you're here—and why don't we just be seated for our lunch.

SENATOR KENNEDY

Again, we are grateful that all of you could be here today to join in this tribute to Secretary Shultz. I would like to speak briefly about four of his accomplishments. First of all, there is the remarkable progress in moving toward arms control that he has achieved for us and for the world, and in moving us away from the possibility of nuclear confrontation. In particular, there is the success of the INF negotiations.

Secondly, I think of the progress that has been made in the cause of freedom in three very important countries of the world—in Chile, the Philippines and Korea—and in other parts of the world as well.

Thirdly, I think of the regional confrontations, whether in Southern Africa and Namibia, in the Persian Gulf, or in Afghanistan, and the important progress that has been made there.

And finally, in the area of human rights, with the signing of the treaty this week in Vienna, we know that there will be further progress toward liberty and human rights in Eastern Europe as well as in the Soviet Union. These are all areas of extraordinary achievement, and Secretary Shultz deserves great credit for them.

When President Kennedy was in Newport in 1962, he spoke to the Australian crew, which was there as the challenger for the America's Cup. He toasted the Australians, and he said, "Although the two crews may be flying opposing colors, they also race with each other against the wind and the sea."

Perhaps we can use the symbolism of sailing here. We sometimes tack in different directions, but all of us share a common goal in terms of our national interest. And all of us appreciate the respect that Secretary Shultz has shown for Congress as an institution. It was really what the Founding Fathers intended in the shaping and the fashioning of American foreign policy. And I am sure that if George Shultz had been alive two hundred years ago, he would have been one of the Founding Fathers.

Mr. Secretary, in this room are men and women of the Senate who have worked with you over the past six years. We have valued your friendship, we have welcomed the opportunity to work with you, and I would ask all of us now to raise our glasses and toast an outstanding patriot, a true statesman, and one of the great Secretaries of State of the United States of America. Secretary Shultz.

Mrs. Shultz, will you rise too and receive the accolades you richly deserve as one of our real stateswomen?

Since the election, large numbers of tourists have been going to the State of Maine to be close to the heart of power. Recently George Mitchell has become a very popular national leader—and I'm proud to introduce him now. George Mitchell.

SENATOR MITCHELL

Thank you very much, Ted. Of the many thousands of introductions I have received, I can say with total accuracy that yours is the most recent.

Mr. Secretary, I am pleased to join Senator Kennedy, Senator Lugar, and all of our colleagues in paying tribute to you today. For most human beings, life is essentially a quest—to first acquire, and then retain, self-respect and the respect of others. There is no single route to gaining respect. In my view, no better route exists than that of public service.

Mr. Secretary, you have exemplified the best of public service in American democracy. You served with dignity, with integrity, and with selflessness and loyalty that remind all of us who aspire to respect that they are their own rewards. All of us here have enjoyed, on a personal level, our relationship with you. And on a professional level, and as public servants ourselves, we have welcomed your success. You leave office having earned the friendship and respect of all who have come into contact with you. But perhaps, more importantly, because of your accomplishments, to which Senator Kennedy alluded, you leave with the sure knowledge that all across this country—indeed throughout the world—there are millions of people who have never met you, perhaps have never even heard your name, but whose lives will be safer and better because of your efforts. No person could ask for anything more than that in life. You have our best wishes and our gratitude. Thank you very much.

SENATOR KENNEDY

We have been fortunate in the Senate to have our own true statesman in foreign policy, the Senator from Indiana. Perhaps more than any other member of this body, he contributed to the achievements of the Secretary of State and has the greatest insight into those achievements—my friend, Senator Lugar.

SENATOR LUGAR

It's an honor to co-host with Ted this luncheon for Secretary and Mrs. Shultz. I would just make three points about the Secretary.

The first, I suppose, is obvious, but so important. We have been involved in the Foreign Relations Committee in hearings on Jim Baker, and in thinking through with him what the Constitution calls for in foreign policy and the relationship between this body, the Secretary of State, and the President of the United States.

George Shultz always instinctively understood the Constitution and what was involved, and he enjoyed, I believe, his consultation with each one of us. Certainly, he was invaluable in coming, not only to the committee but to S-407 and to every place in which we wanted to meet—in small and large groups—to think through the important matters of the country, or at least to be briefed on what the Administration's thoughts were.

Beyond that, he understood, as someone who had served in the Executive Branch, the responsibility that lies with the President, and how important the perceptions and the realities are in that respect. He has performed a magnificent service in uniting the Congress and the Executive in times when those roles were not well understood, and still are not. He gives to his successor an opportunity to improve upon that record, but it is a very, very strong and solid record of consultation, and of regard and confidence.

The second thought I have is that George Shultz is a patriot in the very best sense of the word. Each one of us who has travelled abroad has visited with persons who have a very high regard for George Shultz. In fact, I cannot recall the head of a single country on this earth, whether it be friend or foe of the United States, that does not have a very high regard—if not a sense of friendship—with our Secretary of State. Perhaps there is one exception. I think it's fair to say, that each of them would represent to those of us who asked that the Secretary always carried the United States flag proudly. He carried our position and our portfolio—with no doubt whatever as to whose interest he was serving. And he did so with a grace and with a good humor and a lot of energy in ways that made friends. But at the same time, very clearly, the position of the United States of America was enhanced in each case.

And finally, I would just say his efforts were not only constitutional and patriotic, but they were indefatigable. The Secretary was asked in this past year why, in the intractable situation in the Middle East, he was still doing shuttle diplomacy—going from capital to capital and leader to leader. Many journalists suggested that it was an exercise in futility, that any Secretary of State ought to understand that, and that to keep raising the hopes of the world was ridiculous. But the Secretary simply pointed out that he was only going to be a Secretary of State once, that there were only a few more months and weeks available, and furthermore, that the need was imperative for the United States of America to have a presence and to be obviously pushing and pushing and always trying. It's only those cases in which we did not have a presence that people began to ask questions.

The Secretary's presence has made an enormous difference in the legacy he passes along. As we reviewed some of the issues with Secretary Baker, it is apparent that in almost every way Secretary Shultz has tried to tidy up affairs and give the new Administration every break in terms of having either a clean slate or a better one on which to work. So for all of this, we are grateful to you, Mr. Secretary, and this luncheon is at least a small way in which we offer our tribute today. We thank you.

It's my privilege now to introduce our Republican Leader, who has worked so closely with the Secretary and who has made such a difference in these constitutional procedures that I mentioned—Senator Bob Dole.

SENATOR BOB DOLE

Mr. Secretary, Mrs. Shultz. I guess the question I've always had is—where do you get your laundry done? I turn on my TV at night and you're in Cairo; I turn it on in the morning and you're in London; and some days you're even in Washington. You've either got a big wardrobe or a fast laundry, and I want to check it out before you leave town.

But like everyone in this room, I've had many, many opportunities to work with Secretary Shultz. In fact, he's invited me to come to breakfast to talk over issues—but he eats at 7:00 a.m. I said no thanks, I don't get hungry until about 8:30. So he did make every effort. And I can recall the meetings in my office—whether it was arms sales or arms control or something else. I can recall the Secretary's determination to remain an independent voice when he thought some in the Administration were pushing him a bit too far. I can recall a lot about George Shultz—his tireless efforts and his leadership—that made us all proud to be Americans. There were frustrations. And I'm certain there were frustrations sometimes when the Senate would hold up 25 or 30 ambassadors for three or four weeks. I know that was frustrating, because you used to call me from around the world—collect.

But I can also say that you've had an impact on part of my family. When Elizabeth was asked to be Secretary of Labor, she recalled that George Shultz had been Secretary of Labor, and she concluded the job must have great appeal and must be a good job. And that's a true story. Her hearings are tomorrow afternoon, and we hope she can slip through again—if you can work on Senator Kennedy.

But in any event, I want to say on behalf of myself and my colleagues who have served and worked with you that we appreciate your leadership. As I said in my letter to you at the end of the year, you're a great American and a great patriot, and you make us proud. Jim Baker has big shoes to fill, as I said yesterday.

And I pay tribute to Mrs. Shultz as well, because she also covered the world for America, for all of us, and we appreciate that too.

So George, you deserve a rest. You deserve a little time off. If it gets too boring out there, you can always run for Governor of California. Thank you.

SENATOR KENNEDY

Now, it is my privilege to introduce a statesman on our side of the aisle in the Senate, the distinguished Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Senator Claiborne Pell.

SENATOR PELL

I just want to express congratulations to Secretary Shultz for the work he did and for his cooperation with our committee. He was a man of strong conviction. He would agree to disagree, but he didn't change his mind very often. I think we had a good relationship based on frankness. We each knew what we were doing. The Committee felt it was doing the right thing, the Secretary knew he was—but usually some kind of compromise worked out. We weren't able to work out the house for the Secretary or his successors. But we had other successes that I think we shared. So I just wanted to express my regret that you're leaving, and hope to stay in touch with you.

SENATOR KENNEDY

We have a little gift on behalf of all of us. It's an Irish Waterford Crystal globe. We've taken the liberty of adding a Baccarat Crystal tiger contemplating the globe. I would like to read the inscription: "Presented to Secretary of State George P. Shultz by Members of the United States Senate in appreciation of his wisdom, guidance, dedication, and achievement in the nation's service and in the cause of democracy, peace and understanding among all nations." Mrs. Shultz will you come up too? You're a legend for your service as well.

SECRETARY SHULTZ

I can't tell you how much I appreciate this luncheon. The fact that you're here; the wonderful things that have been said—and we'll certainly treasure this great gift.

I have appreciated very much the relationships I've had with all the people in this room. We have worked on a bipartisan basis around the globe. When I see calls that we should return to a bipartisan foreign policy, I can only respond that, basically, I think we've got one, and we've had one. We have a few exceptions—one in particular where we haven't had a bipartisan approach, and I think the fact that the results are unsatisfactory shows how important it is to obtain a strong, broad base of support. I was very struck in reading Jim Baker's testimony to note the heavy emphasis he laid on that, and I believe properly so.

You spoke of our orientation to the interests of the United States—the recognition that you are here to do everything you can for our country, and so am I. Trusting each other—that is where we come from. And if we have differences, it is not a difference about that objective, it's a difference about how we get there. And since we do have that firm and solid conviction about our country, it makes it possible to work through these differences and come out the right way.

I can't say I've always enjoyed testifying. Basically, the process of public testimony is an excellent thing. But I'd have to say that I have benefitted the most, and enjoyed the most, the sessions we've had in S-407—sometimes with small groups, sometimes with, as I remember, as many as 75 or 80 Senators present in a more informal back and forth. Those have been excellent, and I've really appreciated the opportunity to have such sessions with you.

But I would like to wind up here by giving an example of something that always sticks in the mind as the right attitude, and comes through to me as showing the attitudes in the United States Senate. I've had the privilege for a long time—decades—of knowing Mike Mansfield. And, of course, in his capacity as Ambassador to Japan, we've worked very closely together. I used to have in my office a big globe—you know the kind that has a light inside and you can see all around the world. When I first became Secretary of State and new ambassadors were going off to their posts or came back for consultations, I'd talk to them—and then I'd say at the end of our consultation, "I know you've been investigated and confirmed by the Senate, and the President's nominated you and all that, but you've got one more test you have to pass." Usually their face would stiffen up a little bit. I'd say, "Well, you have to go over to that globe and show me that you can find your country on the globe." So, they'd go over and they'd spin it around, and unerringly put their finger on the place they were going.

One day, about 4 or 5 months after I became Secretary of State, Mike Mansfield came in and we had a good talk about Japan, and I said to him, "Well, Mike, I have to apply this rule to everybody equally, and I know you've been out there for a long while, but before you can go back, you have to go over and show me that you can locate your country on the globe." So Mike went over and he spun the globe around, put his hand on the United States and said, "That's my country." And it is a thought that stuck with me, that this wonderful man, different from any other person who came in, reacted to that question that way.

I've always thought of that incident when I have worked with the Members of the Senate or the House. And as I have tried to think of my role, I remembered Mike Mansfield saying, "That's my country"—not just a piece of geography, but a set of values and ideas, things we stand for.

So I am deeply grateful for this luncheon and the expression of support and recognition and friendship and public service that we all undertake together. Thank you Ted and Dick and George and Bob and all of you for being here. I appreciate it very, very much.

BIOGRAPHICAL DIRECTORY OF THE UNITED STATES CONGRESS

BICENTENNIAL EDITION

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, last Thursday it was my pleasure, as chairman of the Senate Bicentennial Commission, to accept the first volumes of the bicentennial edition of the "Biographical Directory of the United States Congress, 1774-1989," and to present copies to Senators MITCHELL and DOLE.

The new "Biographical Directory," last published in 1971, was authorized in 1985 as a major component in the celebration on Congress' 200th anniversary. For this bicentennial edition, the authorizing resolution directed the Historical Offices of the Senate and House to revise and expand the existing entries as well as to add the necessary new ones. Within those offices, the volume's two chief editors have been hard at work ever since. Particular credit is due to Dr. Kathryn Jacob, editor of the Senate entries, and to Dr. Bruce Ragsdale, who edited the House entries. I might add that this volume represents the first time since the directory's inception in 1859 that professional historians have had a hand in its preparation. It is much the better for their critical skills.

Within the 2,100 pages of this handsome work can be found biographies of the more than 11,000 men and women who have served in the Congress of the United States. I commend this volume to my colleagues. Our own biographies therein make us as one with all of our predecessors. There is much in the directory to interest every American, but the bicentennial edition will prove to be an especially invaluable aid to scholars. What better way to celebrate the 200th anniversary of this great institution than with a volume that provides the essential first step to understanding the careers of those who have served during Congress' first two centuries.

TERRY OLSON MOVES TO OMB

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, for the last 2 years Ms. Terryle "Terry" Olson has been the secretary of the Commerce, Justice, State, the Judiciary Subcommittee which I chair on the Committee on Appropriations. Previous to joining the subcommittee, Terry worked for the late Senator Milton Young of North Dakota and Senator GORTON of Washington. Next Monday, Terry will begin important new duties with the Associate Director of Legislative Affairs of the Office of Management and Budget.

Mr. President, I want to publicly thank Terry for all her help over the last 2 years. I am sure I speak for Terry's numerous Senate friends in wishing her well in her new assignment.

THE SUCCESS OF THE INAUGURAL CEREMONY

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, it has been a great honor and privilege for me to serve as chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies for the Bicentennial Presidential Inauguration. After the inaugural ceremony had concluded last Friday, President Bush told me how pleased he was that the day had gone so well, and I would like to thank all the people who worked so long and hard behind the scenes to make the 1989 Presidential inauguration such a success.

First and foremost, I'd like to thank the members of the joint inaugural committee staff, Mike Ruehling, the executive director, and his assistants, Lisa Dodge and Stephen Gray. I would also like to thank the members of my personal staff and members of the Rules Committee staff who so ably assisted in planning and carrying out the day's activities. In particular, I would like to note the efforts of Gail Martin, who did such a splendid job coordinating the inaugural luncheon, with the assistance of Carol Blessington and Kimberly Austin.

The contributions of the Senate Sergeant at Arms, Henry Giugni; his assistant, Patty McNally; the House Sergeant at Arms, Jack Russ; and his assistants, Bob Fischer and Elaine Connolly; and all the men and women of their staffs who joined in this effort should be recognized, as well as those of George White, the Architect of the Capitol; Tom Ward, the inauguration's supervising engineer; Don Sarles; and the entire Architect's staff, which was responsible for building the inaugural stands, decorating the Capitol's west front, and coordinating so many other details essential to the program.

The inauguration was so capably recorded for posterity by Senate Photographic Studio director Alan Porter, House Office of Photography director Keith Jewell, and Senate Recording Studio director Jim Grahne, and their respective staffs.

Security arrangements worked smoothly, as did vehicular and pedestrian movements, thanks to a truly outstanding job by the U.S. Capitol Police. My appreciation goes out to Chief Frank Kerrigan, Assistant Chief Harry Grevey, Inspector Jim Dameron, Lt. Ray Carson, officers Rich Wolford, Scott Flax, and Larry Thompson, and the entire police force. In addition, the Joint Inaugural Committee received outstanding support from the U.S. Secret Service, especially Director John Simpson, and Special Agents Jim Varey and Jim Peacock.

The most comprehensive ever medical plan for an inauguration was developed and implemented under the direction of the attending physician, Dr. William M. Narva, and Robert F. Moran and Gene Early of his staff. This was a significant first which will serve as a blueprint for future inaugurations.

Once again, credentials for the more than 7,000 media that covered the inauguration were processed expeditiously and with efficiency by Max Barber, superintendent of the Senate Radio-TV Gallery; Bob Peterson, superintendent of the Senate Press Gallery; Maurice Johnson, superintendent of the Senate Press Photographers' Gallery; and Roy L. McGhee, superintendent of the Senate Periodical Press Gallery. Media arrangements for the luncheon were coordinated by Ruth M. Tate, superintendent of the House Radio-TV Correspondent's Gallery.

Numerous compliments have been received regarding the design and content of the ceremony program. These materials demonstrate the highest degree of talent and professionalism and were produced by the Government Printing Office. In participation, I would like to single out Charles Cook, John Sapp, DiAnn Baum, Walter Burrows, Robert Colvin, and Jimmy Payne for their significant contributions.

The Senate Historian, Richard Baker, was of invaluable assistance in researching the history of past inaugurals for the editorial program text. The Senate Curator, James Ketchum, likewise was a source of constant and beneficial advice and counsel, as was his associate, Diane Skvarla.

I would also like to thank the military district of Washington's Office of Ceremonies and Special Events, including its director, Tom Groppel, Maj. Mark Keegan, Jr. Maj., Tom Bishop, and the hundreds of other men and women of the Armed Forces who made important contributions to the Inaugural Ceremonies.

The Joint Inaugural Committee also enjoyed a productive working relationship with the American Bicentennial Presidential Inaugural Committee, including the cochairpersons, Penne Korth and Bobby Holt; the executive director, Stephen M. Studdert; and Craig Helsing, Paul Powell, and Bill Fritts of the Congressional Liaison Office; and individual group coordinators, Karen Castleman, Ardis Johnson, Judy McLennan, and Ray Briscuso, among countless others. We also received outstanding cooperation and assistance from the staffs of President Bush and Vice President Quayle in coordinating all aspects of the ceremony.

Finally, I would like to thank my colleagues, Senator Majority Leader GEORGE MITCHELL, Senator TED STEVENS, Speaker JIM WRIGHT, House Majority Leader THOMAS FOLEY, and House Minority Leader ROBERT MICHEL for their active involvement in helping the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies fulfill its mandate.

Many, many others had a role in making the events of the day go smoothly. It would be impossible to thank them all by name, but to each and to all, I extend my heartfelt thanks on behalf of the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies and the entire Congress for a job well done.

SOME BASIC PRINCIPLES FOR HANDLING THE THRIFT CRISIS

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, over the last week, the thrift crisis has hit the public consciousness in a way it never has before, because the administration started talking about taxing savings. A number of administration officials evidently forgetting their grounding in the Richard Darman "Duck" test, tried to tell the American pubic that charging savers for each $100 they have on deposit at a thrift, bank or credit union is a user fee instead of a tax. Unfortunately for the administration, however, the so-called fee "quacked," making it all too clear that it was a duck of the tax variety.

The American public was not fooled. They know it is a tax, and they don't like it. They know they did not cause the thrift crisis, and they know what the administration seems to have forgotten—that we need to encourage people to save more, not less.

This is supposed to be a savvy administration. It is filled with people with years and years of Washington experience. Yet, the first proposal they make has the effect of undermining people's confidence in our deposit insurance system, confidence that has been built up so laboriously over the last 50 years and more.

It is almost impossible to understate the seriousness of the thrift crisis. Fully one-third of the savings and loan industry is in real jeopardy, and the economic condition of another third is marginal. The crisis would be much more serious, however, without the existence of deposit insurance. Without deposit insurance, we would be facing a savings and loan system that has totally collapsed; without deposit insurance that collapse would probably cause our whole eocnomy to collapse.

The administration has been faced with overwhelming opposition to its savings tax "option." Instead of taking the opportunity to try to restore the confidence in the deposit insurance system its mistake so dangerously undermined, though, the administration fudged, instead, talking about how congressional leaks are undermining bipartisan cooperation to solve the underlying crisis.

Even worse, the administration floated a new option—increasing deposit insurance premiums that banks and S&L's pay and combining that with a somewhat lower tax on savings. That is the same thing. It is still a disincentive to save. It demonstrates that the administration has not learned its lesson from last week's controversy.

I am the first to say that we should be trying to find a bipartisan solution to this problem, and I want to work with the administration. However, congressional opposition to the savings tax was not based on a partisan desire to score points at the administration's expense. The strong, bipartisan, congressional opposition was based on one simple fact—the idea was simply terrible and has no place in any proposed solution to the thrift crisis.

The Treasury Department knows what is needed. The problem is that they are trying to avoid the options that make the best public policy sense in order to try to sneak through the next budget year without having to reconsider the President's campaign pledge not to increase taxes.

Treasury knows that it will take between $50 and $100 billion—and perhaps even more—to resolve the thrift crisis, and Treasury knows that this money should be spent over the next 3 years or so. To keep faith with the no-tax campaign pledge, however, they are trying to keep the spending "off-budget," whether that makes sense or not. To try to keep that pledge, Treasury is being forced to consider departing from the basic principles that should guide a solution to this problem.

I have not discussed the thrift problem with the Treasury Department or with any other administration official. They have not asked for my advice. Nonetheless, in the spirit of bipartisan cooperation that I truly believe must guide us in resolving this issue, I am going to take this opportunity to talk briefly about the basic principles upon which a solution to the thrift problem should be based.

The first principle is that the solution should be cost effective. The sums involved in resolving the thrift crisis are staggering. We need a solution that attempts to minimize costs. If we borrow money to finance a solution, therefore, as we must, interest costs must be held to the absolute minimum.

I have read in the newspapers that Treasury is considering a $90 billion bonding plan. If that plan is to be cost effective, we must be sure that the bonds are issued at Treasury bonding rates. If the bonds cost 1 percent more than Treasury bonds, the additional cost would be $18 billion over their likely 20-year life. If the bonds are only 50 basis points over the cost of Treasury bonds—one-half of 1 percent in English—the cost would still be $9 billion greater over 20 years.

Interest costs are likely to be between $7 and $9 billion a year even if we are able to borrow at Treasury rates. It would be extremely poor public policy to inflate that cost by another $450 million to $900 million annually.

There is another aspect of cost effectiveness that is also worth discussing briefly—having sufficient resources to minimize the overall cost. That means having enough resources to refinance and reduce the costs of the transactions FLSIC has already completed. FSLIC's solutions to date have been extraordinarily expensive, and the financing costs and the tax costs can be significantly reduced if they are refinanced. FSLIC completed over $38 billion of these deals by the end of December. Frankly, in my view, they were not good deals. To take just one example, five troubled savings and loans, losing $560 million annually, were sold by FSLIC to a new party. All the troubled loans were guaranteed by FSLIC, so the acquiring party was essentially purchasing a "clean" thrift. The purchaser agreed to put in slightly more than $300 million to capitalize the new thrift, but received in return tax breaks worth more than $900 million. That is the kind of deal I think must be refinanced and it is the kind of deal that can be refinanced with real cost savings to FSLIC and the Treasury.

The second principle is that as much of the financing as possible should come from the savings and loan industry. It is the savings and loan insurance fund that is in trouble, and the savings and loan industry must, therefore, do everything it can to restore the fund. This will help reduce the risk that the taxpayer will have to finance some part of the solution; at the very least, it will help minimize any taxpayer participation that might prove to be necessary.

As we seek to maximize the savings and loan industry's contribution, however, we must keep in mind that burdening the industry too greatly will create further insolvencies and create incentives for the industry to continue risky practices that we are trying to end. Thrifts are already paying 20.8 cents per $100 in insured deposits as an insurance premium. That is 12.5 cents higher than banks are paying for their insurance, and we need to be careful not to raise thrifts' cost to the point that they are no longer competitive.

That leads to the third principle, which is that any solution should not create potential new problems. Unfortunately, it seems that Treasury is already considering violating this principle. Today's New York Times is carrying a story indicating that Treasury is considering raising deposit premiums for thrifts and banks. That creates risks for thrifts that I have already briefly described. It also creates real risks for the banking industry and depository institutions generally. There is already a considerable likelihood that the FDIC premium will be increased because the FDIC fund needs the money. Raising the premium now will help ensure that the FDIC fund never faces the kind of problems FSLIC is facing now. However, the FDIC fund will not have available to it the resources it will need if those resources are diverted to solve the current FSLIC problem. Further, banks and other depository institutions will be handicapped in their ability to compete with institutions like mutual funds and other sectors of the financial services industry.

The fourth principle is that we need to go after those whose negligence and criminal behavior contributed to this problem. Some savings and loan executives treated their thrifts like they were Atlantic City casinos. Others were nothing more than thieves. They should be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. We should be sure that they have not profited from their greed, their negligence, or their criminal behavior.

The fifth principle is that the solution should contain the kind of reforms necessary to ensure that we are never faced with this kind of problem again. This means raising thrift capital standards to the bank level; they are currently only half the bank level, and over half the industry doesn't even meet these lower standards. This means separating FSLIC from the Home Loan Bank Board to eliminate the conflict between the Board's role to promote the thrift industry and FSLIC's role as insurer. This means the kind of regulatory reform that will rein in the kind of excessive risk-taking we have seen.

Finally, any solution should be on-budget. I think we undermine our own credibility and the budget process to even consider spending $90 billion or more over the next 3 years without including those sums in the budget. If the budget process is to work, if we are ever to eliminate the persistent budget deficits, we need to be honest. This is too much money to try to hide. We should be honest with the American people.

This is by no means a complete solution to the thrift crisis. It is not even a complete outline. These principles, however, will help produce the best public policy solution, and as the late Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago often said, "good government is good politics." I hope the administration will take his admonition to mind and practice a bit of good government. I am confident that if they do, they will find the kind of bipartisan cooperation they are seeking.

A TRIBUTE TO JUDGE SEYMOUR GELBER

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, today I rise to pay tribute to a very deserving gentleman and jurist—Judge Seymour Gelber of Miami, FL. Judge Gelber is slated to retire soon from the bench in Miami where he has served 15 years on the 11th judicial circuit for Dade County. He retires as the chief judge of the juvenile court division which he has served with a tremendous commitment to south Florida's young people.

As he retires, Judge Gelber leaves the bench with an impressive record of public service. He has served as a chief assistant district attorney, a faculty member at the University of Miami Law School and, finally, as a juvenile court judge.

During my tenure as a legislator, I have been involved in drafting legislation designed to help our state and local government officials fight the war against drugs. I am heartened to know of Judge Gelber and of his remarkable efforts in this important arena. As a community leader in Miami's war against drugs, he has been an innovator and an educator. From a model juvenile drug rehabilitation center, which bears his name, to dozens of delinquency programs he has initiated, the south Florida area has been greatly enriched through his efforts.

Judge Gelber has not given his entire focus to our drug problem. He has also somehow found a great deal of time to address the greater problem of juvenile delinquency. He has expressed, through his many speeches and publications, his belief that we, as a society, need to demand an aggressive and intelligent community response to the problems associated with juvenile delinquency.

Today, I salute Judge Gelber and the Miami Boys Club which he has so selflessly served. I also thank him for his tireless efforts for the public good. I offer him my best wishes and God's blessing as he and his wife, Edith, enter well-deserved retirement from public service.

NATIONAL COMMUNITY COLLEGE MONTH

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, as many of my colleagues know, February is National Community College Month. Community colleges play a major role in educating millions of students in this country, many of whom would otherwise not have the opportunity to pursue higher education. I would like to take a few moments to acknowledge the importance of these schools to our country.

More than half of all freshmen today choose community colleges to continue their education. That's more than 5 million students across the country.

Community colleges help make higher education affordable and convenient for many students who might not otherwise have the opportunity to broaden their knowledge and improve their skills. Tuition at a community college averages half the cost of public 4-year colleges and universities and many students are able to save money by living at home.

Community colleges are able to meet the diverse needs and interests of their students by offering specialized services. They have been involved in innovative partnerships with businesses and industries, as well as local elementary schools and high schools to develop programs that address the interests of their communities.

Because of their community orientation, community colleges attract diverse student bodies. They offer full- and part-time programs to meet the needs of young and old, men and women, students right out of high school, students returning to school, workers seeking retraining, and seniors seeking a personal enrichment.

As America changes, community colleges change with it. Through their flexible approach to education, they provide vital educational opportunities to many people and help us meet the challenges we face as a Nation. I am pleased today to pay tribute to their successes and achievements.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. MIKULSKI). Morning business is now closed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will now go into executive session to consider the nomination of Carla Hills to be U.S. Trade Representative with time thereon for debate limited to 40 minutes.

The clerk will report the nomination of Mrs. Hills.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Carla Anderson Hills of California to be U.S. Trade Representative, Executive Office of the President, rank of Ambassador.

The Senate proceeded to consider the nomination.

Mr. BENTSEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The chairman of the Finance Committee.

Mr. BENTSEN. Madam President, I have the pleasure of rising to support the nomination of Carla Hill as U.S. Trade Representative. The Finance Committee favorably reported her nomination by a unanimous vote on January 27th.

I think the United States faces one of the toughest trade challenges it has ever faced. The era that is coming is not one so much of military confrontation, but one of economic competition. Much of it will be with some of our best allies and our best friends, who are able, tough competitors despite the decline in the value of the dollar. That is an action that we should have taken and one that I was supporting and pushing for a long time. I recall when Secretary Regan was in the administration. He felt that no action should be taken to bring the dollar down. He kept saying that the strength of the dollar represented the strength of America. He was also saying the budget deficit did not make any difference. Fortunately, you had Secretary Baker who came in and reversed that policy insofar as the strength of the dollar and brought about the G-7 meetings. We made considerable progress in trying to get the dollar more back in balance. But further limitation in the dollar and bringing down its value is not an answer that is going to be very productive in the future, in my opinion. We have to do more to increase the productivity of our country, a reawakening of our country.

Europe today is moving toward economic union in 1992—bringing down barriers within that great market with well over 300 million people, making it the largest consumer market in the world. I believe it is going to offer us great opportunities and also some problems. It is my hope that we will see some of the protectionism that we have had in the past in the European Community disappear as Europeans begin to participate in that exercise. Having the advantage of that kind of a market, and the competition that results therefrom, will make Europeans less concerned about competition from abroad. It is my hope that we will see a further opening up of that market to U.S. producers.

In countries all around the globe, we have seen American exporters of goods and services running into disabling limitations, barriers to our products, protection for industries within that country that in many instances they felt were not competitive at the moment, but wanted to protect them until they were.

Furthermore, we have seen in some of those countries—we have seen this in Taiwan, we have seen it in South Korea—is not the acquiescence, not the kind of cooperation, that we felt should come about in trying to get the dollar and their currencies back into a relative balance that would be productive for both sides. We have seen the Central Bank, particularly in Taiwan, bring about the largest surplus of any country that even approached its size and manipulating that currency to the benefit of its own producers.

To try to deal with these kinds of challenges, the 1988 Omnibus Trade Act gives additional tools and power to the Chief Executive. We have strengthened his hand and his authority in working out trade agreements. We also strengthened the hand of the USTR within the administration, ensuring that the USTR becomes the chief spokesman on trade.

As significant a turning point in our trade policy as the 1988 Act is, it is not in itself self-executing. It needs an administration that is determined to set a positive course on trade, to do what is necessary to bolster legitimate U.S. commercial interests. It will also take a tough, effective USTR.

I have looked closely at Mrs. Hills' record. I think the President has made an excellent choice. Mrs. Hills has the experience and the skills to be an able trade negotiator, and a forceful trade advocate for U.S. trade policy and U.S. interests. She is a seasoned antitrust lawyer. She understands business, both through her work representing business clients and her service on corporate boards. She also is a proven leader and administrator, having served previously as Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and as Assistant Attorney General. She is a superb lawyer.

Believe me, Mrs. Hills will have to be good at what she does because there will be no time for learning on the job at leisure. A good example of that is the fact that the Japanese Prime Minister is coming over here early, at a time when we have some concerns and controversy with the Government of Japan in talking about our agreements, what we have done on superconductors, what we might be talking about on section 301, and its application.

I hope we will have time to get our forces in order and that Mrs. Hills has time to add to her staff, and be prepared to be a participant in any negotiations that might take place.

The 1988 act requires a number of crucial trade decisions to be made within the first 6 months of the new administration, and a breakthrough in the Uruguay round negotiations is being sought by the beginning of April. That is not going to be easy. We are not particularly optimistic about it. It means she is going to have to put together her team very quickly and begin moving on those issues immediately. That is why I had agreed to try to hold her confirmation hearing early, hold it on January 4. She was quite ready to do that. But as I recall, the administration and the executive branch had not completed the paperwork at that point and, therefore, we were not able to do it then.

But at the confirmation hearing last Friday I was impressed—and I believe other committee members were as well—with the way that Mrs. Hills answered the questions. She was forthright, she was direct, she was to the point, and she was not evasive in her answers.

I am especially encouraged by one aspect of her testimony before the committee. She acknowledged that developing and implementing an effective U.S. trade policy is going to take a very close partnership, a communication, a working together between the executive branch and the Congress. Under the Constitution neither branch can do the entire job. It is a divided responsibility. While the Congress has the authority to regulate international commerce, it cannot negotiate international agreements. The President has the authority to negotiate with foreign countries but he cannot implement the results of those trade agreements without coming back to the Congress for us to enact the domestic legislation to make them fruitful. Mrs. Hills has pledged to work hard to sustain and enhance that kind of a partnership.

In addition, Mrs. Hills expects to work closely with the business community in forging trade policies, to get the input from those who are facing the competition. She also told the Finance Committee that she will make use of the strengthened tools given the USTR in the Trade Act, including section 301. That is going to be controversial as we go along. There will be many countries that have had protectionist barriers that are going to want very much to find an exception to the application of section 301.

All these commitments contrast sharply with the go-it-alone attitude of the last administration. When Congress struggled to establish a coherent trade policy for this country, the Reagan administration was indifferent. When we drafted what was to become the Omnibus Trade Act, that administration opposed our efforts. Mrs. Hills' testimony gives me reason to hope those days are behind us. The Finance Committee plans to hold her to her commitment to working together, and I look forward to combining our efforts to make America economically strong and vigorous.

For that reason, I plan a series of intensive Finance Committee hearings early this year on oversight of implementation of the Trade Act and the progress of the Uruguay round negotiations. The committee will want to keep close tabs on the administration's trade activities and to exchange views with Mrs. Hills on trade policy.

The challenges ahead will certainly put Mrs. Hills to the test. But I have confidence in her ability, and so does the Finance Committee by the unanimous vote that was cast. I think she is going to be a forceful advocate and a tough negotiator for our side. I urge the Senate to confirm this nomination. Let us put her to work.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Madam President, I will not add to what the chairman has said in terms of the obligations of this position that Carla Hills is about to undertake or the seriousness of the job. I simply comment in the following manner on her character.

Every now and then we get new members of the Cabinet come on whom we do not know. Sometimes they are rough-cuts and, given a number of years, they turn out to be polished stones. Others, after a couple of years, still turn out to be rough-cuts. So we do not know ahead of time. But in this case, we start with a polished gem. This women we know.

We dealt with her a decade and a half ago when she was Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. We have seen her as Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Division of the U.S. Department of Justice. We have seen her as assistant U.S. attorney. This is an experienced person, who comes to us fully prepared for this job. I do not have the slightest doubt in the world that she is going to be dynamite as our U.S. Trade Representative.

We could not ask for more at the start; and, 2, 3, 4, or 5 years from now, if she is still in the job, we will say, "Aren't we lucky to have had this person?"

So I enthusiastically and overwhelmingly second the chairman's comments about her and say that we are lucky in this country to have her again available for public service.

Madam President, the time on our side is under my control. I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the time on this side be under the control of Senator DANFORTH, who is the ranking member on the Trade Subcommittee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I thank the Chair.

Mr. THURMOND. Madam President, will the Senator yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. DANFORTH. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. Madam President, I rise in strong support of the nomination of Carla Hills to be U.S. Trade Representative [USTR].

Mrs. Hills has had distinguished academic, political, and civic careers. She received her bachelor's degree from Stanford University, her law degree from Yale University and studied at Oxford University.

Before coming to Washington, Mrs. Hills served for 3 years as assistant U.S. attorney, Civil Division, Los Angeles and later cofounded a law firm in Los Angeles where she was a partner from 1962-74. While in California, she served as an adjunct professor at the University of California at Los Angeles Law School where she taught antitrust law and wrote a book on antitrust law.

Mrs. Hills has also had a distinguished career of public service in Washington. From 1975-77, she served ably in the Ford administration as the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development and before that at the Department of Justice as Assistant Attorney General, Civil Division (1974-75). Both in the administration and at Justice, she was only the third woman to hold such a position. Further in 1976, Time magazine named her 1 of the 10 women of the year. Currently, Mrs. Hills is a comanaging partner of the Washington, DC, office of the law firm of Weil, Gotshal & Manges.

In addition to her impressive professional career, Mrs. Hills has also served on a number of corporate boards, professional organizations and commissions. While in California, she was president of both the Federal Bar Association and the Women Lawyers Association. She currently serves on the Board of International Business Machines Corp., Corning Glass Works and the Federal National Mortgage Association.

In addition, she has been chairman of the Urban Institute since 1983 and is a member of the Executive Committee of the American Agenda, cochaired by Presidents Ford and Carter. She has also served as Vice Chairman of President Reagan's Commission on Housing and as a member of President Reagan's Commission on Defense Management. Previously, she served as a trustee of the Brookings Institution, the Rand Corp. and as a member of the Trilateral Commission.

Once confirmed as USTR, Mrs. Hills will have the challenging job of representing the interests of the United States in negotiations in the international trade arena and will be instrumental in shaping our trade policy. With an estimated trade deficit of $135 billion for 1988, Mrs. Hills certainly has her work cut out for her. However, she will be, without a doubt, a tough negotiator and represent the United States well.

I urge my colleagues to support the nomination of Mrs. Hills.

Mr. BENTSEN. Madam President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. I thank the chairman of the Finance Committee for yielding.

Madam President, I am pleased to rise in strong support of the nomination of Carla Hills to be the U.S. Trade Representative. This position is one of the most demanding jobs in Washington, and it has assumed even greater importance as the role of international trade has grown in our economy. Mrs. Hills has an extraordinary set of credentials, too exhaustive to recount at this time. Suffice it to say, I am confident that she will do an outstanding job in representing the United States in this critical position.

Mrs. Hills will be entering this position at a difficult time. She will be succeeding an outstanding U.S. Trade Representative, Clayton Yeutter, whom the Bush administration is indeed fortunate to retain as Agriculture Secretary. One of her key tasks will be the implementation of the provisions of the Omnibus Trade Act in a forthright yet judicious manner. In addition, she will be in charge of overseeing the first year implementation of the free-trade agreement with Canada. While the agreement has become effective, a number of major issues will most likely be confronted during its early stage. As if these tasks were not sufficiently daunting, multilateral negotiations in the Uruguay round are at a critical point. Progress in these complex discussions will require American negotiators who are able to argue forcefully our trade agenda while at the same time weighing the legitimate views of our trading partners. I am confident that Mrs. Hills can fill such a leadership role on behalf of the United States.

Madam President, Mrs. Hills' nomination was approved by the Finance Committee last Friday without dissent and I urge my colleagues to confirm her nomination here on the Senate floor. As a member of the Finance Committee and its Trade Subcommittee chairman during the 101st Congress, I look forward to working with Mrs. Hills as our next U.S. Trade Representative.

I thank the chairman for yielding.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DANFORTH. Madam President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. WILSON. Thank you, Madam President.

I thank my friend from Missouri. Three minutes is inadequate to do the kind of job that is warranted in praise of this appointment, but 30 minutes would also be inadequate. Perhaps 3 hours would.

So let me just say that as you have already been told by the chairman of the Finance Committee not only in her performance before the committee has she been forthcoming, but she has demonstrated the qualities that have led her repeatedly into public service, won her a reputation as a lawyer, but more importantly won her a reputation as someone who is straightforward, who despite the demeanor of a gentlewoman has the guts of a lion.

Let me just say that Carla Hills is every bit the person necessary to fill the very large shoes that will be left behind by Ambassador Yeutter. She is tough minded. She is a skilled and tough negotiator.

I have known her personally for many years, first when she was the Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and I was mayor of San Diego. I was struck then by her grasp not only of the law that affected her responsibilities but indeed of the practicalities that made her responsibilities so challenging.

She dealt with those responsibilities not only with tremendous energy both physical and intellectual but with a kind of no nonsense determination to get the job done that is required in her new role as the U.S. Trade Representative.

She understands what is required of her.

I return to her skills as a negotiator to her tough mindedness.

Let me take a moment of my 3 minutes to quote from her statement to the committee.

Finally, on the unilateral front I will not hesitate to act when necessary and appropriate to fight unfair trade practices of foreign governments. Retaliation cannot be the goal of our policy. In fact, it signals the failure of our efforts to open foreign markets. But the credible threat of retaliation provides essential leverage in our marketing opening efforts. Thus actual retaliation will be used, albeit reluctantly, to preserve the credibility of this threat.

I think that is a very succinct statement of philosophy. It is a pragmatic philosophy. It is a tough philosophy. It was what is needed to guide the energy of this truly remarkable woman.

I look forward to working with her. The chairman has indicated that she has evinced an eagerness to work with the Congress.

It is a partnership that we must have in order to be successful for the American people to open those markets and to end those unfair trading practices.

By background and experience but perhaps most especially, Madam President, by character, this nominee is superbly qualified to be the U.S. Trade Representative, one of the more challenging responsibilities in this Government.

I thank the Chair and I thank my friend from Missouri.

Mr. DANFORTH. Madam President, in her testimony before the Finance Committee last week, Carla Hills noted that the U.S. Trade Representative's strategic goals are to open markets abroad for our competitive goods and services, to enhance the protection of intellectual property rights, and to "create an ever-expanding multilateral trading system based upon equitable and enforceable rules." These objectives are absolutely in keeping with the philosophy underlying the Omnibus Trade Act of 1988. Mrs. Hills has said that she is dedicated to full implementation of the terms of the Omnibus Trade Act, and I believe that she will do this. Her stated preference for a multilateral approach, coupled with certain bilateral and plurilateral efforts as well as selective unilateral action, is clearly the right approach for U.S. trade policy. She is right on target when she emphasizes the importance of a credible threat of retaliation as a means to enforce our rights and gain access to closed foreign markets. Finally, I applaud her commitment to sustain and enhance the critical relationship between the executive branch and Congress. In my mind, consultation—and coordination of policies between the branches—are essential elements of a successful U.S. trade policy.

Mrs. Hills is widely regarded as intelligent, thoughtful and tough—essential traits for this country's top trade negotiator. Yet some have voiced concerns about her lack of experience in the trade field, and others have raised the specter of potential conflicts of interest arising from her previous professional and business activities. I am convinced that these concerns are unfounded: Mrs. Hills clearly has a solid understanding of the complex issues before her, and she will undoubtedly be able to address effectively any issue which comes before her. In addition, there is no doubt in my mind that she will perform her duties while adhering to the highest of ethical standards, a commitment which she definitively made before the Finance Committee.

The array of trade issues facing us—a persistent and unsustainable trade deficit; the Uruguay round of multilateral negotiations; the completion of Europe's internal market by 1992; the need to enforce the terms of our free trade agreements with Canada and Israel strictly; and the importance of further improving our bilateral trade relationships with Japan, Korea, Taiwan, Brazil, and others—is immense. These issues will require a team of clear thinking and tough negotiators to ensure that U.S. interests are defended in an increasingly competitive international trading environment. Carla Hills is an excellent choice to lead that team.

Mr. BENTSEN. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum to be charged equally to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I rise to strongly support the nomination of Carla Hills to be U.S. Trade Representative.

When I first became interested in the international trade issue many years ago, the conventional wisdom held that it was permanent backburner issue.

The events of the last few years have put the lie to this conventional wisdom. In the last two Congresses, trade has been one of the most contentious, high-profile issues that Congress has faced.

But, thanks to Senator BENTSEN's extraordinary work in maneuvering the omnibus trade bill into law, the conventional wisdom now is that we should move trade back to the backburner; after all, the big trade bill was passed.

Once again, the conventional wisdom is dead wrong.

Senator BENTSEN has put us on the right road, but we still have a way to go.

The U.S. trade deficit is on the way back up, we have a major international trade negotiation underway, and the provisions of the Omnibus Trade Act will come into play in the next few months. In short, trade is on the way back to the front-burner.

And, once confirmed, Mrs. Hills and her staff will confront a monumental challenge; the challenge of developing and implementing—perhaps for the first time—a truly comprehensive trade strategy for the United States.

As I see it, this comprehensive trade policy should include at least three elements: First, a comprehensive trade negotiating strategy for the United States; second, a commitment to fulfill the requirements of the Omnibus Trade Act; and third, a plan for addressing some of the major trade policy challenges on the horizon, such as Europe 1992.

Perhaps the most important element of this trade policy is a trade negotiating strategy. The only way to liberalize trade is to conclude multilateral or bilateral trade agreements which obligate nations to reduce trade barriers.

The United States must devote considerable time and resources to this task. We have a major GATT round underway, and are in the process of implementing the United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreements.

Within the next few months, the President—with help from Mrs. Hills—must evaluate the prospects of the current GATT round, and decide whether to pursue bilateral trade agreements with some of our major trading partners, like Japan and Mexico.

Mrs. Hills will also be responsible for implementing many provisions of the Trade Act. Over the next few months, the Telecommunications, Intellectural Property, and "Super-301" provisions of the Trade Act take effect.

I attach particular importance of the Super-301 provision. This provision is the heart of the Trade Act. It was written to address the problem created by nations, like Japan, Korea, and Taiwan, that maintain an extensive array of trade barriers. The provision requires USTR to designate the priority nations and priority trade barriers that USTR will concentrate upon. USTR is then obligated to begin negotiations under section 301 to open these markets.

Obviously, it will be politically difficult to target some nations—especially Japan—as priority nations under super 301. Certainly, there will be those at the State Department and elsewhere within the administration that would prefer to look the other way for political reasons.

But the letter and intent of the law are clear. Opening the markets of nations, like Japan, Korea, and Taiwan, is the most difficult and persistent trade policy challenge that we face. I expect this administration to have a comprehensive strategy for addressing this challenge in place by the super 301 deadline of May 30, if not before.

In the case of Japan, I believe that a super 301 negotiation with Japan should be used as a springboard to open a broad economic discussion with Japan with goal of establishing a broad agreement on economic and trade policy.

Trade negotiations and task of implementing the Trade Act will put significant demands on USTR resources, but USTR must still devote some resources to addressing the trade policy problems on the horizon. Foremost among them is Europe 1992.

Over the last few months, I have met with a number of business and political leaders regarding the European Communities' plan to eliminate all internal trade barriers by 1992.

I am convinced the Europe 1992 could be a boon to the United States. But I am also convinced that United States interests could suffer during the internal negotiations among European Community member nations leading up to 1992. With many European businesses under great pressure from increased intra-EC competition, there will be a great temptation to raise new trade barriers against imports from outside the EC.

We cannot allow ourselves to be distracted by other events. We must devote time and resources to carefully monitoring EC 1992, anticipating problems, and developing a strategy for responding to those problems.

The Congress expects a great deal from Mrs. Hills. In short, we expect her to develop, in consultation with us, a national trade strategy.

I believe Carla Hills is up to the task. She is a tough negotiator with an excellent reputation. President Bush has made an excellent choice.

I wish her the best of luck, and strongly urge my colleagues to vote to confirm her as the next United States Trade Representative.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, today we will be voting on the nomination of Mrs. Carla Hills to be the U.S. Trade Representative. When Mrs. Hills was nominated by the President, questions were raised about conflicts of interest she and her husband might have in the discharge of her duties as U.S. Trade Representative. Mrs. Hills was courteous enough to visit with me a couple of weeks ago. We had an excellent discussion and in the course of that talk, Mrs. Hills assured me that there would be no conflict, either with her prior representation of foreign clients or with her husband's business activities. It is my understanding that she has said the same thing to the Finance Committee in the course of her confirmation hearings. She said she has removed all actual or apparent conflicts of interest with her new position. She has also said that her husband has agreed to terminate all of his business affiliations and investments that could create a conflict of interest with her potential job as USTR.

During the course of my meeting with Mrs. Hills, I discussed the necessity of strong enforcement of our trade laws. Mrs. Hills agreed with me that this was vitally important. She further assured me that she will vigorously negotiate and enforce our bilateral textile and apparel agreements. This is especially important because in 1989, 15 of our 41 bilaterals must be renewed.

With these assurances, I will be pleased to vote for Mrs. Hills' confirmation.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to speak today in support of the nomination of Carla A. Hills to be the U.S. Trade Representative.

Each one of us shares an understanding that one of the most critical issues facing the economy and security of the United States is international trade and investment. We must be prepared to address a number of important international economic challenges in the weeks and months ahead. One of the most important challenges facing the United States, in general, and the U.S. Trade Representative, in particular, is the Uruguay round of multilateral negotiations on the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Carla Hills possesses the broad understanding of economic and social issues and of the importance of trade and investment policy that are necessary for working to safeguard our Nation's economic and security interests. In addition, she has the leadership ability necessary to build an excellent staff within the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative and to gain domestic and international respect and confidence that are necessary to effectively negotiate on international trade and investment.

We are currently involved in some very important and sensitive negotiations resulting from the mid-term review of the Uruguay round, and many challenges face the USTR during the next few months in this area. The Uruguay round of negotiations will establish the rules that govern trade in goods and services, investment opportunities, and intellectual property protection under which American businesses will operate through at least the end of this century.

I cannot stress enough the importance of developing a strong negotiating team to ensure that the Uruguay round is completed on time and that our interests are well served. We must also have this team in place to address the challenges our country will face during the next 4 years as the Europeans move toward completing their 1992 initiative.

In view of the important issues which must be addressed in the near future, I urge my colleagues to approve the nomination Carla Hills.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am pleased to join the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Mr. BENTSEN, in supporting the nomination of Ms. Carla Hills as the U.S. Trade Representative. The Senate worked hard and long, under

Mr. BENTSEN's leadership, during the 100th Congress to enact a sweeping new trade law, which included broader authority for the Office of the Trade Representative. The distinguished minority leader, Mr. DOLE, and myself, along with Senators DANFORTH and RIEGLE, offered an amendment to that bill, known as the "Super 301" provision, which gives the Trade Representative new tools to identify countries which unfairly discriminate against U.S. products, through formal and/or informal barriers to markets. After a period of time to negotiate the removal of such barriers, evidenced by the appropriate increase in market shares for the products identified by the Trade Representative, retaliatory action is required to be initiated to the extent that the resolution of the problem is not satisfactory. The intent of the provision is to remove unfairness from the playing field of international commerce, not to give any undeserved advantage to American companies.

I am very pleased that Ms. Hills testified before the Senate Finance Committee, in her confirmation hearing, that she would use all of the tools under the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act, that she would be the USTR with a "crowbar," if necessary, and initiate unilateral retaliatory action. We hope that such action with a crowbar will not be necessary, but if it is, I certainly expect it to be taken.

Mr. President, the trade statistics continue to be unacceptable and adverse to the United States. As reported in the Post of this past Sunday, January 29, 1989, the "* * * export-driven improvement in the massive U.S. trade deficit, which started late in 1987, is stalled," and many experts fear "is likely to remain at more than $100 billion in the foreseeable future," and that "once again trade will drag down the U.S. economy."

The trade deficit situation cannot be acceptable as a permanent feature of the international economic balance. Unfairness is, of course, not the only problem facing us. We as a nation need to strengthen our trading skills, our aggressiveness, and our basic competitiveness. We need to redouble our efforts in advance technology development and to take a good look at the strength of our industrial base. As Ms. Hills points out in her statement to the committee, we need to save more and consume less. If there are appropriate ways for the public sector to help U.S. industry that are directly related to our national security, such as in computers, in aircraft, and machine tools, and in the era of superconductivity, for instance, we should act decisively.

Ms. Hills lays out the tough problems on the United States trade agenda, in our relations with both Europe and Japan, in particular, and she states her intention to work closely with the Congress and its oversight committees to meet these challenges.

We expect the Office of the USTR to be decisive, to make hard decisions when necessary, and in return, that office should know that we in the Senate will provide the support and the backing to make the hard decisions stick. I look forward to a new vigor and to close consultation and cooperation with Ms. Hills, as she assumes her new responsibilities and exercises the tools that have been made available by the Congress in the exercise of her responsibilities.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I congratulate President Bush on his selection of Carla Hills, Esq., as U.S. Trade Representative, and I am pleased to express my support and vote for her confirmation today.

My confidence in Carla Hills' ability and integrity arises from having known and worked with her for many years, including mutual contacts from the Yale Law School from which we both graduated although she is many years younger than I.

She is well-qualified for the position as the U.S. Trade Representative, as reflected in her impressive list of accomplishments and experiences. Currently, she is comanaging partner of the Washington, DC, office of the law firm of Weil, Gotschal & Manges. Prior to this practice she served as Secretary of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development during the Ford administration. She also served as Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Division of the U.S. Department of Justice during the Ford administration for 2 years.

Carla Hills' qualifications extend well beyond these I have mentioned. Time magazine, for example, recognized her unique qualifications and named her as 1 of the 10 "Women of the Year" in 1976. Her biography reflects that she also cofounded a law firm in which she was a partner for 12 years, taught as an adjunct professor of law at the University of California at Los Angeles, edited and coauthored the Antitrust Adviser in 1971, and served in numerous professional associations, including as president of both the Federal Bar Association and the Women Lawyers Association in Los Angeles. These experiences, in addition to her service on the boards of many major corporations and as a trustee of many respected institutions, including the Brookings Institution, attest to her ability to serve in her new capacity as the U.S. Trade Representative.

This position as the U.S. Trade Representative is especially critical at this point in the ongoing GATT negotiations. Although important agreements were reached at the Montreal midterm review last December, which was held to assess the progress of the Uruguay round and to outline the objectives for the remaining 2 years of the round, we still have many goals to accomplish. The office of the U.S. Trade Representative has stated that disciplining international agriculture and including under the GATT adequate intellectual property standards and effective enforcement are critical elements to the success of the Uruguay round. I am confident that Carla Hills will be a tough negotiator who will accomplish much in promoting the trade interests of the United States and assuring that free trade be fair trade.

I support the nomination of Mrs. Hills to this post. If confirmed by the Senate, as I am sure she will be, I have every confidence that she will perform the new duties with exceptional skill, as she has in the other positions she has held in the past.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise to offer my strong support for the nomination of Mrs. Carla Hills to be U.S. Trade Representative [USTR]. I believe last week's 18-0 vote in the Senate Finance Committee endorsing Mrs. Hills' nomination reflects the committee members' confidence that she will vigorously enforce our trade laws and will serve as a skilled negotiator with our trading partners in the critical trade negotiations that lie ahead.

Mr. President, the United States stands at an important crossroads in its trading relations with the rest of the world. Ever since the end of the Second World War, the United States has been the world's most open market. While this has been of great benefit to the American economy, our open market has also served as the catalyst for unprecedented economic growth in all corners of the globe.

However, as many of our trading partners' economies have developed over the past 43 years, trade practices have evolved which have prevented American industries, especially agriculture, high technology, and services, from gaining reciprocal access to export markets. While such practices may have been tolerable when many of these countries were in their early development stages, they no longer are acceptable.

In the next few years, the United States will be working with its trading partners at the Uruguay round of the GATT to eliminate most of these unfair barriers and to end unfair government subsidies. I believe that if the world trading system is going to continue to expand; if unfair trading practices are to be eliminated, and if protectionism is going to be stifled, the Uruguay round must be successful. And it will be the responsibility of Mrs. Hills and her staff to ensure that American interests will be best represented at these negotiations.

I do not think that anyone would suggest that Mrs. Hills faces an easy task. Yet I am confident that her excellent sense of judgment and her skills as a negotiator will serve her well in the difficult negotiations that lie ahead. In her confirmation hearings she indicated that her No. 1 priority will be to "pry open" foreign markets. She does not seek an unfair advantage for American industry; instead she will work to achieve a level playing field of international trade. That is the goal that all of us sought to achieve when we passed the Omnibus Trade Act, and I am sure that Mrs. Hills will do her best to achieve that result.

Mr. President, in succeeding Clayton Yeutter as USTR, Mrs. Hills follows a man who has earned the respect of Members on both sides of the aisle for his diligence and excellent judgment in dealing with international trade issues. I am sure that Mrs. Hills will carry on the excellent tradition that has been established by such former Special Trade Representatives as Clayton Yeutter, Bob Strauss, and Bill Brock.

I urge my colleagues to strongly support Mrs. Hills' nomination.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am pleased to support the nomination of Carla Hills for the important position of U.S. Trade Representative.

Mrs. Hills is well known to us. She has served in the Federal Government as a distinguished Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and as the Assistant Attorney General, Civil Division, in the Department of Justice. In both cases, she was only the third woman to hold such a position.

More importantly, since returning to the private practice of law, she has continued to volunteer her services in the public interest, serving on President Reagan's Blue Ribbon Commission on Defense Management and as Vice Chairman of his Commission on Housing. In addition, her positions on the boards of directors of several U.S. multinational corporations have given her firsthand experience with the critical issue of U.S. competitiveness in world markets and with the impact of Federal trade policy on the success of our exporting businesses. Such broad experience is essential in anyone who is to undertake the difficult task of negotiating on behalf of our agricultural and industrial producers to ensure that they are given a fair change.

When Mrs. Hills appeared before the Senate Finance Committee last week, I submitted tough questions designed to determine her commitment to defending U.S. interests vigorously both in negotiations and, where warranted, through unilateral action. Her responses indicate that she will be a positive force for free and fair trade, but a tough destroyer of trade barriers worldwide. Her extensive experience both in and out of government has given her the rare ability to judge when to negotiate and when to insist. Following her appearance, the Finance Committee voted unanimously to recommend the confirmation of Carla Hills as the U.S. Trade Representative.

The Senate has just successfully confirmed Richard Darman to head the Office of Management and Budget so that he can begin immediately to reduce our budget deficit. I hope that we can act as promptly on the nomination of Carla Hills so that she can get to work on the other deficit.

I believe that Mrs. Hills will make an outstanding contribution as our Trade Representative, and I look forward to working with her in the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time under the control of Senator BENTSEN has expired.

Mr. DANFORTH. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will advise the Senator from Missouri that there are approximately 4 minutes and 25 seconds remaining under his control.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

NOMINATION OF ROBERT ADAM MOSBACHER, OF TEXAS, TO BE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate shall proceed now to the consideration of Robert Adam Mosbacher of Texas, to be the Secretary of Commerce. The clerk will report the nomination.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The nomination of Robert Adam Mosbacher of Texas, to be Secretary of Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Madam President, on behalf of the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, I am happy to report that by unanimous vote we have favorably reported the nomination of Robert A. Mosbacher to be the Secretary of Commerce.

Right to the point, Madam President, I find him to be an outstanding nominee. We discussed all the particular items that come before the Commerce Department, which has a many-faceted responsibility.

Mr. Mosbacher is a well-respected and quite successful businessman. He is a former vice chairman of the American Business Conference and has been active in oil industry groups and charities. He has long been a close friend and adviser to President Bush.

Although he has never held a Government post, his many years in business have given him firsthand experience in understanding and meeting the challenges that face American industry. During Mr. Mosbacher's confirmation hearing before our committee, I was impressed by both his intelligence and his determination to deal with the urgent issue now before the Commerce Department—issues such as foreign trade barriers, declining U.S. leadership in technology, and the pollution choking our coasts and oceans.

All too often in the past, the Department of Commerce has not served as the strong, active advocate of American business and competitiveness that it should be. I belive that if Robert Mosbacher builds on the solid accomplishments of outgoing Secretary Bill Verity, then he has a historic opportunity to strengthen the Department's performance and to become an outstanding Secretary of Commerce.

Clearly, now is the time to act to preserve and enhance our industrial capacity and our world technological leadership. We need to recognize the realities of world trade and face some of the obvious facts about doing business in this new global marketplace. And fact No. 1 is that we do not have free trade. We have been in a trade war for years, and our Government has refused to get in there and compete. We must start competing. We must begin enforcing some of the trade laws already on our books. We must recognize that Government can and must have a role.

The Secretary of Commerce can be a vital player in the administration on these and many other issues. I am confident that Mr. Mosbacher will be such a player.

Madam President, before closing I want to discuss one other subject. The public interest group Common Cause has objected to Mr. Mosbacher's confirmation. They allege no illegality on his part, but they do not like the fact that he has raised large amounts of so-called soft money for the Republican Party.

I agree with Common Cause on one point: the campaign finance laws need reform. To that end, I have proposed a constitutional amendment to give Congress the legal authority to reasonably regulate political contributions and spending.

But I do not agree with Common Cause about Mr. Mosbacher. The question before the Senate is whether he is qualified by background and character to be Secretary of Commerce. Common Cause's action has raised the question of whether Mr. Mosbacher has done anything illegal or improper as a political fundraiser. Mr. President, he has not. I may not like the current campaign finance laws, but all of the evidence before the Commerce Committee suggests that Mr. Mosbacher has operated entirely within the law. Both major parties have raised large amounts of soft money, and current rules neither limit the size of soft money contributions nor require political parties to disclose the names of their contributors. I applaud both parties for voluntarily releasing names, but I repeat that the parties are not legally required to do so.

I was pleased to offer Common Cause an opportunity to testify at the Mosbacher hearing, but I cannot agree to delaying the nominee's confirmation when it is clear that he followed existing law. The fault regarding campaign finance laws lies with Congress, not Mr. Mosbacher.

In my judgment, Senators should focus on Mr. Mosbacher's background and qualifications as an individual. I believe that when they do, they will agree with the Commerce Committee that Robert Mosbacher should be confirmed as Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. Mosbacher will face many issues at the Department of Commerce.

Primarily, with respect to trade, it has been put into the back corner, within our Commerce Department. I say that advisedly, because our own Congress has done it, and our own committee, to some extent, with the trend in past years whereby we were the Committee of Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Then we were the Committee of Foreign Commerce. Now we have cut out much of the committee's traditional role in trade, and we have got commerce, science, and transportation. Until I took over, in the last Congress, we didn't even have a Subcommittee on Trade.

Problems have resulted. Today, we find, No. 1, that in case of the dumping laws, under the Commerce Department's International Trade Administration, that the industry of America is deterred from filing a dumping case because they have to provide all the proprietary information of their particular technology.

So the question is then, to them: Shall we reveal all our technology, just to stop this one dumping case? Or, is it to our monetary advantage to let them go ahead and continue because we still have the product in the main.

Second, with respect to the law regarding a related party, we allow the foreign importer to also factor in the service, the sales and promotional and salary costs to the sale of a particular commodity in trying to determine the price here in the United States as compared to that, let us say, back in Tokyo. And, on that score, of course, if you sell an item for $100 in Tokyo, you can move it into the American market at $80 or $85, and still add on all of these promotional and sales costs, bring it up to $100, and not be liable for dumping. That is something peculiar to the United States and our own Department of Commerce. That is not the case with our trading partners.

I have discussed that with Mr. Mosbacher.

Specifically with respect to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration there has been diminished administration interest, over the past 10 years, in the oceans. We in Congress have tried our best to speak out on this. I am confident, now, that we have Mr. Mosbacher's attention with respect to oceans issues and coastal zone management. He has been very active in the State of Texas with respect to the oceans. He is a good sailor himself. He knows the value of the environment and the coastal zone area, and that they should be developed in a judicious fashion. He is very keen on the oceans programs, and I am confident that we will have an outstanding administrator, in Mr. Mosbacher.

Additionally, with respect to some of the other particular subjects, there is the chance, now, for the Department of Commerce to lead with respect to exports and with respect to the domestic transfer and commercialization of our technology.

With respect to our exports, he is very much interested in enhancing this office, and also in the development itself, and transfer of technology. To the credit of the last Congress, under the helpful leadership of my ranking colleague on the other side, Senator DANFORTH, the Commerce Committee included in its part of the omnibus trade bill a provision reorganizing the Bureau of Standards into the Institute of Standards and Technology.

We also have provided for the appointment of an Under Secretary of Technology. We also authorized legislation of some 12 technology transfer centers at campuses around America. And under the leadership of Secretary Verity, we have already announced three.

These developments, then, take the Department of Commerce not only into the position of sales agent, but also of enhancing production. We find that we must take a note from our successful agricultural programs years back. They put in, at the university campuses, the regional research centers, the extension services, the experimental stations. Tomorrow morning, if I wanted to plant a victory garden, they would send a farm agent out right here in the District of Columbia.

It is succeeding, we are taking a page from Agriculture's book in this regard, and I found Mr. Mosbacher well briefed on this particular score. Otherwise, he has a good feel, rather than a resentment toward tourism and travel programs; he has a good feel for the value of the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration. It is only a $13 million program reaping some $27 billion in foriegn tourism in the United States of America. And he, like I, believes that—if we can under the constraints of the deficit and debt—we ought to be doubling that and putting in a greater effort. Because it pays off for every bit of that particular investment.

I want to further discuss only one thing, Madam President, and that has to do with the listing of campaign contributions. Mr. Mosbacher is a close friend of President Bush and has handled some of his financing in the campaigns. In campaigns on both sides of the aisle, Republican and Democrat in America, we have had what they call soft money, namely not direct contributions to the candidates themselves, but corporate and individual contributions in excessive amounts to the different parties, Republican and Democratic, or to the entities that were running similar campaigns in behalf of the candidates.

Those particular contributors were not publicly listed at the time. Our friends from Common Cause asked that they be made public. Mr. Mosbacher has now given what I thought was a complete list. Common Cause now comes back and says, "Well, there are certain corporate contributions still unaccounted for." Whether or not Mr. Mosbacher does that is not of concern to me in that he has obeyed my law, and if there is a deficiency or delict or lack, it is us in Congress and the laws we write. I ought to buy a mirror and jump on me for not providing improved campaign finance laws.

I do not believe in a fellow obeying the law and then me coming up and deriding him, rebuking him for not doing what some other organization wants. Common Cause's particular concern is with the Congress. I have asked them to be a little bit more evenhanded. When we had my distinguished colleague from Texas, Senator BENTSEN come in they did not raise any question, when he was to be sworn in as Senator, about what was the soft money during the Dukakis-Bentsen campaign. I have not asked the Democrats to list it. Why the Republicans?

I think this is a peripheral, ancillary issue that should be brought up under the aegis of campaign reform financing. I do have a bill to be introduced in the morning. It will be sponsored by myself and Senator SPECTER in a bipartisan fashion with the cosponsors we had last time for a constitutional amendment to allow Congress to control or otherwise regulate expenditures in Federal elections. I think in this fashion we will get back to limits as intended to be established under the 1973 law and do exactly what we had hoped to have been done then.

But that peripheral item should not have been brought, I believe, into this man's nomination. Yet he has responded as best he can, as I understand it now, and I am confident, knowing him from these particular meetings and studying his background and watching him handle himself at our hearing before the Commerce Committee, Senators will find that Mr. Mosbacher believes in the integrity of the election process, he believes in government in the sunshine, and he also believes in adhering to the law.

I could well imagine if I had been in a similar state and was asked at the time, "Do I have to be listed?" and I would say, "No, you don't have to be listed under the law," then at a particular appointment time saying, "Wait a moment. Why are you not listed?" He is constrained between the loyalty he made in the solicitations and the loyalty that he would like to have for integrity regarding campaign laws.

I am confident he would go along with my proposed constitutional amendment and with Congress putting in the provisions that Common Cause would seek.

So that having been said, I am delighted to support his nomination enthusiastically, subject to his commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate, and I yield to my colleague, Senator DANFORTH.

Mr. DANFORTH. Madam President, I begin by expressing my appreciation to our Chairman, Senator HOLLINGS, for the speedy and skillful job he had done in bringing the nominations of both Robert Mosbacher and Samuel Skinner to the floor of the Senate. He has acted in the fashion to which we have become accustomed. He has done an excellent job with both of these nominations.

Madam President, if I could describe the perfect credentials for a Secretary of Commerce, I would describe Robert Mosbacher's credentials. The ideal candidate for Secretary of Commerce would be a person who is experienced in the world of commerce, somebody who has a broad, deep experience in business, somebody who has been a successful person in business. That is Robert Mosbacher. He has been very successful in business. He has been successful in the energy business, which has been a tough business recently in his home State of Texas.

If I were describing a Secretary of Commerce, I would describe somebody who knows his way around politics, and again that is Bob Mosbacher. He understands politics. He has been a participant in the world of politics. He knows how the political world works.

Finally and ideally—and this would be somebody who would be very hard to find in any administration—I would want a Secretary of Commerce who has the ear of the President of the United States in a very special way. Some departments of our Government do not need any special advocate with the President because the matters before those departments are so pressing that the President must take them up. Other departments require a somewhat stronger voice from Cabinet members. Bob Mosbacher, through his long-term, close, personal relationship with the President of the United States will bring to the Commerce Department a person who can communicate the concerns of his Department to the President and, more than that, a person who can be an effective advocate for American business in the White House. I think Bob Mosbacher is central casting's answer to the ideal Secretary of Commerce.

I have had the opportunity to visit with him about his nomination. We had the chance to talk about a wide range of issues. I believe that he is a person who is well versed in the issues and a person who understands the priorities that face the businesses of our country and their dealings with the world around us.

Secretary-designate Mosbacher and I talked about some specific sectors of our economy. For example, how can it be that the United States of America had a huge surplus in telecommunications trade just 5 years ago, a multibillion dollar surplus in telecommunications, and that surplus has in 5 years been transformed into a deficit?

Telecommunications is a matter that is specifically within the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce. There is an Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Communications. The NTIA is a part of the Commerce Department, and Secretary Mosbacher understands the difficulty, the problems, and the challenges of the telecommunications industry.

I believe that he will analyze those problems, and be an advocate for the kinds of policies that will bring some light to the future of American telecommunications. Similar situated is the aerospace industry—America is the premier producer of aircraft in the world. Yet, because of the trade practices of friendly countries around the world, the aerospace industry has not had the access to foreign markets that we would expect. The subsidy of the Airbus by European governments is a good example of this problem. The FSX, the fighter aircraft agreement with Japan—these are examples of trade practices inhibiting a major sector, a very promising sector of our economy. Again, the Commerce Department has a special interest in that section.

Similarly, in high technology much publicity has been given to the fact that in the area of semiconductors, the United States has lost its ability to compete. Why is this the case? I see in Bob Mosbacher a Secretary of Commerce who can focus on some of these sectors and who can do so in a very broad way.

So many of the efforts that we have in the Federal Government take a fraction of an industry's problem and deal with that fraction. The Commerce Department has the capability of looking at an entire sector of the economy, in dealing with that sector, and fashioning broad solutions to the problems. Having spoken with Mr. Mosbacher, I can tell the Senate that he understands both the role of his Department and the problems of American business.

He has spoken specifically about the Foreign Commercial Service and the need to have a strong, active, and aggressive Foreign Commercial Service promoting American products and services in the world market. Again, this can be very helpful in improving our position in international trade.

Because of his understanding of the issues, because of his own success in the world of business, because of his political savvy, and because of his personal relationship with the President of the United States, I cannot imagine a better nominee for Secretary of Commerce than Bob Mosbacher. And I am delighted to support his nomination.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, to the distinguished Senator from Montana I yield such time as he may need.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FOWLER). The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. BURNS. I thank the Senator very much. Mr. President, thank you very much. I appreciate this.

I rise today in support of Robert A. Mosbacher, President Bush's nominee for the next Secretary of Commerce. I met with Mr. Mosbacher in my office, and we had quite a conversation there on issues that we are faced with in the West, and especially in our own State of Montana, expecially transportation where we have to deal with a lot of assets. His answers display the kind of sensitivity that I would expect from anybody who is going into this position. He would address the problems of westerners, and I would expect that of any Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. Mosbacher was forthright in his appearance before the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transporation. No one could ask for more. If he did not know the answer, he surely knew the resource in which to find the answer.

I believe he will serve President Bush, this administration, and this Congress with distinction, and will measurably improve the quality of services offered by the Department of Commerce.

Mr. Mosbacher has stated that he will be accessible to all Members of this Congress. And I will take his word for that. I, for one, intend to work closely with the Secretary of Commerce on many issues that come before Congress that affect us in Montana.

Mr. President, I intend to vote for Mr. Mosbacher's confirmation. I urge other Senators to do likewise.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the distinguished nominee, Secretary-designate Mosbacher, was presented by our senior colleague, Senator BENTSEN, and by Senator GRAMM of Texas. I am momentarily waiting to see if either of them wish to speak now. I know it is sort of short notice the way we brought these nominations up. I ask unanimous consent that, if they do not arrive under the scheduled unanimous-consent time agreement, their statements be included in the RECORD as if delivered on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Hearing no objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Awaiting that, Mr. President, I want to speak on the point made by Senator DANFORTH, whom I am incidentally most grateful to. He has been chairman of our committee. He understands it. It was he who facilitated, along with us and all in the committee working together, which in all candor was a very easy job with Robert Mosbacher.

On the matter of telecommunications, it is particularly nettling to this Senator as chairman of the Commerce Committee that I cannot always get the attention of the Commerce Committee on telecommunications and on high-definition television, where as a member of the Subcommittee on Defense Appropriations I can. I have $30 million over there in the Defense Department. We just had a wonderful time. We talked about the needs of communcations like we had a Commerce Committee meeting. But when we talked about it in Commerce, it was all blind. There was no chance for any moneys much less paying any sustained attention to it.

So this is the kind of thing that I talked with Secretary-designate Mosbacher about, that we give attention to our fundamental responsibilities because in a vacuum of this kind if we do not the other Departments are going to take over. That is bad. It is really a higgledly-piggledly, kind of catch-as-catch-can. We do a little bit on telecommunications with sematech. We come in under the proposition of developing superconductors. Now we are going into other communications, such as high-definition television technology.

We have limited time, and I want to yield to my senior colleague at this time.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I wish to thank my able colleague.

Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of the nomination of Robert A. Mosbacher by President Bush to be Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. Mosbacher is a distinguished individual, who is well qualified to be Secretary of Commerce. As chairman of the board of Mosbacher Energy Co., he has considerable business experience in the oil and gas industry. Regarding his formal education, he received a bachelor of science degree from Washington and Lee University in Virginia and attended the Choate School in Wallingford, CT. He also holds an honorary law degree from Washington and Lee University.

Apart from his business career, Mr. Mosbacher is involved in many civic, charitable, and professional organizations. He is a founding member and vice chairman of the American Business Conference, on the board of the Boys Clubs of America, and past president of the American Association of Petroleum Landmen. Most recently, he was the national finance chairman for President Bush's campaign.

If confirmed, and I am sure he will be, Mr. Mosbacher will have to grapple with a wide variety of issues regarding our huge trade deficit, the National Weather Service, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, tourism, and the 1990 Census. If the United States is to be truly competitive in the international trade arena, we must continue to develop and use new technology. In addition, we must open foreign markets to our products. In shaping our trade policy, I am sure that Mr. Mosbacher will respond to the needs of American industries, especially those like the textile industry that have been hard hit by massive foreign imports. I am sure that he will make a diligent effort to reduce the enormous trade deficit we currently face.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support this nomination, and feel that our Nation is fortunate to have a man of his broad business experience and outstanding qualifications to serve in the highly important position to which he has been appointed.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I yield such time as necessary to the distinguished Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader, Mr. DOLE, is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from South Carolina.

Mr. President, I rise in support of the nomination of Robert A. Mosbacher to be the new Secretary of Commerce under the Bush administration. As in the case of all of his nominations, President Bush has made an outstanding appointment in Bob Mosbacher for Commerce Secretary.

The United States is facing challenging times internationally. Our trade deficits reflect the fact that we are losing our competitive edge in world markets. These times will require leadership that will make a difference, and Bob Mosbacher is that man.

The New Secretary comes from the business world, where he has been a great success as chairman of the board of Mosbacher Energy Co., an independent oil and gas producer.

Perhaps most important, Bob Mosbacher is best known to be a world-class sailor—he won the 1971 World and North American Championships, as well as the Mallory Trophy and Southern Ocean Racing Championship.

I believe this qualifies him to be the next Secretary of Commerce—he knows how to navigate through challenging waters, and this experience will serve him well as he faces his new responsibilities during difficult times.

Further, he knows how to make a difference in the financial and business world. Not only has he built up a very successful business, but he was instrumental in the election of George Bush as our new President.

Mosbacher served as national finance chairman for the fund for America's future and for the George Bush for President committee.

His fundraising talents are legendary, but a lot of this success comes because he knows the players in the American business community first-hand. He also understands the importance of investment in research and development. Bob Mosbacher will take a long-term view of rebuilding our Nation's competitiveness.

Mr. President, I have great confidence that Bob Mosbacher is the right man at the right time to develop a strategy to eliminate our trade deficit and aggressively pursue policies that will expand our export markets. During his confirmation hearing, he promised to strongly, fairly and objectively enforce our antidumping and countervailing duty laws.

Most of all, Bob Mosbacher will see to it that our international trade relationships reflect a two-way street. The United States is clearly open for business, and we expect reciprocity and fair treatment from our active trading partners and major competitors.

I look forward to working with Bob Mosbacher as Secretary of Commerce and encourage all of my colleagues to support this nomination.

I have known Bob Mosbacher and known of his business interests and his political interests. It is a fact that he knows the system [as someone already expressed on the floor]. I know it better than some, because he was on the other side of a race I had an interest in last year. He is very effective, I learned. He certainly does a good job. I think he brings all that ability to the Cabinet.

He is a businessman. If there is any place we need somebody with sharp business skills, it is in the Commerce Department. So I am very pleased to support this nomination.

As I said, I have known Bob Mosbacher, for a long, long time, and I have known him as a friend. Unless I am mistaken, I believe he will have a strong vote of support.

I thank both Senator HOLLINGS and Senator DANFORTH for their expeditious handling of this nomination. It seems to me that it is important to have not only Cabinet officers confirmed as quickly as possible, but also subcabinet and others, so that we can get on with the work that needs to be done. We need to give the new administration some time, and I think progress is being made on nearly every front.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, today I am pleased to support Robert Mosbacher as Secretary of Commerce in the new Bush administration. Mr. Mosbacher's distinguished career uniquely qualifies him to hold this highly visible position in the President's Cabinet. As a longtime businessman and owner of his own company, Mr. Mosbacher will be prepared to deal with a host of trade-related issues including American productivity, foreign protectionism, the trade deficit, high technology and communications, and others.

With regard to a particular issue affecting my home State, I was pleased to learn that Mr. Mosbacher is considering reversing former Secretary Verity's decision not to establish regional offices of the Bureau of Export Administration in Portland, OR, and the Boston, MA/Nashua, NH, area. In his response to a question submitted by Senator PACKWOOD during his confirmation hearing before the Commerce Committee, Mr. Mosbacher indicated that he would establish the offices providing adequate funding is available. While I am pleased with this positive development, I would like to point out that the statement of the managers in the fiscal year 1989 Commerce Appropriations Act provided the Department of Commerce with $775,000 for the establishment of the two regional offices. Accordingly, I would expect Mr. Mosbacher to proceed in carrying out the intent of Congress.

Mr. President, the nomination of Mr. Mosbacher is another example of President Bush's ability to select the most qualified and capable individuals to carry out the new administration's policies. I look forward to working with Secretary Mosbacher in the coming months, and am pleased to be able to vote for his confirmation as Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I congratulate President Bush on his selection of Robert A. Mosbacher as Secretary of the U.S. Department of Commerce, and I am pleased to express my support and vote for his confirmation today.

My confidence in Bob Mosbacher's ability and integrity arises from having known and worked with him for approximately 9 years, on political, public policy, and business issues.

He is well-qualified for the position as Secretary of Commerce, as reflected in his impressive list of accomplishments and experiences. Bob Mosbacher has had 40 years of experience in a moderate-sized family company that is principally engaged in the discovery and development of oil and gas in the United States and abroad. His personal familiarity with the risks and the opportunities of enterprise, in addition to his knowledge of the factors that enhance or deter investment and innovation, provide keen insight to lead the Commerce Department to spur American productivity and competitiveness.

A graduate of the Washington and Lee University, Bob Mosbacher has received many honors for his outstanding service, including his alma mater's honorary doctor of laws degree, the National Society to Prevent Blindness 1984 Man of Vision Award, the Texas Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association Distinguished Service Award, the University of Texas Cancer Foundation's Distinguished Service Award, and the National Alliance of Businessmen's recognition of exemplary service.

This position as the Commerce Secretary is especially critical in many of the Nation's business matters, including international trade, economic growth, and technological advancement. The Commerce Department provides vital assistance to enhance the competitiveness of U.S. businesses in the world economy, works to prevent unfair foreign trade competition, assists the development of minority businesses, and supports research and development in the scientific, engineering, and technological areas. I am confident that Bob Mosbacher will be an effective leader in these important areas.

I support the nomination of Bob Mosbacher to this post. If confirmed by the Senate, as I am sure he will be, I have every confidence that he will perform the new duties with exceptional skills, as he has in the other positions he has held in the past.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in selecting his Cabinet, President Bush has made some good choices.

Among those choices I number the President's designation of Robert A. Mosbacher to be his Secretary of Commerce.

A native of the Northeast and a graduate of Washington and Lee University in Virginia, Mr. Mosbacher has made his professional and business marks primarily in Texas. There he has labored successfully as an independent oil and natural gas producer—in energy-industry parlance, a wildcatter—and has won the admiration and respect of colleagues and competitors alike. In addition, Mr. Mosbacher serves on the boards of directors of Texas Commerce Bancshares and the New York Life Insurance Co., giving him an ongoing, overall perspective on national and international finance and commerce.

Moreover, Mr. Mosbacher has shared his time and interest with a wide number of civic and charitable organizations, and is a member of the boards of the Boys Clubs of America; the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies; the American Hospital in Paris; the Center for Strategic and International Studies at Georgetown University; the Texas Heart Institute; the Choate School in Walingford, CT; and the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars.

Also, for many years, Robert Mosbacher has played an active and important role at the highest levels of national Republican Party organizing and finance, and evidence of the scope of his interests, as well as of his commitment to our country and of his patriotism.

Mr. President, I believe that Robert Mosbacher will make an outstanding Secretary of Commerce, especially at this time when we are working to enlarge our role in international trade, and I heartily look forward to his assuming that role in the President's Cabinet.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I rise to speak in support of the nomination of Robert Mosbacher to be Secretary of Commerce. I believe that his success in the business world and broad knowledge of our economy form the basis for him to be an effective voice for America's commercial interests in the Cabinet.

In my view, the backbone of America's economy is its small business, the segment of the business world that provides most of the jobs and employment growth for our economy. I urge Mr. Mosbacher to make certain that the views of small businessmen and women across the country are both heard and taken into account when policy decisions are made at the Commerce Department.

The Commerce Department is one of the key agencies in our international trade police process and I hope that Mr. Mosbacher will work to strengthen its participation in such deliberations. At present, there is a staffing emergency in two critical foreign trade areas at the Commerce Department. The International Trade Administration currently is unable to fill many of its existing positions due to a shortage of funds. This funding shortfall means ITA has important positions vacant while at the same time talented employees are leaving ITA for other jobs because of promotion blockages. As a consequence, many agency employees are forced to cover two or three positions simultaneously. The net result is that the voice for business in our trade negotiations is less weighty. Given the visibility that Congress has placed on international trade, these are vacancies we can ill-afford.

A second critical funding problem concerns the Foreign Commercial Service. The Foreign Commercial Service is the frontline of America's export promotion activities around the globe. Those of us who favor the aggressive promotion of U.S. exports as a better solution to our trading problems than protectionism, view with alarm the current FCS funding crisis. At present, the United States has only 140 Americans overseas promoting U.S. exports. This is a ludicrous figure compared to any of our major trading partners. Countries such as Japan have thousands of employees working on export promotion with budgets many times that of FCS.

What is even more alarming is that the absolute size of the FCS is getting smaller, not larger. In fiscal year 1985, after the budgetary crunch had already commenced, FCS had close to 200 officers. Today only 140 of the remaining 153 FCS positions abroad are filled. I urge Mr. Mosbacher to make it a high priority to obtain the funds necessary to staff fully this important corps of officers. In addition, Mr. Mosbacher's goal should be to make the U.S. Foreign Commercial Service into an operation that is not just fully staffed, but second to none in the world for excellence in export promotion activities.

Mr. President, I believe that Mr. Mosbacher has the demonstrated ability to serve as an effective Secretary of Commerce. I am pleased to support his nomination and urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I join with my colleagues on the Commerce Committee, Senator HOLLINGS and Senator DANFORTH, in support of the nomination of Robert Mosbacher to be Secretary of Commerce. I had the privilege of introducing Bob Mosbacher to the Commerce Committee and moving his nomination to be reported to the floor of the Senate. I did so because I have the utmost confidence in the man and his ability to preside over the Commerce Department.

I have known Bob Mosbacher for over 25 years. Much has been made over the fact of his Texas roots. Make no mistake about it. Bob Mosbacher is a Texan, but in fairness, and to allow others of my colleagues to share in his success story, I should mention that he was born in New York and attended college in Virginia. For the past 40 years, he has been an oil executive, and he has been a success at it.

But his present address and business acumen do not of themselves give us enough insight into why he is an excellent choice to be Secretary of Commerce. I think Bob Mosbacher will make a fine Commerce Secretary because he has far ranging international business experience.

Being a sailor himself, Bob Mosbacher has a keen appreciation for what it takes to have an effective National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. He also is aware of the acute competition in the world community in matters of new technology. I think that he welcomes that challenge because he is driven to excel and to promote excellence in others.

His experience in business means that he is no newcomer to the world of international transactions and the need for a visible and aggressive U.S. presence in the international business community, especially with the advent of new technologies such as robotics, superconductivity, biotechnology, and high definition television, to name only a few.

The Commerce Department plays a central role in helping our investors of these pioneering technologies bring them to market. I have confidence that Bob Mosbacher will be a strong voice at the Cabinet table to give these kind of issues the type of priority they deserve.

Mr. President, rarely does time and circumstance meet with the man so precisely. In this appointment, they have come together. Bob Mosbacher is a man of integrity, sound judgment, acute business acumen, and a willingness to serve his country. He exemplifies the kind of new activism, cooperative spirit, and imagination in government President Bush has promised the American people. I think that, in time, he will come to be regarded as one of our outstanding Secretaries of Commerce.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today to support the confirmation of Robert A. Mosbacher to be the Secretary of Commerce. Last week, I had the opportunity to question and listen to Mr. Mosbacher's confirmation hearing before the Senate Commerce Committee. During his long career in the oil and gas industry, Mr. Mosbacher has shown himself to be a fine manager, which will serve him well as the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. Mosbacher was questioned regarding his views on international trade, technology policy, fisheries issues and ocean and science policies. I was impressed with his commitment to support U.S. economic growth and international competitiveness. He repeatedly stressed his support for expanding overseas markets for American goods and services. I believe he will be a strong advocate for the exporting community. During his questioning, he acknowledged that U.S. trade policy needed to be better coordinated between the different agencies. Within the Commerce Department's jurisdiction, he pledged to work toward more efficient coordination of export expansion and promotion, national security controls, effective administration of unfair trade laws and the aggressive use of our Foreign Commercial Services offices.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA] represents close to 50 percent of the Commerce Department's budget. It is responsible for the critical issues of weather forecasts, predicting global and environmental changes, and improving the quality of the coastal environment which is so important to the fishing industry. Yet, too often, the very important issues within NOAA's jurisdiction do not seem to receive the level of attention and support at the Secretary's level and within the administration that they should receive. As a member of the Commerce Committee, I expressed my desire to be consulted with regard to the selection of the new NOAA Administrator. I also stated my deep concern over the President Reagan's budget request which called for the slashing of the National Marine Fisheries Service budget from $175 million per year to only $99 million. Mr. Mosbacher has given me his commitment to be responsive on both of these issues.

In closing, let me just reiterate my strong support for Mr. Mosbacher's nomination and my desire to work with him on the critical issues within the Commerce Department's jurisdiction.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, what time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from South Carolina has expired. The time remaining under the control of the Senator from Missouri is 9 minutes.

Mr. DANFORTH. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of the nomination of Samuel K. Skinner to be Secretary of Transportation.

The clerk will report the nomination.

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Samuel Knox Skinner, of Illinois, to be Secretary of Transportation.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, today the Senate is considering the nomination of Samuel K. Skinner to be Secretary of Transportation. I am pleased to favorably recommend Mr. Skinner's confirmation based on my personal observations, as well as the unanimous recommendation of the Commerce Committee, which met earlier today and voted in favor of his confirmation.

I had not met Sam Skinner prior to his selection by President Bush to serve as the new Secretary of Transportation. However, since that time, I have had a number of opportunities to meet and talk with Mr. Skinner. We have had opportunities to discuss his background and his views regarding our Nation's transportation policy. I have also had a number of opportunities to discuss Mr. Skinner's nomination with individuals who have known and worked with him over the years, individuals who feel strongly that he has the potential to be an extremely effective Secretary of Transportation. Through this process, I have become convinced, as have my colleagues on the committee, that Sam Skinner is qualified to serve and should be confirmed by the Senate as the new Secretary of Transportation.

Support for any nominee for the position of Secretary of Transportation is not a decision that can be taken lightly. Given the breadth of responsibility within the Department of Transportation [DOT], this is a position which warrants careful examination. The challenges within the Department are numerous. The Secretary of DOT is charged with coordinating modal administrations with authority for aviation, motor and rail carriers, the maritime industry, passenger autos, mass transit, hazardous materials, and pipeline safety. The Department is also charged with supervising highway construction and is increasingly relied upon in the fight against drugs, through Coast Guard interdiction efforts. Competing demands and limited resources will pose a continuing challenge.

In my opinion, the members of the Commerce Committee have been thorough in examining Sam Skinner's qualifications to be Secretary of DOT. Mr. Skinner has been cooperative in this effort, in meeting with members individually, in testifying before the Commerce Committee at the confirmation hearing held on February 25, and in responding to to an extensive series of pre- and post-hearing questions submitted by the committee and its members.

Mr. Skinner emerged from this process in a very favorable light. His candor is refreshing.

I would like to commend Mr. Skinner upfront for his work to resolve a question raised by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, Senator METZENBAUM, regarding certain of Mr. Skinner's actions as U.S. attorney for the northern district of Illinois. Mr. Skinner served as U.S. attorney from 1975 through July 1977, after having served within the office as an assistant U.S. attorney from 1968 to 1975. To the best of my knowledge, the questions raised by Senator METZENBAUM have been satisfactorily addressed by Mr. Skinner. However, I feel they need to be discussed on the floor in order to set the record straight. I am also hopeful that Mr. Skinner's efforts in seeking to resolve this matter may be instructive as to how he might address controversies that arise within the Department.

Senator METZENBAUM has been concerned for some time with the manner in which the artificial sweetener, NutraSweet, gained Federal approval. It is Senator METZENBAUM's strong conviction that NutraSweet gained approval without full consideration of its potential health impacts on the American public. As part of his extensive investigation into this matter, Senator METZENBAUM raised a question concerning actions taken by Mr. Skinner as a former U.S. attorney charged with handling a portion of this matter. Specifically, Senator METZENBAUM questioned Mr. Skinner's failure to convene a grand jury to investigate allegations raised by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration [FDA] concerning alleged fraudulent testing of Aspartame—more commonly known as NutraSweet—by its manufacturer, the G.D. Searle Co. Mr. Skinner subsequently accepted a partnership position with Sidley & Austin, the law firm which represented G.D. Searle when this matter was under investigation within the U.S. attorney's office. Senator METZENBAUM initially questioned whether Mr. Skinner's accepting a position with Sidley & Austin was in any way connected with Mr. Skinner's actions in the NutraSweet matter. After reviewing the record, I am convinced that these matters were not connected and, I believe, Senator METZENBAUM is also now convinced of this.

Let me review a few key events. The committee's record of this matter indicates that in April 1976, the FDA wrote to then-U.S. attorney Sam Skinner informing him of an FDA investigation into the alleged false reporting of testing data by the G.D. Searle Co., the manufacturer of Aspartame and Aldactone, another product at issue. After being contacted by the FDA, Mr. Skinner assigned the matter to assistant U.S. attorneys within his office, who involved themselves for some months in investigating the matter. In January 1977, the FDA formally requested that a grand jury be convened to investigate Searle.

In reviewing this with Mr. Skinner, Senator METZENBAUM questioned why Mr. Skinner did not submit the matter to a grand jury before the formal FDA request in January 1977. Mr. Skinner testified that he felt he handled this properly by assigning his staff to do background work prior to a formal FDA request and while the FDA continued to review this matter administratively. For his part, Senator METZENBAUM was concerned about this time period since a strong argument could be made that the statute of limitations on one of the alleged offenses would run out in October 1977, a period of only 9 months following the formal FDA grand jury request.

In addressing his actions in this matter, Mr. Skinner testified that on February 21, 1977, he first learned that he would not be reappointed U.S. attorney by President Carter. Shortly after that, several law firm approached him regarding the possibility of joining their firms. One of these was Sidley & Austin, the law firm representing G.D. Searle in regard to the NutraSweet investigation brought to the attention of the Chicago U.S. attorney's office by the FDA.

Mr. Skinner stated before our committee that immediately after his initial employment discussion with Sidley & Austin, he recused himself from the Searle matter so as to avoid any conflict of interest. In a memo dated March 8, 1977, Mr. Skinner addressed his recusal, assigned the matter to his assistants, including his first assistant, and indicated that the decision with respect to submitting the matter to a grand jury should await the arrival of his successor as U.S. attorney. However, it was to be 4 months until his successor, Mr. Thomas Sullivan, was sworn in. Senator METZENBAUM questioned whether this was as an inordinate delay, particularly in light of the statute of limitations issue. It was also 4 months after writing the letter of recusal that Sam Skinner became a partner at Sidley & Austin, a position which he has held since that time.

In responding to this matter, Mr. Skinner testified that in recusing himself from the Searle investigation he should have sent a copy of his recusal memo to the Justice Department in Washington and to the FDA. However, he did not do so for reasons which he attributes to a lack of familiarity with the recusal process.

In summary, Mr. Skinner testified before our committee that he probably made mistakes in regard to the recusal memo, by not sending a copy to Washington in accordance with Justice Department regulations and in stating within the recusal memo that a decision as to presenting the matter to a grand jury should await his successor's appointment within "several weeks." However, for his part, Mr. Skinner notes that he directed his assistants to do preliminary work during this time and that this matter continued to be handled within the U.S. attorney's office. He cites as authority for this a memorandum sent to him for informational purposes only in April of 1977, in which his First Assistant handling the matter stated that he would proceed with this case since it would be "inappropriate" to delay the decision on submitting the Searle matter to a grand jury and that in his opinion "a grand jury investigation should be undertaken at the earliest practicable time."

Finally, the record indicates that the ultimate decision as to whether or not to prosecute in the Searle matter—and no prosecution was ultimately undertaken—was made by Mr. Skinner's successor as U.S. attorney, Thomas Sullivan, a Carter administration appointee who came on board in July 1977. And, while the FDA stated that it would have reached a different conclusion in regard to prosecution, it is clear to me that it was Mr. Sullivan's decision not to prosecute in this matter. Sam Skinner was not involved in this decision.

To clarify this, I personally talked with Mr. Sullivan who stated that Mr. Skinner had absolutely nothing to do with the case whatever after Sullivan took over as U.S. attorney. It was Sullivan who ultimately ordered the investigation dropped in December 1978 following investigation because, in Sullivan's view, it was not a proper case to bring. There was insufficient evidence that Searle had committed any crime. Mr. Sullivan told me that Mr. Skinner had "absolutely and firmly nothing to do with the case." Furthermore, he considers Mr. Skinner to be a man of impeccable integrity who did not act improperly in any way.

I believe that in his lengthy discussions with Mr. Skinner, Senator METZENBAUM reached a similar conclusion regarding Mr. Skinner's integrity. In my opinion, the record is clear and it is not one that cause me to question either Mr. Skinner's integrity or his fitness to serve as Secretary of Transportation. To the contrary, Sam Skinner has demonstrated absolutely forthrightness in addressing this matter with Senator METZENBAUM, with me, and with members of the committee. And, while I know that Senator METZENBAUM has continuing concerns over the NutraSweet approval and investigation process, by addressing this matter directly, Mr. Skinner was able to resolve what otherwise would have been a lingering controversy. He is to be commended for this.

I have spent a considerable amount of time detailing events because I feel it is necessary to set the record straight. However, I would like to conclude my remarks by discussing the task for which Mr. Skinner has now been nominated. From all appearances, Sam Skinner, is well suited for the duties of Secretary of Transportation.

Going to the Department of Transportation involves a great deal of responsibility since the Department has authority for a whole host of programs, including aviation, motor and rail carriers, the maritime industry, passenger autos, mass transit, hazardous materials, pipeline safety, Coast Guard. All these things Mr. Skinner spoke of in a knowledgeable fashion when he testified before the Commerce Committee.

On the matter of the Coast Guard, for years it has been sort of the stepchild in the Department because it originally did not vest in that particular Department. However, the Coast Guard handles itself extremely well, with limited personnel and a limited budget.

Yet squeaky wheel gets the grease in this political game in Washington. Since it was not squeaking, the Coast Guard has often been underfunded. In reality, we extend the constitutional limits or, let us say, jurisdiction of the United States, geographical limits, by one-third, some 13 years ago, when we extended the fisheries jurisdiction and thereafter by executive order of President Reagan, the economic zone to 200 miles. So immediately a one-third addition to the size of the United States was handed over to the jurisdiction and police responsibility of the Coast Guard. This additional responsibility must be addressed straightforward, including with the necessary resources.

We have given them less personnel than what they had 10 years ago. The first order of business last year was that they were cut $100 million, and we all know how the drug problem has exascerbated in the last several years. At our hearing, I wanted to make certain that Sam Skinner understood this particular problem, and he does. He is very knowledgeable on this score.

The distinguished Senator, my ranking member, who cooperated and helped lead the way throughout the entire process, went right through the matter of random drug and alcohol testing in public transportation with Mr. Skinner.

We all know from our experience that those engaged in public transportation are due and owing the highest degree of care under the law, not just ordinary care of a regular driver on the highways and/or any pilot, private pilot in the airways or otherwise.

In the legislation we introduced and that was adopted by the Senate in the last Congress, we wanted random drug testing for safety-sensitive transportation workers—the truck drivers, the airline pilots, the train conductors, trainmen and crews, and so forth, and not only on the matter of controlled drug substances but also on those uncontrolled. We particularly wanted to include liquor. However, in the rules issued the Department of Transportation, alcohol was not included. In our opinion that is a serious omission. Mr. Skinner assured us that he intends to address this problem and develop a meaningful policy dealing with the problem of alcoholism.

I have gone into aviation thoroughly, and I would say the majority of the questions by our colleagues on the committee dealt wtih aviation safety.

In the deregulation of the airline industry we did not mean to deregulate safety. Safety is an issue which must be given careful attention.

We must deal with problems like that which may have been a contributing factor in the recent Midlands crash in England, in which the cross wiring of engine and cargo fire warning and extenguishing systems may have been at issue. It is my understanding that the FAA is this afternoon putting out an order requiring that they go back to the planes already sold and have them inspected for this.

I welcome that action by Mr. McArter, the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration. Incidentally, I understand that he is leaving and Mr. Skinner will be receiving a new administrator in this particular regard.

So we will be going into that with the new Administrator. But Sam Skinner did not hesitate. He wants these inspections. He wants not only safety but he is aware, too, of the hub operation that brings about monopolistic practices. I am sure my distinguished senior colleague will be touching on that.

The maritime industry and hazardous materials transportation, were other issues that were gone into over an extensive hearing participated in by our entire membership.

I was also very pleased to have Mr. Skinner presented to the committee by both of our Senators, Senator DIXON and Senator SIMON and our leading Congressmen on the other side of the Capitol Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI, the chairman of our Ways and Means from Chicago, and the distinguished minority leader, Mr. MICHEL. They were all hardy in approbation, lavish in the praise, as the saying goes.

I am confident, Mr. DIXON, Mr. SIMON, Mr. LAUTENBERG, and others will also want to be heard today regarding this outstanding nominee.

The record has been clear insofar as Sam Skinner's outstanding tenure at the U.S. attorney's office is concerned. This tenure is appropriate to note since Mr. Skinner himself pointed out that his law enforcement background has relevance to duties he will undertake as Secretary, particularly in relation to Coast Guard drug interdiction efforts.

In addition, Sam Skinner comes to the Department of Transportation having served as chairman of the Regional Transportation Authority of Northeastern Illinois from 1984 until shortly after his selection by President Bush as Secretary-designate. In this role, Mr. Skinner oversaw the Nation's second-largest mass transit system, an experience that should suit him well in addressing transit and other issues within DOT.

Sam Skinner is also a licensed private airplane pilot and I am hopeful that this experience has also given him a strong base upon which he may make decisions relating to this critical industry, in terms of issues such as safety and infrastructure.

Let me conclude by stating that I have expressed some concerns about the policies that have been adopted in recent years by the administration and independent agencies in regard to deregulation. I have supported deregulation and will continue to do so where regulation is unnecessary and merely serves to create paperwork and feed the bureaucracy. However, deregulation does not mean no regulation. It does not mean ignoring congressional policies. Nor does it authorize agencies to proceed pell mell down the road pursuing only their own fanciful ideas that the best regulation is no regulation. I would like to think that we have seen enough of this and that, in the future, there will be an increasing interest by the executive branch in working with Congress to achieve common objectives. I would particularly like to think this will be true in the case of Sam Skinner and with a Department of Transportation administered by Sam Skinner.

In testifying before the Commerce Committee, Mr. Skinner stated that his first goal as Secretary would be to put into place a comprehensive departmental plan—a blueprint, if you will—for dealing with the Nation's transportation needs, looking at the strengths, weaknesses, and the synergy that exists between the various modes of transportation. I believe in and support his commitment to promoting a comprehensive transportation policy, just as I believe him when he says that it is his intention to work with Congress.

With this straightforward approach, and subject to his commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate, I would recommend that Mr. Skinner's nomination be confirmed. The members of the Senate Commerce Committee have unanimously recommended his confirmation.

Sam Skinner holds the potential to be a trusted member of the President's cabinet and a forceful Secretary of Transportation. I look forward to working with him in this capacity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, like Senator HOLLINGS, I approached the Skinner nomination with great care, read the views of many people who have worked with Sam Skinner over the years, listened to every word of his testimony before the Senate Commerce Committee, and came through the process believing that this is a singularly well qualified person to be Secretary of Transportation.

One thing that was remarkable about the hearing, which lasted about 2 or 3 hours, was the tone of the comments by Senators who participated in the hearing. The universal view, as far as I could ascertain it, was that here was a person who in appearing before the Senate Commerce Committee was an all star. His way of handling the committee and his way of responding to questions really set him apart from the ordinary, run-of-the-mill witness.

He is smart; he is responsive to questions; he is reasonable. He gives every indication of being fair minded.

As I looked through the background report on Sam Skinner, I saw that person after person who had known him over the years testified to his tremendous ability and personal character.

Here is a person with an outstanding reputation in every way. He is a lawyer by training. He served for a number of years as assistant U.S. attorney for the northern district of Illinois. He served for 2 years as U.S. attorney for the northern district of Illinois. He was vice-chairman of the President's Commission on Organized Crime. He has practiced law since 1977 with one of the great law firms of our country, the Chicago-based firm of Sidley & Austin.

He has also served as the chairman of the regional transportation authority of northeastern Illinois, which is the Nation's second largest mass transportation system. He is a private pilot with a personal interest in the operation of our airports.

During the course of the hearings, he expressed concern about the use of alcohol and drugs in public transportation. He indicated a keen awareness of that problem. He was very well versed on the problem of increased concentration in the American aviation industry, particularly the problem of concentration at our hubs.

I think the most impressive single thing about the testimony of Sam Skinner was his expressed desire to produce an overall national plan with respect to transportation. As I said in my remarks about Mr. Mosbacher, we in the Government suffer from a propensity to look at problems on a piecemeal basis, to deal with emergencies as they crop up, to put out fires as they arise. It is very rare that we in Government can take a long view of the overall needs of the country.

Mr. Skinner has stated in his testimony and he has stated privately before his confirmation hearing, the one thing he wants to do is take the long view of America's overall transportation needs and formulate a plan that deals with such matters as revitalizing our infrastructure and the challenges of transportation deregulation.

He is a person of breadth, a person of depth, and a person of skill and great character. I think that he is a 10 strike as far as the Bush administration is concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

I only have 12 minutes left. I am going to try to fit in my colleagues as they come to the floor and maybe borrow a little time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois, Mr. SIMON, is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. SIMON. I thank my colleague from South Carolina and I thank you, Mr. President.

I am pleased to join in saying I think the appointment of Sam Skinner is a superb appointment. Much of his background has been pointed out already.

I think the point that Senator DANFORTH just made about his willingness to take a long-term look at things really is important. We get so bottled down in going from one election to another and, frankly, in private America we go from one stockholders' meeting to another or one quarterly report to another. We need to do more long-range planning, particularly in transportation, in all modes of transportation.

He knows this mass transit field. There is no question in my mind that we are ignoring the great needs in mass transit in this Nation. He headed our Regional Transit Authority. As a pilot himself, he understands the safety problems.

And while my friend from South Carolina and my friend from Missouri do not go through O'Hare Airport as much as many of us go through O'Hare Airport, it is the busiest airport in this country and it is not as safe as it ought to be. We do not have the air traffic controllers there we ought to have. We do not have the technicians, we do not have the equipment we ought to have there. In terms of problem occurrences this year, we have had about six times as many as we have had at the next airport that has problems, Atlanta. We can do much better.

I am pleased to say that my colleagues have helped me on an amendment here and I am meeting now monthly with the FAA where they are giving me reports on what they are doing to improve the situation at O'Hare. But Sam Skinner understands that.

He is a person who I think has executive skills. Now we do not find out what those skills are really until you are tested in a Cabinet post. But I think you are going to find that he is going to be tested and tried and come out very, very well.

Then, finally, Mr. President, and my colleagues, I have absolutely no question about his integrity, his willingness to stand up and do the tough things that need to be done. When I say "integrity," I do not mean just not stealing money. I mean leveling with us on the needs of this country and where we have to go and how we build a better America in terms of transportation.

I think it is a superb appointment, Mr. President, and I trust that we will approve the nomination unanimously.

If I have any time left, I yield it back to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank my distinguished colleague from Illinois.

I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I thank the distinguished manager. I will try to condense my remarks, perhaps one of the more difficult assignments I have had since I have been here.

Mr. President, I rise to join my colleagues in support of the nomination of Samuel Skinner for Secretary of Transportation.

Over the last few weeks, I have had a chance to meet with him, to understand how he sees things, and review his experience. And for him it was an important period to learn about the ways of the Congress and the relationship that we might have.

He brings some important skills and experiences to his new job. For the last 4 years he has served as chairman of the Regional Transportation Administration of Northeastern Illinois. Coming from Chicago, he is also aware of the important role that Amtrak plays in a balanced national transportation system, an appreciation that has been sadly lacking in the last 8 years.

Throughout those years, we saw a pattern of neglect; a stubborn denial of the need for a balanced national transportation network. The administration pushed shortsighted policies, pitting one transportation mode against another, without an appreciation for the Nation's long-term needs.

Well, if we are going to keep this country on the move, we have to turn this around. Our infrastructure nationally is in a dangerous condition. It is estimated that it will take about $90 billion a year, just to meet present needs. Mr. Skinner himself has warned of an "infrastructure failure" if the pattern of Federal disinvestment continues. It cannot. His views and his experience in addressing the diverse transportation needs in Chicago are a sign of welcome change.

Mr. President, as chairman of the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee, I plan to be working very closely with the next Secretary of Transportation. My experiences with him to date bode well for a constructive working relationship.

There are many challenges ahead in transportation. In urban areas like New Jersey, we must promote and encourage the development of mass transit facilities, to keep our cities from choking on growth and auto exhaust. We have to, at the same time, make sure that we have an adequate highway system and that we are doing everything that we can to make those roads safe—safe from excessive speeds, safe from the tragedy of drunk driving. At the same time, as part of the transportation portfolio, we have to keep the Coast Guard and its functions afloat.

The Nation's aviation system suffers from a range of problems. There are serious questions about security, how to protect our passengers from the threat of terrorism. We must get the program for modernizing the air traffic control system back on track.

And, Mr. President, we need to make sure that the benefits of deregulation—lower fares and increased choices for consumers—are not stifled by increasing market concentration and reduced competition.

Mr. President, throughout the confirmation process, Mr. Skinner has shown that he has the ability to work with Congress to move ahead with a solid transportation agenda. I look forward to working with him and wish him well. I join my colleagues in supporting this nomination and expect a speedy confirmation.

Mr. THURMOND. Will the distinguished Senator yield 5 minutes to me?

Mr. DANFORTH. Yes, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina, Mr. THURMOND, is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, today, I rise in support of the nomination by President Bush of Samuel K. Skinner to be Secretary of Transportation.

Mr. Skinner brings to Washington significant transportation experience gained from his service for 4 years as chairman of the board of directors of the Regional Transportation Authority of Northeastern Illinois, the second largest public mass transportation system in the United States.

Mr. Skinner received his undergraduate degree in accounting from the University of Illinois and his law degree from Depaul University College of Law. Before attending law school, he served as an officer in the U.S. Army and worked in various marketing and managerial positions at IBM.

Mr. Skinner began his career in public service as an assistant U.S. attorney for the northern district of Illinois. While an assistant U.S. attorney, he twice received the Department of Justice Outstanding Service Award. In 1975, Mr. Skinner was appointed U.S. attorney for the northern district of Illinois by President Gerald R. Ford. His appointment marked the first appointment of a career prosecutor in the history of the northern district of Illinois.

While U.S. attorney, Mr. Skinner was a member of the Department of Justice White-collar Crime Committee and the U.S. Attorney General's Advisory Committee. In 1983, President Reagan appointed him to the President's Commission on Organized Crime where he was Vice Chairman.

After serving as U.S. attorney, Mr. Skinner joined the international law firm of Sidley and Austin where he is a senior partner in the Chicago office.

In Illinois, Mr. Skinner has served as chairman of the Illinois Capital Development Board, the Governor's Fraud Prevention Committee and the Governor's Task Force on Energy Conservation and Coal Conversion. Additionally, he has served on many boards and civic committees. Currently, he is a member of the board of directors of Lake Forest Hospital.

Mr. Skinner's legal background and extensive transportation experience well equip him to serve as Secretary of Transportation. I urge my colleagues to support his nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, the time to be equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

Without objection, the time will be equally divided.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield such time as I have remaining to my distinguished colleague from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I thank my colleague and friend, the distinguished chairman of the Commerce Committee, and my friend from Missouri, the distinguished ranking member, for giving me this opportunity to speak in support of Sam Skinner's nomination as Secretary of Transportation. I have known Sam for many, many years. He is surely one of the outstanding nominees of this new administration, and I consider him a close, personal friend.

I think one of the indications of the high regard in which Sam Skinner is held by the people of Illinois is the fact that the distinguished Republican leader from the House, BOB MICHEL, of Peoria, and the distinguished chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, DAN ROSTENKOWSKI, of Chicago, a Republican and Democrat—and the distinguished other Senator from our State, PAUL SIMON, and this Senator, all appeared at the hearings to express our very high regard for Sam Skinner. Those of us who know him consider him to be a Cabinet nominee of the highest quality, and I believe his background supports this conclusion.

Sam has been a senior partner of Sidney & Austin, an internationally renowned law firm in Chicago. Since 1984, he has presided as chairman of the board of directors of the Regional Transportation Authority of Northeastern Illinois, the second largest public mass transportation system in the country.

As U.S. attorney for the northern district of Illinois, he served for 9 years under three Presidents. The integrity and professionalism with which he carried out all of his duties was and remains today unquestionable. During his tenure as U.S. attorney, Secretary-designate Skinner was a member of the Departmetnt of Justice White-Collar Crime Committee and the Attorney General's Advisory Committee. In 1983, President Reagan appointed him to the President's Committee on Organized Crime, on which he served as Vice Chairman.

Throughout his private and public life Sam Skinner has pursued the highest standards of excellence for himself and this Nation. After serving in the Army, Sam won the IBM outstanding salesman of the year award. As a law student, he became a member of the University of Chicago's prestigious law review. He won numerous awards including Outstanding Young Citizen Award from the Chicago Junior Chamber of Commerce and outstanding alumni of DePaul University.

As chairman of Chicago's RTA, Sam has brought new respect for innovative, cost-effective approaches to urban transportation problems. In a time of budget constraints and increasing capital and operating needs in urban areas, he has developed short- and long-run strategic plans that have put RTA on an even fiscal keel. He knows how to get the most bang out of each scarce dollar, which makes him an especially good choice in this era of continuing budget crisis.

Most of Sam's adult life has been dedicated to positive public service. He has served as chairman of the Illinois Capital Development Group, the Governor's Fraud Prevention Commission, and the Governor's Task Force on Energy Conservation and Coal Conservation.

In short, Sam Skinner is one of the most dedicated, hard-working men I know of. I can personally attest to his forthrightness and vigilance in the service of honest, good government. Mr. President, there is no one I can recommend higher for this Cabinet post.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have fond memories of a certain former Secretary of Transportation—the longest serving Secretary at DOT. So, it is hard for me to imagine anyone being capable of filling Elizabeth's shoes.

But from everything I know and have heard about Samuel Skinner, he has the background and the proven ability to become a superb Secretary of Transportation.

As chairman of the board of directors of the Regional Transportation Authority of Northeastern Illinois—the second largest public mass transportation system in the country—Sam Skinner has had to deal with some of the knottiest problems confronting DOT—that of creating policies to cope with the challenges of finding affordable, comprehensive transportation for our Nation's major population centers.

In addition, Sam Skinner is an instrument rated pilot himself, so he is well aware of the issues relating to air travel and safety.

Sam Skinner has a long record of service in his home State of Illinois, including 9 years in the office of the U.S. attorney for the northern district of Illinois. He has also served at the chairman of the Illinois Capital Development Bank, the Governor's Fraud Prevention Commission, and the Governor's Task Force on Energy Conservation and Coal Conversion.

Mr. President, the Department of Transportation will have some very difficult problems to contend with in the coming months. But I have every confidence that Sam Skinner is up to the job and will lead the Department in a direction that will affirm the American people's confidence in our extensive and varied transportation system. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to unanimously support the nomination of Sam Skinner.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I will be happy to yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON].

(The remarks of Mr. DIXON pertaining to the introduction of legislation appear in today's RECORD under Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am pleased to express my support for the nomination of Mr. Samuel K. Skinner, to be the Secretary of Transportation.

Mr. Skinner brings to the Department of Transportation on-hands-experience in dealing with transportation issues. His tenure as the chairman of the Northeastern Illinois Regional Transportation Authority has given him a realistic view of the complexity of our transportation networks, and I am pleased to know that he is interested in developing a national transportation policy that involves all forms of transportation.

A good transportation system is a keystone to building a more prosperous future for West Virginia and other States. One element of a modern transportation system is reliable and reasonable air transportation.

In my own discussions with him in this regard, I was pleased to learn of his willingness to work with the Congress on resolving the funding shortfall for the Essential Air Service Program. This program has enabled 5 West Virginia communities, and over 100 others nationwide, to provide regularly scheduled air service.

Adequate funding for Amtrak and the local Rail Service Program, programs targeted for budget cuts, are also of importance to me. I have noted that in his confirmation hearings before the Senate Commerce Committee, Mr. Skinner expressed the desire to work toward finding a way to help Amtrak become self-sufficient. Again, I welcome his willingness to work with the Congress to address these problems.

Finally I want to say a word about airline deregulation. Airline deregulation has hurt West Virginia. We have suffered a loss of airline service. For example, in Charleston, WV, we have gone from having four major carriers service the city to having two major carriers and several commuter airlines.

Mr. Skinner stated at his confirmation hearing that he intends to review the impact of airline deregulation and competitiveness. I look forward to him doing this. According to a report that I requested from the Congressional Research Service, the quality and frequency of major carrier service to and from Charleston, WV, had declined while the average cost of a coach seat had either tripled or quadrupled.

I also hope that he will look at airline deregulation and its impact on airline safety, particularly in regard to commuter airlines. We are finding that as major carriers merge or move out of an area commuter airlines are taking their places.

In 1988, I received the three studies I had requested from the General Accounting Office regarding commuter airline safety—one on the Airport Certification Program, one on commuter pilot training, and one on commuter pilot hiring practices—all of which confirmed my suspicions that there are serious safety concerns with our commuter airlines. I am hopeful that the Secretary will review these studies and implement the recommendations as quickly as possible.

Again, Mr. Skinner has already demonstrated his willingness to work with the Congress on the myriad of transportation issues which will continue to confront us in the 101st Congress, and I look forward to working with him.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I have so very much enjoyed meeting and visiting with Sam Skinner. He comes to us from the Regional Transportation Authority of Northeastern Illinois—and he seems to be adjusting quickly and in good fashion to our way of business here. He will like it here.

He has testified before the Commerce Committee as well as the Environment and Public Works Committee. And he has fielded our questions regarding many important issues to us all: essential air service, Amtrak, airline deregulation, the Federal Highway Program, drug testing regulations, speed limit issues. The list is endless. But he has answered our questions honestly and frankly and with a sense of good humor, and I like that.

This appointment as Secretary of Transportation marks a return to public service for Sam. He served for 10 years in the Office of the U.S. attorney for the northern district of Chicago before turning his attention to the Public Mass Transportation System. He has a career chock full of accomplishments and prestigious honors, including receiving the Department of Justice outstanding service award on two occasions.

I find Sam to be a thoughtful individual, a man of integrity, fairness; firmness, and humor and great dedication—not only to George Bush, but to our country. He is a fine candidate and will prove to be a very wise choice for Secretary of Transportation by President Bush. I look forward to working with him.

Mr. President, Bob Mosbacher comes to us from Houston, TX—a man who is a long-time friend and confidant of President Bush.

He is a very successful businessman. He understands business and trade, and "booms and busts". He is product of the domestic oil and gas industry—an industry that is full of rewards—and great hazards—but also demands intelligence, and determination, integrity, dedication, and just an ability and desire to make things work. Bob Mosbacher is this kind of a man, embodying all of these characteristics and more.

He is all but a one-dimensional business man: Bob has a long record of public service and dedication to civic and charitable organizations. His lifetime is filled with events and opportunities whereby he shared his knowledge and reached out to help others. Bob understands the business world, but balances that knowledge with a compassion toward others that is so very important. He has also lent his many talents to the Republican Party over the years. And Bob is also a sailor—not many of those in Wyoming—showing the same dedication and enthusiasm and accomplishment for that sport that he gives to every other aspect in his life—and that he will surely bring to his position as Secretary of Commerce.

I look forward to working with Bob Mosbacher and I take this opportunity to welcome him and his gracious and talented wife, Georgette, to Washington.

Mr. President, I rise to lend my strong support to the nomination of Mrs. Carla Hills as our new U.S. Trade Representative. Having already served our Nation so well as a Cabinet member, she brings a wealth of knowledge and experience to a difficult but most important position.

While we continue to make progress on our serious trade deficit, much work remains to be done. Carla Hills is an intelligent, bright, tough, skilled negotiator who will represent us well in the rugged negotiations ahead.

What we so often forget in these discussions of trade policies is that we are dealing with our friends—Japan and the European Community. We would do ourselves and the world economy serious harm if those negotiations are not handled with the utmost diplomacy and skill. As a tenacious and effective lawyer I'm very confident of Carla Hills ability there.

While "free trade" is an ideal—not a reality—we must take the necessary steps to gain access to our trading partners' markets. If that means some tough medicine, we must be willing to take that route, being ever mindful that there are no winners in trade wars.

Carla Hills will do an excellent job. She is a fine lady, patient, fair, and able. She will make us very proud.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I rise to add my support to the nomination of Samuel K. Skinner to be Secretary of Transportation in the new Bush adminstration. Mr. Skinner will oversee an agency that has tremendous impact on many of the people of my own State of Montana. The Transportation Department contains the Federal Aviation Administration, the Federal Highway Administration, and the Federal Railroad Administration, among other important Government agencies. Clearly, Mr. Skinner will have a considerable impact upon the people of my State of Montana as they travel. I like people who set goals—Mr. Skinner has done that—has knowledge, talent, and skills to achieve those goals.

I have met and talked with Mr. Skinner and believe that he has the qualifications needed for the important assignment President Bush has selected for him. During his confirmation hearings, Mr. Skinner displaced a good working knowledge of the issues that are critical to my State of Montana. His reply to the question of continuing the essential air service leaves considerable room to work out an equitable solution that is fair to all the parties.

Mr. President, I will vote in favor of Mr. Skinner's confirmation and urge other Senators to do likewise. I yield the floor.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise today to speak on the nomination of Samuel Skinner to be Secretary of Transportation.

Mr. Skinner brings a wealth of business and management talent to his new position. He will need all of his skill and his experience as he faces the issues confronting his Department.

In particular, I am concerned about the aviation industry. The intent behind the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978 was to foster competition in the airline industry. What we have seen instead is cut-throat takeovers and buyouts of airlines that equals the worst of the "merger-mania" that has occurred in other sectors of the economy.

There are indications that competition is decreasing as the airline industry is narrowed down to fewer and fewer independent airlines. Fares have increased significantly in the past few months and show no indication of being lowered as the industry had indicated would be the case. In addition, there are still significant problems with airline safety and with scheduling and service.

There is another issue that has concerned me for some time and to which the new Secretary and Congress will have to pay close attention. That is the increasing development of so-called "hubs."

Increasingly, airlines are establishing these hubs and using them as a central routing point for their flights. Experts in the industry feel that this practice will lead to increased fares and decreased competition.

As the hub airline routes more and more of its flights through the hub, other airlines that use the airport, particularly regional airlines, may find it more and more difficult to compete. The end result could be market domination by a single airline, less competition and higher fares.

This is of particular concern in my State of Tennessee. Many of the communities of my State are served by a single carrier. They are one stop on a route for that airline. If the traffic on the route is disrupted at some point by the hub of another airline, it may well seriously affect the viability of that route for the airline.

This is an issue that Secretary Skinner will have to consider. It is also a matter that the Senate may well address in the months to come. I wish Secretary Skinner well in his new assignment and I look forward to working with him on this and other issues.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, today the Senate is considering the nomination of Samuel K. Skinner to be Secretary of the Department of Transportation. Mr. Skinner has a tough job ahead of him, but it will also be an exciting and rewarding one as he meets the challenges that will face the Secretary of Transportation.

The Environment and Public Works Committee held an informational hearing with Mr. Skinner on January 26, recognizing the Senate Commerce, Science, and Transportation's responsibility for reporting Mr. Skinner's nomination. The Environment and Public Works Committee has jurisdiction over the Federal-aid highway program and this is the largest single program within the Department of Transportation. Therefore, the committee has a great deal of interest in Mr. Skinner's views, his philosophy of management, and how decisions should be made. During our hearing, I was pleased to hear Mr. Skinner's pledge consult with Congress very closely when decisions are made. I believe he will include us in his decision-making process, and he will have to make some important decisions very soon.

Mr. Skinner spoke of his commitment and sensitivity to environmental issues during his responses to questions asked at the committee's hearing. I was encouraged by that. As Secretary of Transportation, he will soon have an opportunity to test his commitment to the environment. The Secretary will have to decide shortly whether the corporate average fuel economy [CAFE] standards should be relaxed for model year 1990.

Last year Secretary Burnley made the decision to relax the CAFE standards for model year 1989. This was done at a time when the evidence available suggested that standards should be tightened in order to control the problem of global climate changes that occur because of the emission of gases such as carbon dioxide from motor vehicles. Now Secretary Skinner will be faced with a similar choice, and, if he is serious about environmental protection, he will reject the petition to relax CAFE standards. The greenhouse issue is a serious one and I hope the new Secretary of Transportation will be a part of the solution we are seeking to this problem. We must use every means available to us to reduce harmful global climate changes, and the CAFE standards play a very important role in that effort.

After listening to Mr. Skinner's testimony before the Environment and Public Works Committee, I am confident that he recognizes what a serious decision this is, and that he will consult with us before he makes it.

I believe Mr. Skinner's education and experience will serve him well as Secretary of Transportation and I look forward to working with him as he develops a national transportation plan for our Nation.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today to support the confirmation of Samuel K. Skinner to be the Secretary of Transportation. Last week, I had the opportunity to question and listen to Mr. Skinner's confirmation hearing before the Senate Commerce Committee. I was extremely impressed with his forthright attitude and his knowledge of issues within the Transportation Department's jurisdiction.

The Secretary of Transportation is responsible for a wide range of transportation programs including aviation, motor and rail carriers, the maritime industry, passenger autos and mass transit. Authority for the Coast Guard also lies within his jurisdiction. It is hard to think of anyone whose daily life is not touched by the decisions made within this department.

During his confirmation hearing, Mr. Skinner expressed his desire to formulate a comprehensive national transportation policy. He recognizes that our Nation's infrastructure must not be neglected if we are going to continue our economic growth and move with vigor into the next century. In response to questioning, he stated that he would work to ensure that funds in the airport and airways trust fund be utilized for their dedicated purposes. He will also look at the issue of airline concentration at hub airports to ensure that the goals of airline deregulation are not thwarted. This was an area which I expressed a personal concern in seeing addressed as I feel that consumer choice and price competition has been seriously eroded in certain hub cities. This harms all who must travel to those cities for personal or business reasons.

Mr. Skinner served as chairman of the Regional Transportation Authority of Northeastern Illinois, the Nation's second largest mass transportation system. Given the urgency of addressing the transportation needs of the Puget Sound area, I am pleased that we will be able to work with somone of his caliber and background.

I found Mr. Skinner to be very impressive during his confirmation hearings and I look forward to what I believe will be his overwhelming approval by the Senate today.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, today I will vote in favor of the confirmation of Samuel Skinner to become Secretary of Transportation.

As many of my colleagues know, I have been very concerned about Mr. Skinner's position on essential air service. I threatened to hold up his confirmation until I was satisfied that he would allow Congress time to pass a supplemental appropriation before enacting a DOT proposal to eliminate air service to many rural communities throughout the country.

After several meetings and conversations with Mr. Skinner, I am satisfied that he will work with me and other Members of Congress to solve the funding shortfall problem without resorting to cutting service.

Mr. Skinner has also agreed to come to Montana and see first hand how critical air service is to the economic vitality of communities served by the Essential Air Service Program. I think the trip will be a real eye-opener.

I look forward to working with Mr. Skinner and hope that we can solve the essential air service funding problem once and for all.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the motion to reconsider the nominations en bloc is laid on the table. The President will be notified of the confirmation. And the Senate will return to legislative session.

The majority leader.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 114, a bill to declare certain activities of manufacturers of soft drinks to be unfair acts for purposes of the Federal Trade Commission Act, be jointly referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

JOINT REFERRAL OF NOMINATIONS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the following two nominations received by the Senate on January 3, 1989, be jointly referred as indicated:

Lew W. Cramer to be Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Director General of the United States and Foreign Commercial Service—to the Committees on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

Becky Norton Dunlop to be Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife, Department of the Interior—to the Committees on Energy and Natural Resources and Environment and Public Works.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Republican leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR DEPUTY LEGAL COUNSEL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President pro tempore of the Senate have a period of 90 days from the beginning of the first session of the 101st Congress to announce the appointment of the Deputy Legal Counsel of the Senate, pursuant to 2 U.S.C. 288 and Public Law 96-576.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on January 25, Senator GRAMM of Texas introduced S.J. Res. 30, a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget. On page S176 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that day, Senator GRAHAM of Florida is incorrectly listed as the author of that resolution. I ask unanimous consent that the permanent RECORD be corrected to reflect Senator GRAMM's authorship of the legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ELECTION OF WHIPS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I simply rise to announce today there were regional caucuses of the Democrats to elect deputy whips and assistant deputy whips, for four of the regions, and the people who were elected were as follows:

For the West, the deputy whip, Senator WIRTH, the assistant deputy whip, Senator ADAMS; for the South, the deputy whip, Senator GRAHAM, the assistant deputy whip, Senator ROBB; for the Midwest, the deputy whip, Senator HARKIN, the assistant deputy whip, Senator DASCHLE; and for the East, the deputy whip Senator LEAHY, the assistant deputy whip, Senator MIKULSKI. We expect to have a lot of activity and help from those people on matters on the floor and it will by no means be all of a partisan nature. When we are working as a bipartisan team on the floor as we often will; they will be helping see that we pass legislation we have agreed to and the Bush administration wishes as well as the Democratic program.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. EXON (for himself and Mr. KERRY):

S. 280. A bill to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act by designating a segment of the Niobrara River in Nebraska as a component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System; to the Committee on the Environment and Public Works.

NIOBRARA RIVER SCENIC RIVER DESIGNATION ACT OF 1989

● Mr. EXON. Mr. President, today I am again introducing the Niobrara Scenic River Designation Act.

This legislation represents the collective effort of landowners along the Niobrara River in Nebraska—one of the most beautiful places in this great country of ours. It would designate a 76-mile stretch of this river as a national scenic river and preserve this area essentially as it is today for generations to come.

Eight years ago, farm and ranch landowners along this stretch of river began to organize in order to formulate the proposal I am introducing today. In the spring of 1985, a group of these landowners met with me in Lincoln, NE, and I agreed to sponsor their proposal.

Following that introduction, a group of Nebraskans sought to develop a State plan for protecting the river. As such, I agreed to hold off on scenic river designation for a time. Unfortunately, their efforts have not come to fruition, and I believe it's high time we move forward with this tailor-made bill which is supported by owners representing a majority of the land involved.

The purpose of scenic designation is to preserve the free-flowing condition of this portion of the Niobrara River and the beauty of the associated landscape for the benefit and enjoyment of future generations. I have on many occasions referred to the Niobrara River as the Crown Jewel of Nebraska.

The shear beauty of this place is difficult to convey with words, but those who have seen it know exactly what I mean. I want to be sure that this natural heirloom is passed on to future generations.

Scenic rivers are free of impoundments, with shorelines and watersheds still mostly undeveloped, but still accessible by roads. Scenic designation is less restrictive than a wild river designation and would retain the character of the area in basically its present condition. The Interior Department would be allowed to purchase scenic easements from landowners along the shoreline to ensure that the beauty of this area is preserved.

At the same time, Mr. President, this legislation would ensure that an appropriate balance be maintained between the goals of preservation and development. For decades, Nebraska farmers and ranchers have helped to feed America and the world. Agriculture is our State's lifeblood and most important industry. Yet, American agriculture and the rural lifestyle is threatened today by circumstances familiar to us all.

This legislation accomplishes this needed balance by specifically providing that it will not hinder the innovative groundwater recharge plan to provide irrigation water to those who need it in north-central Nebraska. In a few moments, I will introduce legislation here in the U.S. Senate authorizing this groundwater recharge plan as a substitute for the Norden Dam which was voted down by the House of Representatives in 1982.

While most of the components of this irrigation project would be downstream from and unaffected by this 76-mile portion of the Niobrara to be designated as scenic, the springview component of the project falls within this area. Therefore, this bill provides specific authority for that portion of the project to be built within the scenic area.

Mr. President, there are several other provisions of this legislation where deviations from the basic Wild and Scenic Rivers Act of 1968 have been made. In fact, the Niobrara Scenic River Designation Act contains significant features which are tailored specifically to the needs and desires of the landowners and others in the area. We have asked for and included sound suggestions for improvements by all involved. I renew my plea for constructive suggestions.

For example, the bill contains a Niobrara Scenic River Advisory Council composed of farm and ranch landowners, State and local government representatives and others who will play an important role in developing and reviewing the Interior Department's management plan for the area. This will ensure local input and review of the management plan which will implement scenic river designation.

This bill specifically instructs the Secretary of the Interior that existing land use practices-including established agricultural and livestock operations, timber management practices and private campgrounds—will be compatible which scenic designation. Additionally, provision is made for replacement and additional structures and the normal activities of existing irrigation projects will not be affected. The use and allocation of water rights by the State of Nebraska will also not be affected.

The Interior Department may also share in the expenses of conservation and streambank erosion control as well as local government functions such as litter control, law enforcement and road maintenance.

The latter option, assistance with road maintenance, is one that I believe could prove very worthwhile for local taxpayers. The Niobrara is immensely popular with Canoeists. With any influx if visitors comes increased demands on public services such as roads. It only makes sense to provide specific authority for the Secretary of help with such expenses and I am particularly pleased this provisions is spelled out in the bill.

It is the intention of the landowners along the Niobrara that this be a cooperative venture—with as little involvement with farm and ranch operation as possible—with the Federal Government.

While the bill provides for the purchase of scenic easements from landowners, private land would still remain the property of landowners and on the tax rolls. These easements would be purchased on a willing-seller basis except for extreme circumstances where activities occur which pose a substantial threat to the values for which the river was designated. Landowners will continue to control access to their land for hunting, fishing and camping which would continue to be at each landowner's prerogative rather than Federal control. The idea behind this legislation is to create a limited partnership with the Federal Government.

Mr. President, the Niobrara Scenic River Designation Act indeed represents a well thought-out balance between preservation and development. Its cost is low; $3.5 million will be authorized for the purchase of scenic easements and $1.0 million authorized for development, principally at the public access sites at bridge crossings. This investment in our future is a bargain with enormous return.

Scenic river designation also holds great promise in terms of local economic development. Visitors spend money and residents of the area will have an opportunity to meet their needs through the sale of a variety of goods and services. An analysis by a respected expert on such matters predicts this designation will generate $4 million of additional sales or output in local counties, resulting in a $1.2 million increase in net income and about 60 jobs.

This entire undertaking represents one of the most important and pleasurable duties of a U.S. Senator. It is truly democracy at work since it is a joining together of citizens with a common purpose who have petitioned their Government to enact their wishes into law. This bill is their bill. They wrote it and I am privileged to be their elected representative who can help them achieve the goal for which they have worked so long and hard.

My new colleague from Nebraska, Senator BOB KERREY, supports this legislation and has joined me as a cosponsor. I am pleased that identical legislation has been introduced in the House by Representative PETER HOAGLAND and that Nebraska's Governor has voiced her support. I hope the rest of the Nebraska congressional delegation will join me in this endeavor once they have had the time to study it and talk to the landowners as I have been able to do.

Mr. President, the Niobrara River Valley is one of the most beautiful areas in our great country. I wish I could take every Member of the Senate up there. It is rich in ecological diversity and supports an abundance of wildlife—from bald eagles to whitetailed deer to whooping cranes. Canoeing and fishing also abound. Farms and ranches along the valley are constant reminders of Nebraska's agricultural heritage and current role as one of America's principal food-supplying States.

As President John F. Kennedy said in 1961, "It is our task in our time and in our generation to hand down undiminished to those who come after us, as was handed down to us by those who went before, the natural wealth and beauty which is ours." This is the spirit in which I introduce this legislation today and hope that this collective effort becomes law.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and a letter on the subject be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill and letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 280

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Niobrara River Scenic River Designation Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. DESIGNATION OF RIVER.

Subsection (a) of section 3 of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (89 Stat. 111; 16 U.S.C. 1274(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"( ) NIOBRARA, NEBRASKA.—(A) The segment from Borman Bridge Southeast of Valentine approximately 76 miles downstream to the bridge crossing the Niobrara on State Highway 137, as generally depicted on the map entitled 'Boundary Map, Proposed Niobrara Scenic River Valley Corridor, 1985'; to be classified as as a scenic river and administered by the Secretary of the Interior, in consultation with the Niobrara Scenic River Advisory Council, established by section 3 of the Niobrara River Scenic River Designation Act of 1989.

"(B) After consultation with the Niobrara Scenic River Advisory Council, with State and local governments, and with the interested public and within one year from the date of enactment of this paragraph, the Secretary shall take such action as is required under subsection (b) of this section with respect to development of a management plan. Boundaries of the river valley corridor shall include land within 880 yards of each side of the Niobrara River. Inclusion of additional area within the boundaries may be added; however, no land or interest in land may be acquired within the expanded boundaries without the consent of the owner thereof.

"(C) In addition to those values specified in section 1(b) of this Act which are associated with the Niobrara River Valley, the Secretary is hereby directed through the management plan to protect the pastoral landscape and the established farming and ranching lifestyles of the rural people who depend upon the land in this unique area.

"(D) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, a diversion dam and pumping station may be constructed on the Niobrara River to provide water for an 8,000 acre tract near Springview consistent with the report of the State of Nebraska authorized by Public Law 98-63, entitled Nebraska State-led O'Neill Unit Alternatives Study and dated January 31, 1985.

"(E)(i) Notwithstanding any provision to the contrary contained in section 6(a) of this Act, no land or interest in land may be acquired for purposes of the river designated under this paragraph without the consent of the owner, except that a conservation easement in no more than 5 percent of the privately owned acreage within the designated river corridor and within 880 yards of the river (other than established farmsteads which are presently occupied) may be acquired without the consent of the landowner if activities are occurring or threatening to occur in the area to be acquired which pose a substantial threat to the integrity of the river and the values for which it was designated. Subsurface rights, including natural gas and petroleum resources, may not be acquired by the Secretary without the consent of the owner thereof. Provision shall be made to allow the surface activities necessary for the economical exploration for and the development of natural gas and petroleum resources.

"(ii) In recognition of the special river recreational values of the upper portion, public access easements may be acquired at the following locations: Berry Bridge, Allen Bridge, Brewer Bridge, Rockford Bridge, Norden Bridge, and Meadville Bridge. However, any public access easement that would be within one-quarter mile of an occupied residence and on the same unit of property must be acquired on a willing-seller basis only. In the lower portion, public access easements may be acquired only on a willing-seller basis at the following locations: Highway 183 Bridge, Riverview Bridge, Carns Bridge, and Highway 137 Bridge. Such locations shall not be used for purposes of public camping and shall not exceed 5 acres per locations. Nothing in this clause shall preclude the acquisition of other lands for public recreational use with the consent of the owner thereof. Easements for scenic overlooks adjacent to existing public roads may be acquired with the consent of the landowners thereof within the river valley. No interests in land in the segment from the Borman Bridge to the Cornell Dam may be acquired without the consent of the owner thereof.

"(iii) A donation of land or interests in land within and beyond the specified boundaries of the designated river corridor may be accepted by the Secretary if such donation contributes to the purposes of this paragraph.

"(F)(i) The Secretary shall permit existing land use practices as conducted by present owners or operators within the designated river corridor on the date of enactment of this paragraph, including established agricultural and livestock operations, timber management practices, and private campgrounds. Structures in place or under construction at the time of designation shall be considered compatible with such designation, and repair or replacement of said residential, farmstead, agricultural (including private irrigation and fencing systems), fish hatchery and recreational facilities, bridges and other structures shall not be foreclosed. Normal activities within established farmsteads and regarding established residences shall not be subject to restriction.

"(ii) Nothing in this subparagraph shall authorize the Secretary to control hunting, fishing, or camping on or public access to private property within the designated scenic river boundaries unless these rights are purchased from the landowner. Individuals owning more than 40 acres of land within the designated river corridor on the date of the enactment of this paragraph shall be permitted to relocate their primary residence, build an additional residence or farmstead (for family farm and ranch purposes), or build one residence or cabin (if none now exists) on their property within 880 yards of the river. Any additional new nonagricultural structures beyond established farmsteads may be subject to screening or setback requirements established to preserve the scenic values of the river corridor. Continued operation and maintenance of the Cornell Dam powerworks shall be permitted, although public safety markers and portage facilities may be provided.

"(G) The Secretary may enter into cooperative agreements with local units of government for maintenance of existing access and other roads within the designated river corridor, law enforcement, control of trespass, litter control, interpretive programs, and other associated visitor services.

"(H) The Secretary may share in the expense of instituting conservation and streambank erosion control practices on private land which will contribute to and enhance scenic or natural values or contribute to the protection of agricultural land, established bridges, and resources of historical or archaeological significance within the river corridor.

"(I) For purposes of carrying out the provision of this paragraph with respect to the river designated by this paragraph, there are authorized to be appropriated $3,500,000 for acquisition of interests in lands and $1,000,000 for development.".

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF NIOBRARA SCENIC RIVER ADVISORY COUNCIL.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—In order to carry out the provisions of this Act, the Secretary shall establish a Niobrara Scenic River Advisory Council to consist of eleven members appointed by the Secretary—

(1) three of whom shall be owners of farm or ranch property within the upper portion of the designated river corridor between the Borman Bridge and the Meadville Bridge;

(2) three of whom shall be owners of farm or ranch property within the lower portion of the designated river corridor between the Meadville Bridge and the bridge on Highway 137;

(3) one of whom shall be a canoe outfitter in the upper portion of the designated river;

(4) one of whom shall be a representative of the State of Nebraska;

(5) two of whom shall be representatives of the affected county governments or natural resources districts; and

(6) one of whom shall be a representative of a private citizens conservation organization whose purposes include the philosophy of river conservation.

At least five of the six landowners appointed to the Council under clauses (1) and (2) shall be residents of Brown, Cherry, Keya Paha, or Rock Counties.

(b) TERMS OF MEMBERS.—The terms of appointment to the Council shall be five years and no individual shall serve more than two terms.

(c) ROLE OF COUNCIL.—The Advisory Council shall participate in and have a significant role in the development and review of the management plan for the river designated in this Act, and in the formulation and review of subsequent agency plans including annual operation and maintenance plans.

(d) CHAIRPERSON; VACANCIES; REASONABLE EXPENSES.—The Secretary shall designate one of the members of the Advisory Council, who is a permanent resident of Brown, Cherry, Keya Paha, or Rock Counties, to serve as Chairperson. Vacancies on the Advisory Council shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made. Members of the Advisory Council shall serve without compensation as such, but the Secretary is authorized to pay expenses reasonably incurred by the Advisory Council in carrying out its responsibilities under this Act on vouchers signed by the Chairperson.

COLORADO STATE UNIVERSITY, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURAL AND RESOURCE ECONOMICS,
Fort Collins, CO, October 26, 1987.

Mr. GREG PALLAS,
Executive Assistant, Senator J. James Exon, Nebraska, U.S. Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PALLAS: This is in response to your request for information on the expected regional economic impact of possible designation of a 76 mile section of the Niobrara as a wild, scenic, and recreational river.

I was born in Seward County, and lived in the state for 38 years. Some years ago when I was on the staff of the University of Nebraska, I assisted the wild and scenic river study team in assessing the recreation potential of the river. I boated a section of the river with an interagency group of scientists. Later, I prepared information for an association of local ranchers who were interested in protecting a section of the Niobrara. This experience prompts me to apply my expertise as a recreaton resource economist in an attempt to answer your questions to the best of my knowlege.

I will draw on the results of my comprehensive study of 11 potential wild and scenic rivers (1984) and my textbook entitled, Recreation Economic Decisions: Comparing Benefits and Costs (1986).

The designation of 76 miles of river is expected to generate approximately $4 million of additional output or sales in the local counties. This would result in about $1.2 million increase in net income, adding about 60 new jobs. Additional taxes would be at least $200,000 per year.

These estimates are based on the following assumptions. Annual recreation use of the 76 miles section will increase by 228,000 recreation visitor days of 12 hours. This is equal to 40 percent of the reported use per mile for potential wild and scenic rivers in Colorado, owing to differences in size and characteristics. Expenditures will average $14.50 per visitor day in 1897 dollars, 50 percent in the local region and 50 percent enroute and where they live. In addition, 5 percent of expenditures for durable consumer goods such as boats and related recreation equipment will be made in the local region. The regional multiplier is 2.0, consistent with recreation impacts of comparable sites. Net income is assumed to equal 30 percent of direct and indirect output or sales, and taxes 5 percent. New employment is assumed to be equal to total net income divided by $20,000. Of course, the actual experience in the local region of the Niobrara river may vary which would change the estimated regional impact. However, each of these assumptions is based on the best available information for comparable recreation sites, adjusted to Niobrara River conditions.

In addition, there may be a substantial economic impact on the Nebraska economy outside of the local region. Without designation and management of the Niobrara as a wild and scenic river, existing and potential residents of the state who engage in this type of recreation activity may be forced to travel out of state to do so. If we assume that they would be inclined to use the Niobrara instead, then designation could generate up to $20.6 million of additional output and sales in the state outside of the local region of the river. This would result in net income of $6.2 million, adding about 309 new jobs. Additional taxes would amount to more than $1 million.

Sincerely yours,

RICHARD G. WALSH,
Professor.

By Mr. EXON (for himself and Mr. KERREY):

S. 281. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to modify the construction, operation, and maintenance of the O'Neill unit, Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program, Nebraska; to the Committee on Energy.

MODIFICATION OF THE O'NEILL UNIT

● Mr. EXON. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation requiring the Secretary of the Interior to modify the principal features of the authorized O'Neill unit of the Pick-Sloan Missouri River Basin Program, replacing the decades old dam and reservoir components of the project with an innovative ground water recharge plan.

These modifications are designed to implement the recommendations of the State-led study of less costly, less environmentally harmful alternatives as required by Public Law 98-63. This study was conducted by the State's water experts as a preliminary evaluation of workable alternatives to the use of a dam and reservoir.

The State recommends an O'Neill unit project that can be built to meet the water needs of north central Nebraska without the use of a costly and controversial dam and reservoir. The State plan recommended to the Bureau of Reclamation could be built in a third of the time, at less than half the cost.

The "consensus" proposal meets two important criteria: Preservation of the existing authorization and resolution of the conflicts and opposition to the dam and reservoir components of this long debated water project for north central Nebraska.

This project, originally authorized in 1954 and again reauthorized in 1972, has been plagued with fatal problems. The project narrowly escaped deauthorization by the House in 1980 by only two votes. Recognizing the perils facing the authorized projects, Nebraskans began the process of searching for a workable alternative.

An entrenched bureaucracy resisted any efforts to design a more acceptable alternative. The 1982 House vote to terminate all funding for the Norden Dam again underscored the need to find an acceptable alternative. In 1983, I called for a study which relied upon the State's leadership and expertise in advancing an economical and environmentally sound alternative.

This study, conducted by the director of the Nebraska Department of Water Resources, was released in January of 1985. The report, entitled "Nebraska State-Led O'Neill Unit Alternative Study" provides the basis of the changes to the O'Neill unit which my legislation seeks to implement.

The search for an alternative was based upon a firm belief that failure to do so will end all water development opportunities for north central Nebraska.

I greatly appreciate the Bureau's recognition that alternatives which meet the water needs of north central Nebraska without the use of a costly dam and reservoir must now be considered if we are to have any project at all.

Our choice is not between the old Norden Dam or an alternative. The choice, quite simply, is between an alternative or nothing at all.

It is now clear that the original decades old concept for the O'Neill unit will never prevail.

I am proposing legislation to modify the features of the authorized project, eliminating the dam and reservoir and replacing those features with ground water recharge components consistent with the State's recommendations.

This project can offer benefits to the entire Nation. The drought of 1988 proved the value of having an efficient, effective, and environmentally sound irrigation delivery system in place. Doing so makes long-term sense for the State of Nebraska and the Nation. The drought highlighted the fact that we must make good use of our water resources.

Mr. President, this legislation offers a unique opportunity for the future of water development in our Nation. It is an opportunity for the Bureau of Reclamation to move forward into the future. We have been building water projects over the past 80 years in the same way, using costly and controversial surface impoundments. This legislation offers an opportunity to head down a new, more affordable water development path.

This legislation will reduce the cost of this water project by more than half of the original cost. With Federal dollars becoming more constrained, these modifications to the authorized project may offer a model for other Federal projects using new technology to meet an age-old problem in a less costly and less environmentally harmful manner.

Certainly, this new direction for the O'Neill unit would not be entirely possible without the support of the local reclamation district as well. It has been a long and trying journey for these Nebraskans who have been waiting 30 years for this project.

In addition, this project is located on the Niobrara River, the only remaining east-west running river on the northern Great Plains unimpeded by a major reservoir. This is a beautiful and biologically unique area which must be preserved and I have proposed to do just that in the scenic river legislation I just introduced. The Niobrara River is a treasure of Nebraska. With this project, water development and conservation can exist together.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate's favorable and prompt consideration of this legislation which not only will save the Nation's taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars but will also help pave the way for affordable and environmentally sound water development in the year's ahead.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 281

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to modify the O'Neill unit, Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program, Nebraska in accordance with the amendments made by this Act.

SEC. 2. Section 401 of the Reclamation Project Authorization Act of 1972 (Public Law 92-514) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 401. (a) The Neill unit, previously authorized as an integral part of the Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin program by the Act of August 21, 1954 (68 Stat. 757), is reauthorized as a unit of that project for the purposes of providing irrigation water for more than ninety thousand acres of land, flood control, fish and wildlife conservation and development, public outdoor recreation, and for other purposes. The construction, operation, and maintenance of the O'Neill unit shall be subject to the Federal reclamation laws (Act of June 17, 1902, 32 Stat. 388, and Acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto). The principle features of the unit shall include an infiltration gallery system or similar system for extracting water from the Niobrara River alluvium, pipeline conveyance and distribution system, pump station, injection wells or other system for accomplishing groundwater recharge, Pick-Sloan Missouri River Basin power, and other necessary works needed to effect the aforesaid purposes, and shall be generally consistent with the report of the State of Nebraska authorized by Public Law 98-63, entitled 'Nebraska State-led O'Neill Unit Alternatives Study' and dated January 31, 1985."

By Mr. PELL:

S. 283. A bill to provide for the establishment of the U.S. Coast Guard as an independent agency for certain purposes, to transfer certain functions of the Secretary of Transporation to the Commandant of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transporation.

U.S. COAST GUARD ACT OF 1989

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am today reintroducing legislation—legislation which I first introduced in the closing days of the 100th Congress—to remove the U.S. Coast Guard from the Department of Transportation and to establish it as an independent agency of the Federal Government.

The Coast Guard is charged with fulfilling some of the most basic functions of Government and with providing essential services to the people. Indeed, in recent years, the Congress has added significantly to the duties and responsibilities of the Coast Guard. Today the Coast Guard has the major responsibility not only for the traditional functions of search and rescue and maritime safety, but also for interdiction of illegal drug shipments, for enforcement of marine environmental protection laws, for enforcement of fishery conservation laws, and for the coastal defense of the Nation.

The status of the Coast Guard as just one of many administrative units of the Transportation Department is hampering the Coast Guard in fulfilling its responsibilities. As a result of its placement within the Transportation Department, the Coast Guard has found itself in the middle of national priority and budgetary squabbles between the administration and Congress involving efforts to protect, reduce, or eliminate funding in the Federal budget for important transportation programs such as Amtrak, highway and airline safety, and urban mass transportation.

The net result has been that the Coast Guard has borne much of the brunt of budget reductions which have occurred within the annual appropriations for the Department of Transportation. The impact on the Coast Guard has been unfortunate, usually unintended, but nevertheless servere. For example, last year, the Coast Guard was required to absorb on short notice more than $100 million in cuts from its fiscal year 1988 budget. Funds for such high-priority functions as drug interdiction were slashed by 55 percent, and vessels and stations available for search and rescue to protect the lives and equipment of fishermen were reduced as well.

Fortunately under the recently enacted budget for fiscal year 1989, the Coast Guard was able to resume many of the critical drug interdiction efforts, and restore operations from key search and rescue stations closed earlier in 1988. Nevertheless, the Coast Guard, so long as it remains an administrative unit of the Department of Transportation, will be subject to severe budget reductions as a result of continuing budget disagreements between the administration and the Congress.

Establishing the Coast Guard as an independent agency would help eliminate these problems. It would free the service from entanglement with entirely irrelevant budget considerations within the Department of Transportation. The bill will give the Coast Guard the stature and the visibility necessary to permit consideration of its funding needs at a higher and more appropriate level of national policy.

Important in this consideration of the Coast Guard's future, Mr. President, will be the results of a study by the General Accounting Office which I along with the leadership of the House of Representatives and the Senate requested late last year during consideration of the omnibus drug and abuse legislation of 1989. This study which is to be reported to the Congress by November 30, 1989, will review all options for Coast Guard reorganization, including the creation of a separate department for the service. I ask unanimous consent that the text of this letter requesting the GAO study be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, I am reintroducing this legislation at this time with the hope that the budgetary concerns of the Coast Guard will be the focus of serious examination by my colleagues in the 101st Congress. I welcome cosponsors to this important legislation, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 283

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "United States Coast Guard Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act, unless otherwise provided or indicated by the context—

(1) the term "Coast Guard" means the United States Coast Guard as established under section 1 of title 14, United States Code;

(2) the term "Commandant" means the Commandant of the Coast Guard appointed under section 44 of title 14, United States Code;

(3) the term "Federal agency" has the meaning given to the term "agency" by section 551(1) of title 5, United States Code;

(4) the term "function" means any duty, obligation, power, authority, responsibility, right, privilege, activity, or program; and

(5) the term "office" includes any office, administration, agency, institute, unit, organizational entity, or component thereof.

SEC. 3. AMENDMENTS TO CHAPTER 1 OF TITLE 14, UNITED STATES CODE.

(a) COAST GUARD AS MILITARY SERVICE AND INDEPENDENT ESTABLISHMENT.—Section 1 of title 14, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 1. Establishment of Coast Guard

"(a) The Coast Guard as established January 28, 1915, shall be a military service and a branch of the armed forces of the United States at all times. For purposes of all Federal laws, the Coast Guard shall be treated as an independent establishment as defined under section 104 of title 5, except when operating as a service in the Navy.

"(b) For purposes of the preparation and submission of the budget submitted by the President to the Congress under the provisions of section 1105(a) of title 31, the Coast Guard shall be treated as an independent establishment as defined under section 104 of title 5.".

(b) RELATIONSHIP TO NAVY DEPARTMENT.—Section 3 of title 14, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 3. Relationship to Navy Department

"Upon the declaration of war or when the President directs, the Coast Guard shall operate as a service in the Navy, and shall so continue until the President, by Executive order, determines the Coast Guard shall act as an independent establishment as defined under section 104 of title 5. While operating as a service in the Navy, the Coast Guard shall be subject to the orders of the Secretary of the Navy who may order changes in Coast Guard operations to render them uniform, to the extent he deems advisable, with Navy operations.".

(c) DEFINITION OF SECRETARY.—Section 5 of title 14, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 5. Secretary defined

"As used in this title, the term 'Secretary' means—

"(1) the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of the Navy, as applicable, when the Coast Guard is operating in the Department of Defense or Department of the Navy; and

"(2) the Commandant of the Coast Guard when the Coast Guard is performing functions which prior to the date of the enactment of the United States Coast Guard Act of 1989, would have been performed while operating in the Department of Transportation.".

SEC. 4. TRANSFERS.

There are transferred to the Commandant all functions which the Secretary of Transportation exercised before the date of the enactment of this Act with regard to the Coast Guard and all related functions of any officer or employee of the Department of Transportation.

SEC. 5. PERSONNEL PROVISIONS.

(a) APPOINTMENTS.—The Commandant may appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, including investigators, attorneys, and administrative law judges, as may be necessary to carry out the functions of the Commandant and the Coast Guard. Except as otherwise provided by law, such officers and employees shall be appointed in accordance with the civil service laws and their compensation fixed in accordance with title 5, United States Code.

(b) EXPERTS AND CONSULTANTS.—The Commandant may obtain the services of experts and consultants in accordance with section

3109 of title 5, United States Code, and compensate such experts and consultants for each day (including traveltime) at rates not in excess of the rate of pay for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of such title. The Commandant may pay experts and consultants who are serving away from their homes or regular place of business travel expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence at rates authorized by sections 5702 and 5703 of such title for persons in Government service employed intermittently.

SEC. 6. DELEGATION AND ASSIGNMENT.

Except where otherwise expressly prohibited by law or otherwise provided by this Act, the Commandant may delegate any of the functions transferred to the Commandant by this Act and any function transferred or granted to the Commandant after the effective date of this Act to such officers and employees of the Coast Guard as the Commandant may designate, and may authorize successive redelegations of such functions as may be necessary or appropriate. No delegation of functions by the Commandant under this section or under any other provision of this Act shall relieve the Commandant of responsibility for the administration of such functions.

SEC. 7. REORGANIZATION.

The Commandant is authorized to allocate or reallocate any function transferred under section 4 among the officers of the Coast Guard, and to establish, consolidate, alter, or discontinue such organizational entities in the Coast Guard as may be necessary or appropriate.

SEC. 8. RULES.

The Commandant is authorized to prescribe, in accordance with the provisions of chapters 5 and 6 of title 5, United States Code, such rules and regulations as the Commandant determines necessary or appropriate to administer and manage the functions of the Commandant or the Coast Guard.

SEC. 9. TRANSFER AND ALLOCATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS AND PERSONNEL.

Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the personnel employed in connection with, and the assets, liabilities, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds employed, used, held, arising from, available to, or to be made available in connection with the functions transferred by this Act, subject to section 1531 of title 31, United States Code, shall be transferred to the Coast Guard. Unexpended funds transferred pursuant to this section shall be used only for the purposes for which the funds were originally authorized and appropriated.

SEC. 10. INCIDENTAL TRANSFERS.

The Director of the Office of Management and Budget, at such time or times as the Director shall provide, is authorized to make such determinations as may be necessary with regard to the functions transferred by this Act, and to make such additional incidental dispositions of personnel, assets, liabilities, grants, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds held, used, arising from, available to, or to be made available in connection with such functions, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act. The Director shall provide for the termination of the affairs of all entities terminated by this Act and for such further measures and dispositions as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 11. EFFECT ON PERSONNEL.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided by this Act, the transfer pursuant to this Act of full-time personnel (except special Government employees) and part-time personnel holding permanent positions shall not cause any such employee to be separated or reduced in grade or compensation for one year after the date of transfer of such employee under this Act.

(b) EXECUTIVE SCHEDULE POSITIONS.—Any person who, on the day preceding the effective date of this Act, held a position compensated in accordance with the Executive Schedule prescribed in chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, and who, without a break in service, is appointed in the Coast Guard to a position having duties comparable to the duties performed immediately preceding such appointment shall continue to be compensated in such new position at not less than the rate provided for such previous position, for the duration of the service of such person in such new position.

SEC. 12. SAVINGS PROVISIONS.

(a) EFFECT ON PREVIOUS DETERMINATIONS.—All orders, determinations, rules, regulations, permits, contracts, certificates, licenses, and privileges that—

(1) have been issued, made, granted, or allowed to become effective by the President, any Federal agency or official thereof, or by a court of competent jurisdiction, in the performance of functions which are transferred by this Act; and shall continue in effect according to their terms until modified, terminated, superseded, set aside, or revoked in accordance with law by the President, the Commandant, a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

(b) CONTINUATION OF PROCEEDINGS.—(1) The provisions of this Act shall not affect any proceedings, including notices of proposed rule making, or any application for any license, permit, certificate, or financial assistance pending on the effective date of this Act before the Department of Transportation, which relates to the Coast Guard, or any office thereof with respect to functions transferred by this Act; but such proceedings or applications, to the extent that they relate to functions transferred, shall be continued. Orders shall be issued in such proceedings, appeals shall be taken therefrom, and payments shall be made under such orders, as if this Act had not been enacted; and orders issued in any such proceedings shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, superseded, or revoked by the Commandant by a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law. Nothing in this subsection prohibits the discontinuance or modification of any such proceeding under the same terms and conditions and to the same extent that such proceeding could have been discontinued or modified if this Act had not been enacted.

(2) The Secretary of Transportation and the Commandant are authorized to issue regulations providing for the orderly transfer of proceedings continued under paragraph (1).

(c) EFFECT ON LEGAL ACTIONS.—Except as provided in subsection (e)—

(1) the provisions of this Act do not affect actions commenced prior to the effective date of this Act, and

(2) in all such actions, proceedings shall be had, appeals taken, and judgments rendered in the same manner and effect as if this Act had not been enacted.

(d) NO ABATEMENT OF ACTIONS OR PROCEEDINGS.—No action or other proceeding commenced by or against any officer in his official capacity as an officer of the Department of Transportation with respect to functions transferred by this Act shall abate by reason of the enactment of this Act. No cause of action by or against the Department of Transportation with respect to functions transferred by this Act, or by or against any officer thereof in his official capacity, shall abate by reason of the enactment of this Act. Causes of action and actions with respect to a function transferred by this Act, or other proceedings may be asserted by or against the United States or the Commandant, as may be appropriate, and, in an action pending when this Act takes effect, the court may at any time, on its own motion or that of any party, enter an order which will give effect to the provisions of this subsection.

(e) SUBSTITUTION.—If, before the date on which this Act takes effect, the Department of Transportation, or any officer thereof in his official capacity, is a party to an action, and under this Act any function of such Department, Office, or officer is transferred to the Commandant, then such action shall be continued with the Commandant substituted or added as a party.

(f) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Orders and actions of the Commandant in the exercise of functions transferred to the Commandant by this Act shall be subject to judicial review to the same extent and in the same manner as if such orders and actions had been by the Department of Transportation, or any office or officer thereof, in the exercise of such functions immediately preceding their transfer. Any statutory requirements relating to notice, hearings, action upon the record, or administrative review that apply to any function transferred by this Act shall apply to the exercise of such function by the Commandant.

If a provision of this Act or its application to any person or circumstance is held invalid, neither the remainder of this Act nor the application of the provision to other persons or circumstances shall be affected.

SEC. 14. TRANSITION.

With the consent of the Secretary of Transportation the Commandant is authorized to utilize—

(1) the services of such officers, employees, and other personnel of the Department of Transportation with respect to functions transferred to the Coast Guard by this Act; and

(2) funds appropriated to such functions for such period of time as may reasonably be needed to facilitate the orderly implementation of this Act.

SEC. 15. REFERENCES.

Reference in any other Federal law, Executive order, rule, regulation, or delegation of authority, or any document of or pertaining to the United States Coast Guard—

(1) to the Secretary of Transportation shall be deemed to refer to the Commandant of the Coast Guard; and

(2) to the Secretary shall be deemed to refer to—

(A) the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of the Navy, as applicable, when the Coast Guard is operating in the Department of Defense or Department of the Navy; and

(B) the Commandant of the Coast Guard when the Coast Guard is performing functions which prior to the date of the enactment of this Act, would have been performed while operating in the Department of Transportation.

SEC. 16. ADDITIONAL CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) RECOMMENDED LEGISLATION.—After consultation with the appropriate committees of the Congress, the Commandant of the Coast Guard shall prepare and submit to the Congress recommended legislation containing technical and conforming amendments to reflect the changes made by this Act to—

(1) title 14, United States Code;
(2) title 5, United States Code;
(3) title 10, United States Code;
(4) title 37, United States Code; and
(5) any other provision of law.

(b) SUBMISSION TO THE CONGRESS.—No later than 6 months after the effective date of this Act, the Commandant shall submit the recommended legislation referred to under subsection (a).

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, October 21, 1988.

Mr. CHARLES A. BOWSHER,
Comptroller General of the United States, General Accounting Office, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. BOWSHER: We respectfully request that you conduct a comprehensive review of all options for United States Coast Guard reorganization including the creation of a separate department for the purpose of enhancing the capabilities, manpower and equipment of the United States Coast Guard in order to substantially increase the long-term role of the Coast Guard in drug interdiction and enforcement efforts and to ensure a steady and assured source of funding for this important mission.

The results of this evaluation should be reported to the Congress by November 30, 1989.

We appreciate your attention to this matter and look forward to the successful completion of this study.

Sincerely,

Robert C. Byrd, Majority Leader, U.S. Senate; Robert Dole, Republican Leader, U.S. Senate; Claiborne Pell, Chairman, Foreign Relations Committee, U.S. Senate; Jim Wright, Speaker, House of Representatives; Thomas S. Foley, Majority Leader, House of Representatives; Robert H. Michel, Republican Leader, House of Representatives.

By Mr. WARNER (for himself and Mr. ROBB):

S. 284. A bill to remove a restriction from a parcel of land in Roanoke, VA, in order for that land to be conveyed to the State of Virginia for use as a veterans' nursing home; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS ON USE OF CERTAIN LAND

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I am pleased to be joined by my Virginia colleague, Senator ROBB, in introducing legislation today that would remove a restriction from a certain parcel of land in Roanoke—land that is now standing vacant—in order for that land to be conveyed to the Commonwealth of Virginia for use as a State veterans home.

Mr. President, the city of Roanoke, VA was kindly given a 16.8-acre parcel of land near Salem, VA, by the Department of the Interior in 1980 for park and recreational purposes. When the contract for this transaction was drawn up, there was a standard provision included that barred future use of this land for anything other than recreational purposes. This means that, the city of Roanoke, which wants to convey this land to the Commonwealth of Virginia for the purpose of building a State veterans home, cannot do so under the terms of the contract. This legislation merely enables the Secretary of the Interior to execute such instruments as may be necessary to remove the restrictions on the land.

Mr. President, there has long been a need for a State home for veterans in Virginia. Our fair Commonwealth is home to 677,000 veterans. Twenty-five of these veterans are World War II veterans with an average age of 66 years.

This home would be established by the Commonwealth for veterans who are disabled by age, disease, or other factors and are incapable of earning a living because of their disability. While 35 other States have a total of 55 State veterans homes, Virginia has none.

Mr. President, I have been following this matter very closely, as I strongly believe that Virginia's veterans not only deserve but have gained a right to this professional care. In that regard, I have contacted the Veterans' Administration and have discussed the status of efforts for such a home for Virginia. While they could, of course, make no commitment, they did indicate that conditions look very favorable for Virginia in attempting to secure matching funding for a State home. I also contacted the Governor of Virginia to urge his expeditious support, and the support of the Virginia General Assembly for this worthwhile project. I have also contacted the Department of the Interior, in an attempt to determine if there is any administrative process to remove the restrictions.

My fellow Virginia colleague, Representatives JIM OLIN, who introduced this measure in the House of Representatives, has made an excellent recommendation. He suggests that the Commonwealth of Virginia name his home in honor of the former Congressman from the Fifth District of Virignia—a man who was truly concerned about this Nation's defense and her veterans—Dan Daniel. I fully concur in that recommendation, and urge the support of my colleagues for this legislation so that Virginia may join the 35 other States that already have State veterans homes.●

By Mr. CRANSTON (for himself and Mr. WILSON):

S. 285. A bill to amend the Export Administration Act of 1979 to require the maintenance of an export assistance office in nothern California; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

MAINTENANCE OF AN EXPORT ASSISTANCE OFFICE IN NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the nothern California High Technology Export Assistance Act. This bill will be of tremendous benefit to small- and medium-sized high technology companies—the companies that are our greatest weapon in our fight to eliminate the trade deficit.

Last year we passed the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act—a bill I strongly supported. This legislation has strengthened our trade laws and set forth a comprehensive national trade policy for the first time. The reforms to our export control laws that several of my colleagues and I got included in the trade bill are already having a positive effect on the high technology export community. But there is more to do.

The bill I'm introducing today requires the Secretary of Commerce to open an export assistance office in northern California. The office, under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Export Administration [BXA], would help exporters and potential exporters comply with the Export Administration Act [EAA] and the regulations issued under it. For anyone unfamiliar with the EAA, let me tell you that complying with it is no easy task—the law and regulations fill a binder several inches thick. Most large firms have many employees who concentrate solely on EAA work. If necessary, they can afford to fly to Washington or hire local lawyers to straigthen things out for them. But it's not that easy for small firms; the FAA presents an intimidating and sometimes insurmountable obstacle to exporting for them.

Mr. President, let me make it clear that I fully support the intent of the EAA. We must control our exports for national security purposes. Our technological lead is essential to our defense. However, I have been a leading advocate of reforming the EAA so that our commerical exports are not needlessly wrapped up in a bureaucratic maze. If the Soviets want to buy Pac-Man, I don't see any danger in that. We shouldn't try to stop it and we shouldn't make our exporters fill out forms and wait months for an answer.

Prior to passage of the omnibus trade bill, the list of controlled items has expanded rapidly and the Department of Defense [DOD] has exerted what I felt was more than the appropriate level of influence. The High Technology Trade Enhancement Act (S. 652), a bill I introduced in the 100th Congress, was a significant reform of the EAA. Its intent was to decontrol and delicense items where such action wouldn't endanger national security and to end the Defense Department's de facto veto authority over the export control system. I'm extremely pleased that the bulk of my bill was included in the omnibus trade bill, which was signed into law August 23, 1988. Among other things, the new trade law clarifies that DOD should only be reviewing licenses for national security reasons, not foreign policy, and it provides a timetable for resolving disputes between Commerce and DOD. The law also eliminates all licenses to Cocom countries certified to have effective control systems, eliminates virtually all reexport licenses within Cocom, delicenses to the PRC Green Line for all Cocom/5(k) countries, and revises the foreign availability procedure. Probably the most important thing the trade law does is to firmly establish Commerce as the lead agency on export control matters. And because of an amendment I offered, it also authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to open regional export assistance offices.

This bill takes that provision one step further and requires an office in northern California. Why do we need an office in northern California? One look at the statistics and the answer is clear: One-half of the State of California is responsible for over 16 percent of the entire Nation's export license applications. Of the 95,698 applications submitted nationwide in 1988, the 15,479 from northern California were for exports valued at almost $27 billion. That's almost 25 percent of the total national value.

Let me review, for a moment, the history behind this bill. In 1986, I first introduced legislation calling for a western regional export licensing office. I reintroduced that bill as S. 13 on the first day of the 100th Congress. The reason was simple: The 3,000 miles and three time zones between Washington and California presented an intolerable carrier for our exporters. I wanted our exporters—particularly the ones doing the bulk of our high value, high technology exports—to know that the Government is on their side, not their adversary. It was only logical to have export administration officials on the west coast, where the exporters are.

Later in 1987, Congressman BERMAN offered a version of my bill as an amendment to the trade bill. While the bill languished in conference for months, the Commerce Department recognized the need to provide better services to western exporters and agreed to open an export assistance office in the Los Angeles area. Convinced that the new Electronic License Submission Program negated the need for actual licensing on the west coast, Congressman BERMAN and I dropped the language requiring a western licensing office from the final trade bill. My amendment authorizing $4 million for regional offices was part of the conference agreement. The funding for the Newport Beach office, however, came from BXA's operating budget.

Last fall the Appropriations Committee provided $1 million for BXA regional offices, but did not heed my advice to fund the program fully at $4 million or to establish an office in northern California. The appropriations bill requires offices in Portland and Boston and calls for a study of other potential locations. While I'm frustrated that the study hasn't been completed yet, I'm confident the facts will prove the case for a northern California office.

I was pleased to join several hundred exporters for the grand opening of the new office in Newport Beach last June, and I can honestly say the office has been a tremendous success from day one. I recently received a report on the office from Under Secretary Paul Freedenberg. He states that since last June, the office has handled over 30,000 phone calls and over 600 in-house consultations. The office receives an average of 300 calls daily, which generally concern regulation interpretations, assistance with commodity classifications, and requests for licensing information from companies new to exporting. I am told the staff has undertaken a number of outreach activities to keep exporters informed on ever-changing export control issues. These activities include miniseminars, briefings, and events sponsored by trade associations.

If the Newport Beach office is so successful, why is one needed in northern California too? As I stated earlier, the licensing statistics make the case by themselves; in 1986, northern California alone produced more license applications than the combined total of 35 other States. To further make the case, however, I quote from a July 26, 1988, Freedenberg letter to Congressman LES AUCOIN, "approximately 40% (of the calls received in Newport Beach) are from northern California, specifically the San Jose, Santa Clara, and San Francisco area." In a more recent letter to me, Freedenberg states that the success of the office "has not been without its costs. Twenty percent of the staff have resigned due to the workload and attempting to manage the increasing volume of calls while still conducting outreach activities will be somewhat problematic." The need for an office is reinforced by Freedenberg's statement that, "the presence of the office has increased the compliance of companies in the region." And that's what it's all about, because export controls are useless if companies don't know about them or how to comply with them.

I know there will be skeptics who say we can't afford another office or that it duplicates functions of the International Trade Administration's district offices. I strongly disagree with both of these arguments. Clearly we must restrain Government spending to get the Federal deficit under control. But we must also prioritize our spending and recognize that our economic security and our national security are interdependent. We must do everything we can to promote the international competitiveness of our exporters. This bill is one small step in that direction. The cost of this office, which should be less than $500,000, would be more than made up by the increase in exports and additional tax revenue. Time and money would be saved by both exporters and the Commerce Department. For example, last year over 5,000 licenses were returned without action to exporters by the Commerce Department. Having a local office where exporters can learn how to apply properly will greatly reduce that number and expedite the process for everyone.

Regarding the potential duplication of duties by ITA, let me simply say that is not the case. Congress made a point of separating the functions of export administration from trade administration. ITA and BXA have different mandates and serve different constituencies. I fully support the ITA district offices—in fact, I think they are woefully underfunded and understaffed—but that doesn't mean we don't need BXA officials in the field as well. Perhaps they can be co-located to conserve resources.

The need for a northern California office has been endorsed by the California World Trade Commission, which is the bipartisan State entity responsible for trade policy, and Advanced Micro Devices, one of the Nation's leading semiconductor manufacturers. Grey Mignano, executive director of the Trade Commission writes,

> [We] hope you will consider introducing legislation to establish an office in what can truly be considered the foremost key high technology area.

Cliff Jernigan, director of government affairs at AMD states that "AMD and other high tech companies in the Bay Area would be appreciative of such an effort" to open a northern California office. Karen Murphy, export licensing manager of National Advanced Systems in Santa Clara, has praised the Newport Beach office and said, "a northern California office would be of tremendous benefit not only to the current exporting community but to potential exporters as well * * * greater knowledge will increase the professionalism of the industry." I am confident that, as word of this effort spreads, more and more companies—particularly small companies whose voices are seldom heard in Washington—will endorse this bill.

I am pleased to report that this bill has bipartisan and bicameral support. I am joined today by my colleague Senator WILSON, and Congressman MINETA, EDWARDS, and PANETTA are introducing companion legislation in the House of Representatives. I look forward to working with them, the high technology community, and the administration to see this important piece of legislation enacted.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 285

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 15 of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2414) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(d) NORTHERN CALIFORNIA REGION OFFICE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish and maintain an office in the northern region of the State of California to provide assistance to exporters and potential exporters in complying with the requirements of this Act and regulations issued under this Act.

"(2) DUTIES.—The office established and maintained under this subsection shall, among other things—

"(A) provide access to the electronic license submission network of the Department of Commerce,

"(B) provide counseling on license preparation.

"(C) supply guidance in the design and operation of multiple shipment export license control systems, and

"(D) maintain for sale or distribution an adequate supply of all standard application forms, supporting documents, and copies of the regulations prescribed by the Secretary.".

(b) Section 14 of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2413) is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end of subsection (a)(17) the following: ", including a detailed accounting of the activities of all regional, district, or field offices".

By Mr. DOMENICI (for himself and Mr. BINGAMAN):

S. 286. A bill to establish the Petroglyph National Monument in the State of New Mexico, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

PETROGLYPH NATIONAL MONUMENT

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce legislation to designate a portion of the Northwest Mesa Volcanic Escarpment in Albuquerque, NM, as the "Petroglyph National Monument." This legislation is needed to protect the escarpment and the thousands of ancient rock carvings it contains from being destroyed by rapidly encroaching development.

Mr. President, this week's Newsweek magazine declared Albuquerque to be one of America's "Hot Cities"—the best places in the country to live and work.

Newsweek aptly described Albuquerque as a delicate balance built on the land, an urban oasis that has experienced steady but measured growth.

Newsweek particularly noted Albuquerque's emphasis on quality of life projects, most notably open space acquisition to preserve its breathtaking landscape. Because of Albuquerque's dedication to preserving its environment, we have been able to preserve the Sandia Mountains, which stand guard on the eastern edge of the city, and the cottonwood bosque through which the Rio Grande snakes as it flows through the middle of Albuquerque on its long, lazy trek to the Gulf of Mexico.

Finally, Newsweek let America in on one of America's best-kept secrets:

Albuquerque boasts a North American rarity: a thriving present built atop a visible anicent past. Carved along the base of the volcanoes on the city's western edge are petroglyphs dating back tens of thousands of years.

It is this magnificent resource, Albuquerque's Northwest Mesa Volcanic Escarpment and the petroglyphs upon it, that the legislation that I am introducing today will protect.

Some 190,000 years ago, a series of volcanic eruptions along a 5-mile fissure in the Earth spewed lava in thin, but broad sheets toward the Rio Grande. Later eruptions covered the earlier lava flows. creating over time a 17-mile long, serpentine cliff—the Northwest Mesa Volcanic Escarpment—that sweeps up from the desert, rising 100 feet at some points, and that is capped by five steep volcanic cones.

The escarpment is strewn with large, dark basalt boulders. As you approach the escarpment, you might be surprised to discover a face peering back at you from the rocks. And then you would see an eagle to your felt, a snake to your right, a lizard in front, a squirrel in back of you. These are a few of the many petroglyphs carved into the rock.

As long as 3,000 years ago, an inhabitant of the Rio Grande Valley first picked up a rock and used it to peck out a geometric pattern on one of the boulders on the escarpment, creating the first petroglyph.

In the ensuring centuries, the Indian people of the Rio Grande Valley carved thousands more petroglyphs: Men, crosses, circles, stars, birds, flute players, serpents, and a world of other figures.

By the time that the first Spanish explorer, Vasquez de Coronado, arrived in the area in 1540, over 15,000 Indian petroglyphs stretched along the 17 miles of the escarpment. The early Spanish settlers carved their symbols into the escarpment, creating their own petroglyphs.

The petroglyphs left by the Pueblo Indian inhabitants and the early Spanish settlers of the Rio Grande Valley are an important visual record of the early history of Albuquerque.

Mr. President, unfortunately the Northwest Mesa Volcanic Escarpment and the petroglyphs are threatened by development.

Buildings have been constructed at the base of the escarpment, and hundreds of petroglyphs have already been destroyed. In order to prevent further destruction of the escarpment and the petroglyphs, we must act to preserve this area soon. If we delay, this magnificent resource, which forms a scenic boundary of Albuquerque and contains an important part of the city's history, will be lost.

The people of Albuquerque have already preserved the Sandia Mountains and the cottonwood bosque along the Rio Grande. Now, it is time to preserve the West Mesa Escarpment in order to protect our scenery and our history.

Mr. President, in 1986, at my request, the Congress directed the National Park Service to conduct a study of the Northwest Mesa Volcanic Escarpment and the petroglyphs.

The Park Service found approximately 15,000 petroglyphs on the escarpment, most of which were created between 1300 and 1650 A.D. There are also at least 65 archaelogical sites along the escarpment, dated as far back as 10,000 B.C.

According to the report: "It is important to protect the integrity of the petroglyphs for future research and study. To move or destroy the rock art and the physical setting would greatly reduce the quality of the resources."

The report also states that preservation of the escarpment will protect the scenic quality of Albuquerque.

The Park Service concludes that the escarpment is threatened by development pressures and immediate action is needed to preserve the escarpment. It recommends taking action to protect these resources using all available public and private capabilities.

The National Park Service outlines three alternatives for preserving the area:

First, a national monument under National Park Service control;

Second, a national monument jointly managed by the National Park Service, the State of New Mexico, and the City of Albuquerque; and Third, joint management of the area by the State and the city with the cooperation of private landowners and technical and financial assistance from the Federal Government.

The report states that, because of the costs and geographic aspects of the area, an intergovernmental approach would be the most effective method for protection of the escarpment.

The National Park Service estimates that a national monument protecting the petroglyphs would attract as many as 400,000 visitors a year, two-thirds of whom would be from out of State. These visitors would contribute an estimated $1.7 to $3.3 million to the local economy.

Following the conclusion of the National Park Service study, I convened an advisory group of conservationists, land owners, government officials, and other concerned citizens, enabling them to provide information and views on the various alternatives to the New Mexico congressional delegation as we wrote the legislation to protect the escarpment.

Last year, the ad hoc advisory group presented its report to me. The advisory group supported the creation of a national monument. It made specific boundary recommendations, proposed provisions to be included in the legislation, and developed innovative proposals for land acquisition along the escarpment. Their work was essential in putting together a reasonable plan or the protection of this area.

While these efforts were underway, the city of Albuquerque was also working to protect the escarpment. In 1987, the city adopted a Northwest Mesa escarpment plan. The plan recommends the conservation of the escarpment for the purpose of preserving the petroglyphs and maintaining the volcanic cliffs as public open space.

The city's escarpment plan proposes public ownership, through a phased acquisition program, for the escarpment and critical surrounding areas. It also provided immediate protection for the escarpment by imposing various zoning and construction restrictions, such as height and density limitations and buffer zones between development and the escarpment.

In addition, in 1987 the city instituted a one-fourth-cent sales tax for a variety of projects to enhance the quality of life in Albuquerque. From the tax, $14 million is earmarked for open space acquisition along the escarpment.

The city recently initiated its acquisition program. It has already acquired 62 acres along the escarpment and is working with landowners to acquire additional property through purchase and donation.

The State of New Mexico has been involved in the effort to preserve the escarpment through its ownership of the existing Indian Petroglyph State Park on the escarpment. Althouth the partk is a State park, it is owned and operated by the city of Albuquerque and, thus, is a State park in name only.

In 1987, the New Mexico State Senate passed a memorial that directed the State Government to assist the National Park Service and the city in the preparation of their respective plans for the preservation of the escarpment. The memorial also mandated that the State determine what its ultimate role should be in the effort to protect the escarpment.

The State supports preservation of the escarpment. It has agreed to assist with land acquisition associated with the expansion of Indian Petroglyph State Park. Last year, the State legislature authorized $300,000 for the acquisition of land to expand the park. This year, bills have been introduced in the State legislature to earmark an additional $5.7 million for acquisition of lands to expand the State park.

Mr. President, the city of Albuquerque and the State of New Mexico have begun the process of protecting Albuquerque's Northwest Mesa Volcanic Escarpment and its historic petroglyphs. Now it is time for the Federal Government to establish its role in this project.

Former Congressman—and now Secretary of the Interior-designate—Manuel Lujan and I worked together to develop the Petroglyph National Monument legislation, which we introduced last year. However, because it was introduced late in the session, it was not enacted into law.

The new Congressman from Albuquerque [Mr. SCHIFF] and I have worked on the revised bill, which I am introducing today. Congressman SCHIFF, who shares my dedication to preserving the escarpment, will be introducing this same bill in the House of Representatives. We are pleased to be joined by my colleague Mr. BINGAMAN.

The bill does the following:

First, declares that the petroglyphs are significant, that the State of New Mexico and city of Albuquerque have shown great leadership in the protection of the petroglyphs, that the Pueblo Indians and the Atrisco heirs have shown a strong interest in the preservation of the escarpment, and that the National Park Service has no unit specifically established for the preservation of rock art.

Second, establishes the Petroglyph National Monument containing approximately 5,150 acres.

Third, provides for the inclusion in the national monument of an additional 1,950 acres of lands after the State of New Mexico and the city of Albuquerque have acquired those lands. Thus, ultimately the national monument will include the lands identified as "Alternative 2" by the Park Service, plus the Southern Geologic Window and the Zuris Mann site.

Fourth, allows the National park Service to acquire lands in the national monument by donation, purchase, or exchange. State and City lands may only be acquired by donation or exchange. The bill also allows the city and the State to acquire lands in the Federal area, then exchange the land for Federal lands in their areas.

Fifth, authorizes the National Park Service to enter into cooperative agreements with the State of New Mexico and the city of Albuquerque for the administration of their lands within the national monument.

Sixth, authorizes the National Park Service to enter into cooperative agreements with public entities, Indian tribes, and nonprofit entities for the interpretation of the petroglyphs outside the national monument. This will allow the National Park Service to provide technical and financial assistance to the State of New Mexico and the city of Albuquerque for the management of their areas along the escarpment.

Seventh, allows the National Park Service to provide immediate protection to threatened areas of the escarpment thru acquisition by donation of leasehold interests of escarpment land.

Eighth, directs the National Park Service to develop a general management plan for the monument in three years. The plan shall include an identification of lands that need to be protected by the State of New Mexico and the city of Albuquerque, estimated visitor use, an interpretive program, a plan to implement the American Indian Religious Freedom Act, and a monument development plan.

Ninth, directs the National park Service to study other Rio Grande style rock art sites in New Mexico, then report to Congress on the condition of those resources.

Tenth, allows nonexclusive access to the monument by Indian people for traditional cultural and religious purposes.

Eleventh, establishes a six-member Advisory Commission for the monument consisting of representatives of the State, the city, the All Indian Pueblo Council, Westland Development Co., and others.

Twelveth, amends the El Malpais National Monument Act approved last year to include Petroglyph National Monument in the Masau Trail, the automobile touring route linking historic and prehistoric sites throughout New Mexico.

Mr. President, when I introduced this legislation last year, I stated that the bill needed refinement. Although not all the issues have been resolved and the bill will certainly be improved in the committee review process, most issues have been resolved through a willingness of all parties to work together to preserve this magnificent resource.

It is now time for Congress to act to save the petroglyphs by establishing a national monument that all Americans can enjoy.

Support for Petroglyph National Monument is strong. All interested parties support this legislation. In particular, I want to note the work of the Friends of the Albuquerque Petroglyphs, who have been instrumental in developing and promoting the national monument concept.

Westland Development Co., Inc. and the heirs of the Atrisco Land Grant also have been both helpful and accommodating. In 1692, the King of Spain created the Atrisco Land Grant on the escarpment. A good portion of the land in the area is still owned by the heirs of the Atrisco Land Grant, through their corporate entity, Westland Development Co., Inc. They have made innovative suggestions for Federal acquisition of the area that need to be examined.

Mr. President, nature has provided a beautiful backdrop for Albuquerque, with the Sandia Mountains on the east, the Rio Grande and the bosque in the middle, and the Northwest Mesa Volcanic Escarpment on the west. The people of Albuquerque have already preserved the mountains and the bosque. Now they want to preserve the Northwest Mesa Volcanic Escarpment.

This legislation will preserve the escarpment by creating Petroglyph National Monument. I hope that the Senate will act on it quickly before this magnificent resource is lost.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 286

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) this Act shall be cited as the "Petroglyph National Monument Establishment Act of 1989".

(b) The Congress finds that—

(1) the nationally significant Las Imagines National Archeological District on Albuquerque's Northwest Mesa Volcanic Escarpment contains more than fifteen thousand documented prehistoric and historic petroglyphs;

(2) this district also contains approximately 65 other archeological sites;

(3) the State of New Mexico has shown great leadership by recognizing the importance of the archeological resources of the Northwest Mesa Volcanic Escarpment through the establishment of the Las Imagines National Archeological District;

(4) the city of Albuquerque has played a significant role in the preservation of the natural, cultural, and recreational resources of the Northwest Mesa Volcanic Escarpment;

(5) the Middle Rio Grande Pueblo Tribes have shown a strong and sincere interest in preservation of their heritage through protection of the Northwest Mesa Volcanic Escarpment;

(6) the Atrisco Land Grant, now held by Westland Development Co., Inc., a corporation whose stock is owned primarily by heirs of the Atrisco Land Grant, has played a significant role in the settlement of the Northwest Mesa Volcanic area since the grant's formation in 1692 and has shown a strong interest in the preservation of their traditional lands;

(7) the National Park System has no unit established for the specific purpose of protecting, preserving, and interpreting prehistoric and historic rock art; and

(8) it is appropriate that such a unit be established at the Northwest Mesa Volcanic Escarpment near Albuquerque, New Mexico.

SEC. 2. (a)(1) In order to preserve, for the benefit and enjoyment of present and future generations, that area in New Mexico containing the nationally significant Northwest Mesa Volcanic Escarpment, the Las Imagines National Archeological District, a portion of the Atrisco Land Grant, and other significant natural and cultural resources, there is hereby established the Petroglyph National Monument (hereinafter referred to as the "monument") as a unit of the National Park System. The monument shall consist of approximately 5,150 acres generally known as the Atrisco Unit and as depicted on the map entitled "Boundary Map, Petroglyph National Monument", numbered NM-PETR-80,010 and dated January 1989, which shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior, in the offices of the Department of Energy, Minerals, and Natural Resources of the State of New Mexico, in the office of the mayor of the city of Albuquerque, New Mexico, and in locations throughout the monument as appropriate.

(2) Upon application by the city of Albuquerque, New Mexico, to include the lands described on the map referred to in paragraph (1) as the Piedras Marcadas Unit and upon a determination by the Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") that all lands and all interests therein have been acquired, the Secretary is authorized to extend the boundaries of the monument to include such lands by publication of a notice in the Federal Register.

(3) Upon application by the State of New Mexico to include the lands described on the map referred to in paragraph (1) as the Boca Negra Unit and upon a determination by the Secretary that all lands and all interests therein have been acquired, the Secretary is authorized to extend the boundaries of the monument to include such lands by publication of a notice in the Federal Register.

(b) Within 6 months after the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall file a legal description of the monument designated under this section with the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives and with the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate. Such legal description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this Act, except that the Secretary may correct clerical and typographical errors in such legal description and in the map referred to in subsection (a) of this section. The legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior, in the offices of the Department of Energy, Minerals, and Natural Resources of the State of New Mexico, in the office of the mayor of the city of Albuquerque, New Mexico, and in the monument office: Provided, That the Secretary may from time to time, after completion of the plan referred to in section 5(a) of this Act, make minor adjustments to the boundary by publication of a revised map or other boundary description in the Federal Register.

SEC. 3. (a) The Secretary is authorized to acquire lands and interests in lands by donation, purchase with donated or appropriated funds, exchange, or transfer from any other Federal agency, except that lands or interests therein owned by the State of New Mexico or a political subdivision thereof may be acquired only by donation or exchange. Where the surface and subsurface estates of any private lands to be acquired are separately owned, the Secretary shall not accept title to the surface estate of such lands until he has acquired the subsurface estate underlying the lands. (b) The Secretary may exchange lands within the area described on the map referred to in section 2 as the Piedras Marcadas Unit for lands owned by the city of Albuquerque, New Mexico, within the area described on the map referred to in section 2 as the Atrisco Unit. The Secretary may exchange lands within the area described on the map referred to in section 2 as the Boca Negra Unit for lands owned by the State of New Mexico within the area described on the map referred to in section 2 as the Atrisco Unit. Exchanges shall be on the basis of equal value, and either party to the exchange may pay or accept cash in order to equalize the value of the properties exchanged, except that if the parties agree to an exchange and the Secretary determines it is in the public interest, such exchange may be made for other than equal value.

SEC. 4. (a) The Secretary shall administer the monument in accordance with the Act of August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535; 16 U.S.C. 1 et seq.), and this Act.

(b) The Secretary is authorized to enter into cooperative agreements with either the State of New Mexico or the city of Albuquerque, New Mexico, under which the Secretary may manage and interpret any lands owned by the State of New Mexico or the city of Albuquerque, New Mexico, within the boundaries of the monument.

(c) In order to encourage a unified and cost effective interpretive program of the natural, cultural, and recreational resources of the West Mesa Escarpment and its environs, the Secretary is authorized to enter into cooperative agreements with other Federal, State, and local public departments and agencies, Indian tribes, and nonprofit entities providing for the interpretation of these resources. Such agreements shall include, but need not be limited to, provision for the Secretary to develop and operate interpretive facilities and programs on lands and interests in lands outside the boundaries of the monument, with the agreement of the owner or administrator thereof. Such cooperative agreements may also provide for financial and technical assistance for the planning and implementation of interpretive programs and minimal development related to those programs.

(d) Prior to acquiring ownership of land or any other form of interest in land within the boundaries of the monument, the Secretary is authorized to acquire a leasehold interest in such land by donation from its owners for the purpose of providing immediate protection against trespass and vandalism and initiating any resource inventories necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 5. (a) Within 3 years from the date funding is made available for the purposes of this section, the Secretary, in cooperation with the city of Albuquerque and the State of New Mexico, shall develop and transmit to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate a general management plan for the monument consistent with the purposes of this Act, including, without limitation—

(1) a description of lands and interests in lands adjacent or related to the monument whose protection by appropriate State or local governmental entities is deemed necessary or desirable for the purposes of resource protection, scenic integrity, or management and administration of the area in furtherance of this Act;

(2) a statement of the number of visitors and types of public use within the monument which can be accommodated in accordance with the protection of its resources;

(3) a general interpretive program;

(4) a plan to implement the joint resolution entitled "American Indian Religious Freedom", approved August 11, 1978 (42 U.S.C. 1996); and

(5) a general development plan for the monument and the estimated cost thereof.

(b) The management plan shall be prepared in consultation with the appropriate Indian tribes and their traditional cultural and religious authorities, the heirs of the Atrisco Land Grant, and the New Mexico State Historical Preservation Office.

(c) The Secretary shall undertake research on other Rio Grande style rock art sites in New Mexico and provide the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate, within 3 years of the date funding is made available for the purposes of this section, a report that—

(1) lists various locations of Rio Grande style rock art;

(2) identifies the ownership of the rock art;

(3) identifies the condition of the resources; and

(4) identifies the appropriate type of technical assistance needed for the protection and care of these resources.

The report shall be updated and transmitted to such committees every 2 years thereafter.

SEC. 6. In recognition of the past use of the monument by Indian people for traditional cultural and religious purposes, the Secretary shall insure nonexclusive access to the monument by Indian people for such traditional cultural and religious purposes, consistent with Public Law No. 95-341 (42 U.S.C. 1996). As part of the plans prepared pursuant to section 5, the Secretary, in consultation with appropriate Indian tribes and their traditional cultural and religious authorities, shall define the past cultural and religious uses of the monument by Indian people.

SEC. 7. (a) There is established the Petroglyph National Monument Advisory Commission (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission"). The Commission shall be composed of 6 members appointed by the Secretary for terms of 5 years as follows:

(1) one member, who shall have professional expertise in historic preservation, appointed from recommendations submitted by the Governor of the State of New Mexico;

(2) one member, who shall have professional expertise in historic preservation, appointed from recommendations submitted by the mayor of the city of Albuquerque, New Mexico;

(3) one member, who shall have professional expertise in Indian history or ceremonial activities, appointed from recommendations submitted by the All Indian Pueblo Council;

(4) one member, who shall have professional expertise in the history and management of land grants, appointed from recommendations submitted by the Westland Development Co., Inc.

(5) two members, one of whom shall have professional expertise in historic preservation and one of whom shall have professional expertise in Indian rock art.

(b) Any member of the Commission may serve after the expiration of his term until his successor is appointed. A vacancy in the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

(c) Members of the Commission shall serve without pay. While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission, members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in Government service are allowed expenses under section 5703 of title 5, United States Code.

(d) The Chair and other officers of the Commission shall be elected by a majority of the members of the Commission to serve for terms established by the Commission.

(e) The Commission shall meet at the call of the Chair or a majority of its members, but not less than twice annually. Four members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum. Consistent with the public meeting requirements of section 10 of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.), the Commission shall, from time to time, meet with persons concerned with Indian history and historic preservation and with other interested persons.

(f) The Commission may make such bylaws, rules, and regulations as it considers necessary to carry out its functions under this Act. Sections 9(c) and 14(b) of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.) shall not apply to the Commission.

(g) The Commission shall advise the Secretary on the management and development of the monument. The Secretary, or his designee, shall from time to time, but at least semiannually, meet and consult with the Commission on matters relating to the management and development of the monument.

(h) The Commission shall cease to exist 10 years after the date of its first meeting.

SEC. 8. The first sentence of section 202 of Public Law 100-225 (16 U.S.C. 460uu-12) is amended by deleting "and Zuni-Cibola National Historical Park" and inserting "Zuni-Cibola National Historical Park, and Petroglyph National Monument.".

SEC. 9. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the purposes of this Act.●

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I am pleased today to join my colleague, Senator DOMENICI, in introducing the Petroglyph National Monument Establishment Act of 1989.

This legislation would create the Petroglyph National Monument along the West Mesa escarpment outside Albuquerque, NM, as a unit of the National Park System. It authorizes acquisition of lands and provides for inclusion, upon application, of lands owned by the city of Albuquerque and the State of New Mexico within the proposed boundaries. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into cooperative agreements with Federal, State, and local public departments and agencies to manage and interpret the monument and its resources.

The National Trust for Historic Preservation has identified this area as one of the 11 most endangered historic places in our country. The rock art remains remarkably intact but is being subjected to ever-increasing damage because of its accessibility and the rapid encroachment of the city of Albuquerque, which is approaching the edge of the West Mesa escarpment. Damage by gunfire, attempts to remove the rocks, and use of heavy equipment for residential and commercial development are but a few of the many threats to this unique historic area.

It has been estimated that between 15,000 and 17,000 petroglyphs can be found along the 17-mile-long volcanic escarpment of the West Mesa. This area, called the Las Imagines National Archaeological District, is one of the most richly endowed prehistoric rock art sites in the United States, perhaps even in the world. The rock art is dramatic, complex, and unique in content. Figures are numerous and bold.

The religious roots of Pueblo and Hispanic cultures also are visible along this escarpment. Many petroglyphs are from the Pueblo III and Pueblo IV periods, dating from 1300 to 1650 A.D. Some of the rock art dates to the Archaic period. I great number of the figures are of continuing significance to the Pueblo people. Cruciform petroglyphs carved by early Spanish colonists are found on the same sites as prehistoric Indian rock art.

The city of Albuquerque, State of New Mexico, the National Park Service, and public spirited groups such as the Friends of the Albuquerque Petroglyphs, the Albuquerque League of Women Voters, and the Albuquerque Chapter of the Sierra Club, have worked hard to preserve this unique area, and I applaud their dedication. Yet, there is a need for immediate Federal action if we are to save it for future generations.

This legislation will enable us to protect critical segments of the escarpment and immediately adjacent lands with a working partnership between the city of Albuquerque, State of New Mexico, and Federal Government. I encourage my colleagues to preserve this national treasure by supporting this bill.●

By Mr. HARKIN (for himself, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. SIMON, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. SHELBY, and Mr. CONRAD):

S. 289. A bill to provide for the registration of foreign interests in United States property; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP DISCLOSURE ACT

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I am introducing today the Foreign Ownership Disclosure Act of 1989 which addresses the critical need to establish a centralized and reliable source of data regarding the rise of foreign ownership in the United States. Joining me as original cosponsors are Senators CARL LEVIN, Mr. HOWARD METZENBAUM, Mr. PAUL SIMON, Mr. QUENTIN BURDICK, Mr. RICHARD SHELBY, and KENT CONRAD. Congressman JOHN BRYANT introduced a similar bill on January 3.

The purpose of this bill is to require the systematic registration of most foreign-owned interests in our country. For "significant interests" of more than 5 percent in a U.S. business or real estate property valued at over $5 billion, the bill asks for basic information about themselves and about the investment to the Department of Commerce. This information concerns the owner's address, nationality, address, industry, the percentage of interest and its market value, and the name, location and industry of U.S. property.

The bill further requires that if the foreign investor has an interest of 25 percent or more in U.S. business with assets or annual sales of over $20 million—what is termed a "controlling interest"—that investor must disclose the same kind of information currently required of U.S. companies whose stock is traded on U.S. exchanges. Such basic financial data includes the balance sheet, income statement, statement of changes in financial condition, overall statement of sales, assets, operating income, location of U.S. facilities and the identity and nationality of the directors and officers.

The Foreign Ownership Disclosure Act limits access to this data to authorized persons in the Department of Commerce, General Accounting Office, designated State agencies, congressional committees, and selected researchers approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. President, Paul Krugman, an MIT economist, recently suggested that "the political issue of the 1990's is going to be the foreign invasion of the United States."

While Professor Krugman's characterization of foreign ownership as an "invasion" may be overstated, he is on the mark in his assessment of the growing economic—and political—importance of the foreign investment issue.

In the last 7 years, foreign ownership of U.S. assets has tripled to $1.5 trillion. That inflow ranks as one of the greatest financial transformations of the post-war era, helping turn us from the world's largest creditor into its largest debtor.

For the average American, the result is that today many "American" brands no longer are. Carnation is now owned by the Nestle group of Switzerland, Standard Oil of Ohio belongs to British Petroleum of the United Kingdom. We shop at Supermarkets owned by Germans [A&P], and when we buy our hamburgers from Hardee's, the answer to the question "Where's the beef . . . from?" is Canada.

The reasons for this transformation are many. The United States has lost ground competitively and foreign companies are entering to replace them. Six years of U.S. trade deficits have put billions of dollars into foreign hands. The 3-year decline in the value of the dollar has made buying American a bargain for Japanese and German investors holding other, stronger currencies.

The foreign investment boom signals a dramatic shift in America's global economic role. For nearly four decades following World War II, the United States did most of the buying, enjoying its position as the foremost exporter of capital and the world's supreme economic and technological power.

In 1985, however, the United States became a net debtor nation. A year later, our foreign debt rose to $263.6 billion—the United States had now become the world's largest debtor nation. To finance our budget deficits and prevent them from worsening through higher interest costs, the United States became increasingly reliant on foreign capital.

In the short run, the influx of foreign capital has financed the Reagan administration's massive budget deficits, kept inflation down and halted an even more dramatic decline of the dollar, and helped create jobs and financial opportunities.

We have yet begun to consider the possible long-term impact, however. Felix Rohatyn calls the growth of foreign investment "an addiction," whose withdrawal could produce "convulsion" in our domestic economy. With greater dependence on foreign investors, according to Senator William Proxmire, "you loose some part of your sovereignty * * * you loose your independence."

Yet, despite America's deepening dependence on foreign capital, no one knows the full extent of foreign investment in the United States. For this reason, I have introduced Foreign Ownership Disclosure Act of 1989.

This bill is a very modest proposal. It certainly is not designed to discourage foreign investment in the United States. The bill places no new restrictions, limitations, preconditions, or preclearance requirements of any kind on any foreign investment in the United States. It simply requires disclosure of significant foreign interests in U.S. businesses and real estate through registration with the Department of Commerce.

I repeat, this is only a modest proposal. It does not cover Treasury bonds or any other debt. It requires only that those who invest in real estate and business in this country tell us who they are and how much they own. The bill does not require anything more than what is required of publicly held businesses in the United States.

It is a policy which foreign investors should not fear, and which Americans should welcome.

This bill is not designed to discourage foreign investment in the United States. Clearly, foreign direct investment can bring—and has brought—benefits to our economy by creating employment opportunities for American citizens or providing needed capital infusions for faltering U.S. firms. But the short-term advantages of foreign investment should not prevent us from considering the long-term effects on our economy and national security.

Over time, as ownership of our economic assets is transferred overseas, so is the authority to make important business and economic decisions affecting the prosperity and independence of our Nation.

Meanwhile our economy is becoming so dependent on foreign capital that many respected economists, including former Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volker, have warned that a major withdrawal of that capital—whether in response to a change in economic outlook or to a political controversy—could send us into an economic tailspin.

Other problems arise because of our current lack of information. We often cannot even determine with confidence whether a foreign investor is a legitimate business, a hostile nation like Libya, Iran, or the Soviet Union, or a drug trafficker.

Our ignorance of the real interests behind foreign investments here has allowed our economy to become a haven for capital flight from the Third World, an unwitting accomplice in grand theft from the poorest people in the poorest countries in the world. Over the past 2 years, clear evidence has surfaced that Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos and their cronies secretly invested billions of dollars here through an elaborate financial network of dummy corporations and agents. Evidence came to light on these investments not from any Government data source, but from Marcos' own financial documents confiscated by his successors and by U.S. Customs.

We are also endangering our national security by not knowing more about foreign investors operating here. In the mid-1970's, the Soviet Union secretly attempted to acquire three banks in northern California. The Soviet Government was after sensitive advanced American technological information concerning the many high-technology companies that owed money to the banks. The acquisitions were already well underway, but the Soviets abandoned the attempt as soon as a Hong Kong financial newsletter reported it.

We were able to prevent this sophisticated attempt at espionage, but despite our laws, not because of them.

NEED FOR IMPROVED REPORTING

A hodgepodge of Federal agencies collects information on foreign investment in the United States, in a hodgepodge of bureaucratic formats, under the authority of a hodgepodge of uncoordinated laws.

As many as 16 different Government agencies now collect data on foreign investments, including the Departments of Commerce, Treasury, Agriculture; the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Internal Revenue Service, and the Federal Trade Commission. Among the laws providing for collection of this information, there is the International Investment Survey Act, the Domestic and Foreign Investment Improved Disclosure Act, and the Foreign Agricultural Investment Disclosure Act.

But none of these sources provides comprehensive information. In one case, the information is organized only under the name of the foreign-owned U.S. company, so that every U.S. company on record at the agency would have to be checked independently in order to determine the U.S. holdings of a particular foreign investor.

The Bureau of Economic Analysis collects accurate data, but its information is kept confidential—even from other Government agencies and from Congress—and it publishes only the most general aggregate statistics.

In 1980, the House Government Operations Committee found that, with regard to data collection on foreign investments, "of the most major host countries of the world, we would be at the bottom, even among the industrialized countries. * * * There are very few major countries in the world today that are as naive and ignorant concerning the size and nature of foreign investment in their countries as the United States is."

Little has changed since than. Most nations of the world, including the Western industrialized nation, not only require disclosure of this information and more, but impose preclearance requirements and other restrictions and limitation on foreign investments. Even Switzerland keeps a public registry of Swiss companies with foreign ownership.

Japan's preclearance process seems one of the most stringent, in part because it is the most explicit. The Ministry of Finance, the Foreign Exchange Ministry, and other ministries screen each proposed investment, taking comments from potential Japanese competitors. Any ministry can deny the proposed investment outright or can demand alterations in it as a condition for approval. Japan also flatly prohibits foreign ownership of more than 25 percent in any of its high-technology companies.

CONCLUSION

We are living through a special time in our country. For the first time since World War I, we have become a net debtor nation. We are experiencing unprecedented inflows of foreign investment into the United States. Foreign interests have bought Treasury securities, provided capital necessary to finance the massive budget deficits accumulated over the past 7 years, and built factories and purchased plants left idle by their American competitors.

Allan Sloane wrote in an article in Forbes that the United States is acting like an underdeveloped country because "advanced countries typically export capital to the rest of the world, while underdeveloped countries import capital."

The dramatic rise in foreign investments has provoked Malcolm S. Forbes to call for the creation of a "Board of Knowledgeables" to review purchases of major U.S. companies by foreigners. Financier Felix Rohatyn, in a speech before the Economic Club of Washington, called American dependence on foreign capital a potential threat to our national security, suggesting we may soon find it necessary to establish a legal mechanism to review foreign acquisitions in certain industries.

I am not calling for either alternative. Rather, my bill merely requires basic disclosure to help America know the precise levels and source of foreign investment in the United States. It would not limit investments, it just allows us to track them.

The bill will not discourage foreign investments. Business people bring their money here because it is a good place to invest, not because the United States offers anonymity.

Foreign investment has become too important to the American economy for us to remain blind to it. We are not trying to stifle foreign investment, but only to understand it. To begin shaping an appropriate national policy in response not just to the impact of foreign capital on the U.S. economy but to the underlying reasons for our growing dependence on overseas money, we must begin accumulating basic information. Where is the money coming from? Who really owns the assets? What are accurate figures on the extent of foreign investments?

Successful companies in the private sector would not dream of making decisions without first reviewing adequate information.

Why shouldn't our Government?

Policymakers and the American public need the information necessary to assess and analyze the impact of foreign capital on the U.S. economy.

Simply, the American people deserve to know who owns America.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the Foreign Ownership Disclosure Act be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 289

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be referred to as the "Foreign Ownership Disclosure Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. REGISTRATION OF FOREIGN-HELD INTERESTS IN UNITED STATES PROPERTY.

(a) INTERESTS ACQUIRED AFTER EFFECTIVE DATE.—Any foreign person who, after the effective date of the regulations prescribed pursuant to subsection (j), acquires directly or indirectly—

(1) a significant interest in a United States property, or

(2) a controlling interest in a United States business enterprise;

shall register that interest with the Secretary within 30 days after the acquisition.

(b) INTERESTS ACQUIRED BEFORE EFFECTIVE DATE.—Any foreign person who, on the effective date of the regulations prescribed pursuant to subsection (j), holds directly or indirectly—

(1) a significant interest in a United States property, or

(2) a controlling interest in a United States business enterprise, shall register that interest with the Secretary within 180 days after the effective date of such regulations.

(c) CONTENTS OF REGISTRATION.—Each registration required under subsection (a) or (b) shall be in such form and in accordance with such procedures as the Secretary may require by regulation and shall contain the following:

(1) The identity, address, legal nature, industry, and nationality of the foreign person.

(2) The date on which the foreign person acquired the interest.

(3) The relation of the foreign person to the United States property.

(4) The name, location, and industry of the United States property.

(5) The market value of (A) the assets of a United States business enterprise or (B) a United States real property.

(6) The percentage size of the interest acquired.

(d) ADDITIONAL DISCLOSURE FOR CONTROLLING INTERESTS.—If the interest registered under subsection (a) or (b) is a controlling interest in a United States business enterprise, the foreign person shall, by an amendment to the registration made within 180 days after registering such interest, provide the Secretary with the following additional current information:

(1) With respect to the foreign person, an English translation of so much of the information listed in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of paragraph (2) that is publicly disclosed in the home country of the foreign person.

(2) With respect to the United States business enterprise—

(A) a—

(i) balance sheet and income statement;

(ii) statement of changes in financial condition; and

(iii) statement of sales, assets, operating income, and depreciation by industrial segment, prepared in accordance with Generally Accepted Accounting Procedures or in accordance with Statutory or Regulatory Accounting Principles and accompanied by explanatory notes and any current auditor's statements and reports;

(B) the location of all facilities within the United States; and

(C) the identity and nationality of each director and executive officer.

(e) ANNUAL REPORTS.—(1) Within 90 days after the end of each calendar year, a foreign person who has registered an interest in United States property under this section, and who, at any time during such calendar year, held directly or indirectly—

(A) a significant interest in such property, shall report to the Secretary any changes in the information required under subsection (c) that have occurred since the filing of the registration under subsection (a) or (b) or the most recent report under this subparagraph; or

(B) a controlling interest in such United States business enterprise, shall report to the Secretary any changes in the information required under subsections (c) and (d) that have occurred since the filing of the registration under subsection (a) or (b) or the most recent report under this subparagraph.

(2) Any report filed under this section shall be in such form and in accordance with such procedures as the Secretary may require by regulation.

(f) SUBSTITUTION OF OTHER DOCUMENTS.—(1) To the extent a foreign person has prepared other documents which contain information required under this section with respect to an interest required to be registered or reported under this section, the foreign person may provide a copy of such other documents (or the relevant portions thereof) for the purposes of complying with the requirements of this section.

(2) With respect to any interest required to be registered or reported under this section which a foreign person acquires or holds solely through, or by virtue of acquiring or holding a significant or controlling interest in, a United States business enterprise which is an issuer whose securities are registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and which has filed the material required to be filed by such United States business enterprise pursuant to sections 12, 13, 14, and 15(d) of such Act, the foreign person may, in lieu of providing the information otherwise required under this section, provide the Secretary with a copy of the most recent annual and periodic reports, statements, and notices filed pursuant to such Act.

(g) CIVIL PENALTY.—Any foreign person who is late in registering an interest or reporting changes with respect to an interest in accordance with subsections (a) through (f) shall be subject to a civil penalty of not more than $10,000.

(h) CRIMINAL PENALTIES.—(1) Any foreign person who willfully fails to register an interest or submit a report in accordance with subsections (a) through (f), or who willfully submits false or misleading information in the registration or report, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or shall be imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

(2) Any foreign person previously convicted of a violation under paragraph (1) who subsequently is convicted of a pattern or practice of violations under paragraph (1) shall be subject to forfeiture of all interests in United States property with respect to which such violations were committed.

(i) INVESTIGATIVE ACTIONS.—The Secretary may undertake such investigative actions as the Secretary considers necessary to monitor compliance with this section. For the purposes of conducting such investigations the Secretary shall have the same powers and authorities as the Federal Trade Commission under sections 9 and 10 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

(j) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall publish for notice and public comment regulations to carry out this section. The final regulations prescribed to carry out this section shall take effect not later than 180 days after such date of enactment. Such regulations shall—

(1) establish forms and procedures for making the disclosures required by this section; and

(2) establish procedures for indexing, and providing access to, the information disclosed under this section.

(k) REPORTS TO CONGRESS AND THE PRESIDENT.—The Secretary shall transmit in June of each year, beginning in 1989, a report to the President and the Congress describing—

(1) the extent to which foreign persons hold significant or controlling interests in United States properties, the nationality of those foreign persons, the industries in which those interests are concentrated, and the social, economic, and other effects in the United States of such foreign interests;

(2) the effectiveness and efficiency of the registration and reporting requirements contained in this section in providing the information required under this section and the extent to which the information provides a comprehensive description of the presence of foreign capital in the United States economy;

(3) other Federal data collection activities that overlap with, duplicate, or complement the registration and reporting requirements established under this section and that could be consolidated or eliminated without compromising the quality of data collected; and

(4) in the case of the first annual report, the feasibility of establishing a system to track individual transactions representing other capital flows into the United States.

(l) REGISTRY OF FOREIGN-HELD INTERESTS.—(1) Not later than 365 days after the effective date of the regulations prescribed pursuant to subsection (j), the Secretary shall compile (and thereafter keep current) a registry of interests registered or reported under this section and the information contained in such registrations or reports. The registry shall index the information for retrieval by—

(A) the name and nationality of any foreign person who registers or reports an interest under subsections (a) through (f) and the standard industrial classification number or numbers (as issued by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget) of any such foreign person; and

(B) the name of the United States property in which any interest registered or reported under this section is held, the standard industrial classification number or numbers of any such United States property, and the State in which any such United States property is located.

(2) Access to the information in the registry shall be available only in accordance with paragraph (3) and only to—

(A) officials or employees designated to perform functions under this Act, including consultants and persons working on contracts awarded pursuant to this Act, under procedures established by the Secretary of Commerce;

(B) committees or subcommittees of the Congress, under procedures established by the committee or subcommittee;

(C) duly authorized officials and employees of the General Accounting Office, under procedures established by the Comptroller General;

(D) a single agency of each State, as designated by State law, under procedures established by that State in conformance with the procedures established by the Comptroller General under subparagraph (C); and

(E) persons performing qualified research, under procedures established by the Secretary of Commerce by rule or regulation.

(3) The procedures established under paragraph (2) for access to the information in the registry shall be sufficient to prevent disclosure to any unauthorized person of any such information which specifically identifies any interest registered or reported under this section, any foreign person holding such an interest, or any United States property in which such an interest is held, except that duly authorized officials and employees of the General Accounting Office may disclose such information to a committee or subcommittee of the Congress.

(m) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

(1) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Commerce.

(2) The term "United States", when used in a geographic sense, means the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, American Samoa, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

(3) The term "United States business enterprise" means—

(A) any sole proprietorship, branch, partnership, associated group, association, estate, trust, corporation, or other organization organized under the laws of the United States or of a State or that has its principal place of business in the United States; and

(B) any two or more enterprises described in subparagraph (A) which are acting in concert.

(4) The term "United States property" means—

(A) any United States business enterprise; and

(B) any real property located in the United States, including any minerals therein. For purposes of paragraph (6), contiguous properties in which a foreign person holds an interest shall be considered both separately and in the aggregate as one property.

(5) The term "foreign person" means—

(A) any individual who is not a citizen of the United States;

(B) any business enterprise that is organized under the laws of a foreign government or which has its principal place of business outside of the United States;

(C) any foreign government or any agency or instrumentality of a foreign government; and

(D) any two or more persons acting as a group for the purpose of acquiring or holding any interest referred to in subsection (a) or (b) (and each foreign person in such group), if any foreign person or persons described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of this paragraph hold an equity or ownership interest in such group of 25 percent or more, or the equivalent of such an interest.

(6) The term "significant interest" means any equity or ownership interest that exceeds 5 percent of the total equity or ownership interests in a United States property that (i) has assets or, in the case of real property, is an asset, in the United States with a market value in excess of $5,000,000, or (ii) had gross sales from the United States in the most recent fiscal year in excess of $10,000,000.

(7) The term "controlling interest" means an equity or ownership interest that exceeds 25 percent of the total equity or ownership interests in a business enterprise that—

(A) has assets in the United States with a market value in excess of $20,000,000; or

(B) had gross sales from the United States in the most recent fiscal year in excess of $20,000,000.

(8) The terms "acquire" and "hold", when used with respect to an interest, refer to the ultimate beneficial owner, who must register and report such interest regardless of whether it is held directly or through a nominee or other financial intermediary. Such terms do not refer to a nominee or other financial intermediary who holds such interest on behalf of the ultimate beneficial owner.

(9) The term "equity or ownership interest" shall not include—

(A) any note, bond, debenture, loan, obligation, or other evidence of indebtedness, any put, call, straddle, option, or privilege on any debt, or any certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, guarantee of, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase any debt; and

(B) any mineral interest other than an interest in fee simple absolute or a reversionary interest.

(10) The term "State" means any of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, American Samoa, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

(11) The term "branch" means the operation or activities carried out by a person in a different location in its own name, rather than through a separately incorporated entity.

(n) EFFECTIVE DATES.—(1) Subject to paragraph (2), this section shall take effect on the effective date of the regulations prescribed under subsection (j).

(2) Subsection (j) of this section shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.●

By Mr. HEINZ:

S. 290. A bill relating to decennial censuses of population; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

DECENNIAL CENSUSES OF POPULAITON

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise today to correct a badly flawed portion of the upcoming census. The census will completely ignore thousands of Americans serving their Nation overseas. This injustice has significant implications for several States—including my home State of Pennsylvania. At the heart of the issue is the fact that the findings of the decennial tabulation of the Nation's population may trigger a major redrawing of the country's political map.

It is my belief, Mr. President, that the census should be a completely accurate reflection of America's citizenry. The methodology used must ensure that all U.S. citizens be counted. It almost defies belief that a large block of our Nation's population—our service men and women on temporary assignment overseas—will not be counted. By excluding them from the talley, these people literally lose their voice in Congress.

A number of States will be affected adversely by this count. States such as Alabama, Michigan, Missouri, and North Carolina could suffer a direct loss of representation. Connecticut, as well as my home State of Pennsylvania, will definitely be affected if the policy does not change.

Other States, notably California and Texas, stand to gain seats. I have no quarrel with such a shift if it reflects a true change in population. I do take issue, however, with denying citizens their representation simply because the census doesn't want to take the time to count overseas personnel and their families. Pennsylvania, for example, has 23,000 military personnel serving their country overseas. While they put themselves on the front line abroad, we reward them by taking away their basic right of representation at home.

Mr. President, my legislation restores our overseas personnel to the ranks of the represented—where they belong. It is the same effort I took up here in the Senate last Congress and one which was initiated by Congressman TOM RIDGE in the House. By including overseas military personnel in the census, this bill takes the necessary steps toward ensuring an equitable census.

I invite my colleagues to support this measure, and join me in cosponsoring this important legislation.●

By Mr. HEINZ (for himself and Mr. SPECTER):

S. 291. A bill to require that the Director of the Office of Management and Budget include a reference to Easton, PA, in the official title of the metropolitan statistical area of which it is a part; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

INCLUSION OF EASTON, PA, IN STATISTICAL AREA

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to correct what I believe to be an unfair and unwarranted insult to many residents of eastern Pennsylvania. Easton, a vital community of hard-working and justifiably proud people, has been stricken from the official title of the metropolitan statistical area of which it is a part. In taking this action, the Office of Management and Budget has effectively made Easton "unofficial."

Easton is one of three major communities which make up the Lehigh Valley, an area which also includes Allentown and Bethlehem. All three are contiguous, just minutes from each other by car. The international airport which serves the area includes all three towns in its designation. Despite all of this, Easton will not be identified as part of the MSA for census-taking purposes. OMB, in their adjustment of the classification, has succeeded in creating a designation that is only two-thirds accurate in describing the area.

Mr. President, I would like to point out that this exclusion—while not amounting to too much in terms of OMB's methodology—certainly has made the people of Easton feel as though they have taken a back seat to the two larger surrounding communities in the valley.

The bill I am introducing is designed to correct this situation by requiring OMB to include a reference to Easton in the official title of the metropolitan statistical area. This legislation was introduced last year on the House side by Congressman DON RITTER and by myself here in the Senate. The intent of this legislation is not to seek possible gains. Rather, it is a bill designed to restore Easton to its rightful place in the official designation of the Lehigh Valley.●

By Mr. BAUCUS:

S. 292. A bill to require the initiation of trade negotiations with Japan; to the Committee on Finance.

INITIATION OF TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH JAPAN

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise today to re-introduce legislation that directs the administration to begin negotiations with Japan aimed at addressing the many pressing bilateral economic problems that plague the United States-Japan relationship.

On the eve of Prime-Minister Takeshita's visit to the United States, the time is ripe to reconsider the United States—Japan bilateral economic relationship.

The world's two economic superpowers simply must address the economic problems that threaten their bilateral relationship and the health of both economies; namely, the $50-plus billion bilateral trade deficit and the unequal distribution of the security burden.

The current approach to dealing with these problems simply is not working. Whenever an economic dispute arises—normally over a Japanese trade barrier—the same pattern is played out.

Both sides threaten and bluster. Normally, after many months of hard bargaining, an agreement is reached. But only at the cost of much goodwill on both sides.

And as soon as one dispute is settled another arises.

The current approach is a failure. The problems are simply too big to be addressed through an endless series of hunt-and-peck bilateral negotitions—often over relatively minor issues. And the costs of continuing on this course are simply too high.

We must strike a new course.

I believe the new course should be a major bilateral economic and trade agreement that addresses many of the outstanding economic issues and establishes a dispute settlement procedure to enforce the agreement and address future disputes.

I ask unanimous consent that an article I recently authored on this topic be included at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAX BAUCUS: PACIFIC OVERTURE—A RISING STAR IN THE U.S. SENATE TELLS WASHINGTON TO QUIT NICKEL AND DIMING THE JAPANESE AND ADOPT A WHOLESALE APPROACH TO SMOOTH ECONOMIC AND SECURITY RELATIONS

The bilateral relationship between the U.S. and Japan is the most important in the world, bar none. That statement by U.S. Ambassador to Japan Mike Mansfield may strike some ears as hyperbolic, but it merely reflects economic reality. The U.S. and Japan are the world's economic superpowers.

Unfortunately, the bilateral relationship is in disarray.

A series of economic problems, most notably a $60 billion bilateral trade imbalance and an unequal security burden, has triggered a seemingly endless round of bilateral disputes—mostly over Japanese trade barriers. Several of these disputes already have flared to nearly trade-war proportions.

The U.S. has chosen to address each bilateral problem that arises—through a separate bilateral negotiation. This strategy has serious shortcomings.

First, U.S. objectives has been poorly chosen. Second, the seemingly endless series of disputes has given the Japanese people the impression that the U.S. is a tireless complainer that blames all of its problem on Japan. Most important, the U.S. government has allowed each Federal agency to conduct independent negotiations with Japan without establishing a central agenda. As Ambassador Mansfield puts it, this "nickel and diming" of Japan is creating more problems than it solves.

A way to ease Washington-Tokyo tensions may lie in a free-trade agreement modeled after the U.S.-Canada agreement. Given the pervasivesness of Japanese trade barriers, a true FTA is probably not in the U.S.' best interests. But a wholesale approach to bilateral trade and economic problems is desperately needed.

A U.S.-Japan accord should have three major elements: agreements on macroeconomic coordination, trade and burden-sharing.

Probably the most important function the pact could serve is establishing a framework for closer economic coordination between the world's two largest economies—a kind of G-2. The Reagan Administration has already taken a first step toward such an arrangement in the Baker-Miyazawa Accord of 1986.

Given the importance of trade flows to the bilateral economic relationship, the immediate goal of the G-2 should be the control and reduction of the trade imbalance.

The U.S. and Japan should set trade-flow targets that would increase trade while restoring some balance to it. Both nations should be obligated to employ macroeconomic policy (tax policy, fiscal policy, monetary policy and exchange rates) to meet the targets. Obivously, both nations must retain flexibility in manipulating these policy tools, but both can afford to give trade flows much greater emphasis in the formulation of economic policy.

The long-term pressure of meeting the trade-flow targets would benefit both economies. The targets would encourage Japan to confront some of its fundamental problems. If Japan were committed to meeting the targets, reform of its distribution system or increasing consumer demand would likely be more attractive options than permanently keeping the yen high or deficit spending.

The opportunities yielded up by a Washington-Tokyo agreement also would encourage American businesses and the U.S. Government itself to become more export-oriented.

Further, to eliminate exchange-rate fluctuations, target zones should be established and enforced by central banks in both nations to prevent the yen/dollar exchange rate from losing touch with underlying economic conditions. Such a step could prevent trade imbalances from being inflated by excessive movement of the exchange rate. Stabilizing exchange rates also would greatly facilitate planning by export businesses in both nations.

A G-2 could lead the rest of the world by example and necessity into further multilateral economic coordination. The Baker-Miyazawa Accord's invitation to other nations to participate after it has been established has merit. As a practical matter, once a G-2 was functioning, other nations would be left with the choice of joining the process or largely letting the U.S. and Japan dictate the shape of the world economic environment. And, as long as the U.S. and Japan made it clear that they would not allow new members to bog down decisionmaking or implementation, wider participation would be extremely helpful in managing the world economy.

As is obvious from the numerous disputes over Japanese trade barriers, individual trade barriers must be addressed as well as the trade imbalance. Even if the trade deficit is reduced, there will be numerous disputes over such problems as Japanese industrial targeting, the Japanese distribution system, repeated dumping by Japanese companies, and other trade concerns.

These issues are best approached through a trade agreement that has two main elements: a series of understandings on major trade problems, and a new formal dispute settlement procedure. Principles could be negotiated to impose discipline on some of the major trade-distorting practices. Taking a page from the 1986 semiconductor agreement market-share targets might be established in critical sectors.

To resolve future trade disputes and enforce agreed-upon trading rules, a U.S.-Japan Trade Commission (modeled on the U.S.-Canada Trade Commission established by the Washington-Ottawa FTA) should be established. The Commission would attempt to settle trade disagreements through consultations. If they failed, panels of jointly chosen experts would apply the agreement's established principles and GATT rules to the dispute. The details of the process must be left to the negotiators. But the general dispute settlement procedure in the Canada-U.S. FTA seems a workable model.

This obviously stops short of a free-trade agreement between Tokyo and Washington. But the combination of macroeconomic coordination to rein in the trade imbalance and new rules and a dispute settlement process would do much to dissolve U.S.-Japan trade tensions.

The final prong of a U.S.-Japan agreement should address the problem of burden sharing. Perhaps the most difficult part of the U.S.-Japan economic equation is the unequal security burden. The basic problem is simple: The U.S. devotes 6½% of its GNP to Western security, Japan devotes about only 1%. Unfortunately, the obvious solution to the problem—increasing Japanese military spending—raises serious concerns both inside and outside Japan. Nonetheless, until this underlying disparity is address, the U.S. will be at an economic disadvantage.

The best solution to this problem is encouraging Japan to further increase direct payments to the U.S. to partially offset U.S. military spending and to further increase its foreign assistance, preferably through multilateral agencies. Though they may not be popular in Japan, direct payments ease the unequal security burden without creating significant foreign-policy problems.

Japan already plans to significantly expand foreign assistance in the coming years. But it must go further. For example, as part of an economic accord, Japan might agree to plow back a large portion of its current-account surplus into assistance for the indebted Latin American countries. Japan also should take steps to open its market to LDC exports that it now largely shuts out.

Some elements of this accord should be addressed in a formal bilateral agreement; others might best be carried out as informal executive commitments. But all of these economic issues should be discussed in a single, high-level negotiation, and not on an issue-by-issue basis.

An accord like the one outlined is overwhelmingly in the interests of the U.S. and Japan. Japan relies on the U.S. as a market for 40% of its exports, and the U.S. is the ultimate guarantor of Japanese security vis-à-vis the Soviet Union. The U.S. now owes Japan $250 billion and is borrowing from Japan almost daily to support its budget deficit. In short, both nations have a substantial stake in the economic prosperity of the other.

Beyond the direct benefits, a U.S.-Japan accord could have certain strategic benefits. For example, bilateral talks between the U.S. and Japan aimed at concluding a sweeping economic accord would be a powerful counter to fears that the EC's 1992 project will impose barriers against non-EC goods and services. If the U.S. and Japan move toward a closer bilateral economic relationship, both would have more leverage to prevent the EC from shutting them out.

Moreover, pursuing a bilateral agreement with Japan could reinvigorate the now-mired Uruguay Round of GATT talks: It would put various U.S. trading partners, now safely dragging their feet, on notice that they may be left behind if they don't negotiate in the Uruguay Round.

The next U.S. President has a unique opportunity to strike a new course in U.S.-Japan relations. No agreement can end all of the U.S.'s economic problems. But an agreement that addresses the major bilateral economic problems and ends the bickering is within reach. The U.S. and Japan must forge a new relationship—an economic partnership.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, the events of the last few months have only intensified the need for a United States-Japan bilateral agreement as outlined in this bill. I would like to highlight four factors in particular: First, the apparent deadlock in the Uruguay Round of GATT talks; second, the implementation of the Omnibus Trade Act; third, the expanding United States-Japan trade deficit; and fourth, the increasing Japanese interest in this approach.

First, the Uruguay Round of GATT negotiations appears to be floundering. Disputes between the United States and the European Community over agricultural subsidies and between the United States and the developing nations over intellecutal property are threatening to scuttle the negotiations.

GATT negotiations must remain a critical element of U.S. trade policy. But the current stalemates demonstrate that we can no longer afford to put all of our eggs in one basket. Bilateral negotiations with major trading partners, such as Japan, are a vital insurance policy against the breakdown of the round. Further, active bilateral negotiations spur foot draggers to negotiate seriously in the GATT for fear of being left behind.

The second factor I would like to note is the implementation of the Omnibus Trade Act. The Super-301 provision of the new trade law directs the administration to begin negotiations with nations that maintain an extensive array of trade barriers against U.S. exports. The objective of these negotiations would be eliminating the trade barriers. If the negotiations are unsuccessful, the administration is directed to retaliate against the exports of that nation.

As the administration has conceded, no nation maintains a more costly and pervasive array of trade barriers than Japan. Thus, Japan is the most likely candidate for identification under the "Super 301" provision.

Simply put, this means that the United States is almost certain to enter into a major trade negotiation with Japan driven by the mandates of the new trade law.

I suggest we use this opportunity to begin a major negotiation with Japan that addresses all elements of the economic relationship including trade. The trade negotiations can be conducted under the rubric of Super-301, with talks on economic coordination, burden sharing, and dispute settlement occurring on a parallel track.

The third factor I would like to point out is widening of the United States-Japan bilateral trade deficit. The bilateral trade imbalance was down $5 billion in 1988 from 1987, but began to widen again in the fourth quarter of 1988. Most economists project that the deficit may increase back to a $55 to $60 billion level in 1989.

The U.S. economy simply cannot sustain $55 to $60 billion hemorrhages indefinitely. And the deficit can only be controlled and reduced if Japan and the United States agree to address their economic problems in a comprehensive fashion.

Finally, the idea of a bilateral economic accord has gained increasing popularity in Japan. I have watched with interest as the issue has been discussed in the Japanese press. In fact, it is rumored that Prime Minister Ta-keshita may propose some sort of bilateral dispute settlement mechanism during his visit to Washington later this week.

Certainly, I welcome discussions on this topic. But we must really address our bilateral problems rather than paper them over. If a Japanese proposal represents an honest attempt to address bilateral economic problems in a forthright manner, President Bush should welcome it with open arms. But if it represents merely an attempt to circumvent the Trade Act and establish another endless series of negotiations, we should reject it.

We need real change, not a diplomatic fix.

Mr. President, I strongly urge President Bush and his advisers to examine the proposal embodied in this bill, and begin negotiations with Japan modeled on this proposal.

We simply cannot afford to wait much longer.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill appear following my statement in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 292

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. NEGOTIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The President shall take action to initiate negotiations with Japan for the purpose of entering into one or more agreements that meet the objectives described in subsection (b).

(b) OBJECTIVES.—The objectives of the negotiations conducted under subsection (a) shall be—

(1) to increase economic coordination between the United States and Japan for the purpose of eliminating any imbalance on the current account between Japan and the United States by—

(A) controlling and eliminating the budget deficit of the United States,

(B) stimulating consumer demand in Japan, and

(C) controlling fluctuations in the rate of exchange between the currency of the United States and the currency of Japan;

(2) to liberalize trade and improve dispute settlement procedures, including—

(A) the elimination of remaining major trade distortions and formal trade barriers of Japan,

(B) the full enforcement of all commitments made in previous trade agreements to which the United States and Japan are parties,

(C) the disciplining of other informal trade barriers, including the distribution system of Japan, exclusive Japanese business relationships, administrative guidance, and the Japanese patent system,

(D) with respect to critical economic sectors, the concluding of sectoral agreements similar to the United States-Japan Semiconductor Agreement of 1986, and

(E) the establishment of a joint trade commission between the United States and Japan (similar to the Canada-United States Trade Commission established under the United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreement) to—

(i) apply the rules established under—

(I) the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and

(II) any other trade agreement to which the United States and Japan are parties, to trade disputes through formal consultations and arbitration, and

(ii) oversee implementation of any current or future trade agreements between the United States and Japan; and

(3) to improve allocation of the strategic burden between the United States and Japan to offset the disproportionate defense burden of the United States through—

(A) an increase of direct contributions by Japan to the United States for reimbursement of military expenditures by the United States,

(B) an increase in the amount of funds expended by Japan for foreign assistance, particularly through multilateral agencies, and

(C) an increase of imports into Japan from developing nations.

(c) SPECIAL RULES.—

(1) The position of the United States in the negotiations conducted under subsection (a) that are undertaken to meet the objectives described in subsection (b)(2) shall be consistent with the requirements and time limitations provided under section 310 of the Trade Act of 1974.

(2) During the period in which negotiations are conducted under subsection (a), the United States Trade Representative shall undertake regular consultations with the Congress in accordance with the consultation requirements of subtitle A of title I of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988.

(3) The President shall—

(A) strive to integrate other Pacific Rim countries into any agreement entered into with Japan as a result of negotiations conducted under subsection (a), and

(B) regularly consult with other Pacific Rim countries during the course of such negotiations.

SEC. 2. GATT CONSISTENCY.

Any agreement entered into by the United States with Japan as a result of the negotiations conducted under section 1(a) shall be consistent with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.●

S. 297. A bill for the relief of Joan Daronco; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RELIEF OF JOAN DARONCO

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce two bills: a bill for the relief of Mrs. Joan Daronco, widow of recently slain Federal district court judge Richard J. Daronco, and a related bill to correct the flaw in the Judicial Survivors' Annuity Act which necessitates that relief. By a twist of fate, Mrs. Daronco faces denial of benefits payable under the judicial survivors' annuity fund for the sudden, tragic death of her husband. The private bill will allow her to receive benefits even though the requisite 18-month vesting period had not run.

As my colleagues may recall, on May 21, 1988, Judge Richard Daronco was accosted by a gun brandishing assailant while mowing his lawn. He was pursued and gunned down in cold blood. Thereafter, the assailant turned the 38-caliber Smith & Wesson revolver on himself.

The gunman, Charles Koster, was a retired police officer whose senseless acts were motivated by revenge for an adverse ruling disposing of his daughter's sexual discrimination suit against a bank. It is ironic that a man sworn to uphold the law ended his life through a violent violation of that law.

Judge Daronco was a friend. I was privileged to recommend him to President Reagan for appointment to the bench. He was a wise and accomplished jurist who was a fine addition to the District Court for the Southern District of New York. Unfortunately, after less than 1 year of service, to the shock of us all, he was cut down.

The judge left his wife, Joan, and five children. These survivors, however, could be denied death benefits unless the private measure is adopted because Judge Daronco was snatched from the bench by his killer's bullet before his benefits vested. It is appropriate that Congress direct that benefits be justly paid.

To obviate the need for private relief in the future, I am also introducing a bill to amend current law to eliminate the 18-month vesting period where, as in this case, the judge was the victim of assassination.

It would be perversely unjust to allow murder to thwart the purpose of the judicial officer's annuity fund. It is equally unjust not to correct the law now to avoid a recurrence of this circumstance in the future.

I urge my colleagues to support these measures.●

CONGRESSIONAL PAY

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce four bills to reform the process by which Congress awards itself a pay raise. The process, or lack of process as the case happens to be, makes a mockery of the legislative system. Today, the first working day of Congress, allows people who oppose the pay raise only 7 legislative days to get a resolution of disapproval passed through both Houses of Congress. That, for all practical purposes, is impossible. It's hard enough to get simple legislation all the way through Congress in 7 days, let alone complex and controversial legislation.

That is the focus of these bills which I am introducing today. As many of you may be aware, I introduced other legislation today with Senator PRESSLER which not only addresses the pay raise process, but also takes some very firm action against the current proposed pay raise. That legislation, as well as these bills, are necessary if Congress hopes to restore the public's faith in the institution of Congress.

The introduction of this legislation, as well as the resolution referred to earlier, guarantees that the pay raise issue will see lots of congressional activity well after February 7, the date the pay raise automatically goes into effect if not rejected by Congress.●

S. 302. A bill to amend title 39, United States Code, with respect to the budgetary treatment of the Postal Service, and for other purposes; pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, referred jointly to the Committee on the Budget the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

BUDGETARY TREATMENT OF THE POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, as you may recall, during the final days of the 100th Congress we fell just short of obtaining Senate floor consideration of S. 2449, legislation to take the U.S. Postal Service "off budget." Due to the tremendous support for that bill—74 consponsors—I am today introducing an identical measure and being joined by 35 original cosponsors.

The legislation will provide that the receipts and disbursements of the Postal Service Fund not be included in the President's budget for purposes of calculating the Federal deficit; and, that the fund not be taken into account in making calculations under the 1985 Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Deficit Control Act.

The issue here is whether postal policy, financing, and operations are to be driven by political considerations associated with attempts to reduce the Federal deficit; and, whether we want to continue distorting the budget deficit picture by including the unique postal revenue-based fund in our calculations.

S. 2449 was reported out of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee in July 1988 with only one dissenting vote. Senators may also recall that in April of last year, 85 Senators voted for an amendment to the budget resolution supporting the proposition that the Postal Service should not be a pawn in deficit reduction efforts. The House also passed H.R. 4150, a bill to remove the Postal Service from the unified budget, by a vote of 390 to 16.

As was the case with S. 2449, our new bill would take effect in fiscal year 1990, so as not to be violative of the 2-year deficit reduction agreement reached last winter. Also, it differs from last year's House-passed bill in that it does not increase postal borrowing or long-term debt authority. Finally, the bill makes clear that by placing the Postal Service in an "off budget" status, Congress does not relinquish any of its authority to oversee the budget and operations of the Postal Service.

I hope my colleagues will join us in an effort to ensure that the U.S. Postal Service, so integral a link in the communications network that binds us together as one nation, remains free to serve our constituents without the inefficiency of political pressure.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of S. 302 a bill to remove the U.S. Postal Service from the Federal budgetary process. I was a cosponsor of identical legislation introduced last year (S. 2449). It was reported out of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee by a vote of 13 to 1. I also voted for an amendment to the budget resolution which would have taken the U.S. Postal Service "off budget." It passed the Senate by a vote of 85 to 8.

Last year, the House passed similar legislation, H.R. 4150, by a vote of 390 to 16. We had 75 cosponsors of S. 2449 prior to final adjournment of the 100th Congress; however, we were unable to obtain floor action on it. This year, we hope to be very successful in our efforts to get this bill passed in the Senate.

Mr. President, you will recall that under the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970, the U.S. Postal Service was created as a semi-independent government corporation which would operate on business-like principles. It was to determine its own expenses—including wages—to meet postal needs. Also, it was to make its own capital improvements and raise its own revenues to cover its costs.

Consistent with the intent of reorganization, the business-type postal budget was separated from the overall Federal budget beginning in fiscal year 1974. Only the annual appropriation to finance preferred-rate mail—which is defined by Congress—was included in the Federal budget. Then, for fiscal year 1986, the administration moved the Postal Service back on budget. Subsequently, Gramm-Rudman-Hollings put all previous "off-budget" accounts back "on-budget" and mandated that they be included in calculating Federal deficit totals. It is my understanding that the OMB views the provisions of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings as foreclosing any administrative restoration of "off-budget" treatment for the Postal Service.

As was the case last year with S. 2449, our new bill differs from the House-passed version in that it would take effect in fiscal year 1990. As such, it would not abrogate the 2-year deficit reduction agreement. It also differs from the House bill in that it would not increase postal long-term debt authority or borrowing.

Finally, Mr. President, our new bill makes it very clear that Congress would not relinquish any of its authority to oversee the postal budget and operations by removing it from the unified budget.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senate can move efficiently and expeditiously to pass this new postal "off budget" legislation.

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today as an original cosponsor of legislation which will allow the Postal Service to be considered independently from the Federal budget process. In effect, it will take the Postal Service "off-budget."

The legislation being introduced today is identical to S. 2449 which died at the end of the last Congress. That bill garnered the cosponsorship of 74 Senators. Companion legislation in the House passed by a vote of 390 to 16.

The original intent behind the creation of the Postal Service back in 1971 was to enable the postal system to assess its own needs and then finance itself accordingly without having to compete with other Federal programs for funding from the Federal budget. The way that the process works now leaves the Postal Service open to political influence when budget-cutting decisions are made.

One of the best arguments for keeping the budget for the Postal Service separate from the Federal budget is that the postal budget is prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, unlike the more politically influenced Federal budget.

In the past 18 years we have witnessed an astounding increase in the volume of mail handled by the Postal Service. Back in 1971, the Postal Service handled 86.8 billion pieces of mail. The volume at the end of fiscal year 1988 ballooned to 160.5 billion pieces of mail. the projected volume for fiscal year 1990 is 170 billion! This increase in volume has been coupled with the lowest postage rates in the industrialized world.

Allowing the Postal Service to fall prey to the political budgetary process in Congress could revert this Nation's mail service to standards to which we as a nation are not accustomed. This legislation will not allow that to happen. I am confident that once my colleagues have had an opportunity to take a good look at this legislation, they will be convinced of its merits and worked toward its swift passage.●

By Mr. LEVIN (for himself, Mr. COHEN, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. DECONCINI, and Mr. ROTH):

S. 303. A bill to establish a framework for the conduct of negotiated rulemaking by Federal agencies; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

NEGOTIATED RULEMAKING ACT

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Negotiated Rulemaking Act of 1989. The cosponsors of this bill are Senators COHEN, RIEGLE, GRASSLEY, DECONCINI, and ROTH.

Last year, this bill's predecessor passed the Senate by unanimous consent, but was not voted on in the House because of the crush of last minute business. This year, I hope we can obtain early action by both Houses of Congress.

The purpose of the bill is to improve the Federal regulatory process by encouraging agencies to use negotiated rulemaking where appropriate. Negotiated rulemaking is a drafting technique which uses negotiation to develop Federal rules. The basic approach is straightforward. An agency that has decided to develop or revise a Federal regulation can invite those who will be affected by this regulation to join the agency in forming an ad hoc committee to devise a mutually acceptable rule. If the affected parties agree to participate and reach a consensus with agency representatives, the committee formally presents a draft rule to the agency. The agency reviews the draft, makes any needed adjustments, and then publishes it in the Federal Register as a proposed rule for public notice and comment under existing rulemaking procedures.

This process, called "reg neg" by veteran users, first attracted congressional interest in 1980. At that time, several bills were introduced to encourage agencies to try the process. None were enacted, in order to allow agencies time to experiment with reg neg on their own and to develop a track record which Congress could evaluate when considering legislative alternatives.

Nine years later we have that track record. A number of agencies, including the Environmental Protection Agency, the Labor Department and the Transportation Department, have used negotiated rulemaking to develop rules on such issues as wood burning stoves, pesticides, MDA exposure limits, and working hours for airline pilots. Numerous parties have participated in the process—industry, labor, environmental groups, consumers and others. Participants have worked together not only to develop the regulations in question, but also to learn when negotiated rulemaking should be used and how it works best.

In a hearing before the Governmental Affairs Committee in May of last year, witnesses testified about the Government's experiences to date. Agencies, rulemaking participants, mediators and scholars agreed, without exception, that negotiated rulemaking has proven itself to be not only viable, but a very effective process when properly employed. Praise for the process included statements that, when used in the proper circumstances, negotiated rulemaking resulted in agency rules that were more effective, less costly, fairer in impact, quicker in achieving final status, and less subject to challenge in court. That's quite a track record.

And word is getting around in Congress. Provisions are beginning to appear on an ad hoc basis in various bills directing agencies to use reg neg procedures when developing regulations in certain areas. Examples from last session are H.R. 5, the Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Act, now Public Law 100-297, which directs the Education Secretary to use reg neg to develop regulations required by the act; and H.R. 1414, the Price-Anderson Amendments Act, which directs the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to use reg neg to resolve certain indemnification issues involving radiopharmaceuticals.

WHY A STATUTE IS NEEDED

Some may wonder, if agencies are already successfully using reg neg and Congress is already incorporating it into legislation, why a statute is needed at all. There are several compelling reasons. First, some agencies have decided, despite what other agencies are doing, that they lack the authority to try negotiated rulemaking. A statute is needed to remove any doubt about these agencies' authority to use the process and to serve as Congress' endorsement of negotiated rulemaking activities.

Second, agencies which have never tried reg neg need guidance on how to proceed. It is not obvious, for example, how an agency should conduct a negotiated rulemaking so that it is consistent with other laws governing Federal administrative practice, such as the Administrative Procedure Act and the Federal Advisory Committee Act. Deciding whom to include on a rulemaking committee, how to handle requests for additional members, how to notify the public of a committee's existence and activities, and other procedural issues are difficult. Agencies without reg neg experience face a daunting task in designing their first project—they must individually search the literature, locate the experts, identify the issues, and develop their own reg neg program. A statute is needed to ease the learning curve and the procedural complexities by gathering key information in one place, resolving the major procedural issuses in ways proven effective, and providing specific means to obtain additional expert advice. Legislation that takes these steps will make it easier for agencies to try reg neg for the first time and make it more likely that they will do so.

A third reason for enacting a statute is that even experienced agencies would benefit from a document which collects the wisdom of reg neg experts and presents general rules on how to conduct a negotiated rulemaking fairly and effectively. A reg neg statute which spells out, for example, the most appropriate ways to establish, operate, and terminate rulemaking committees will help ensure that agencies administer these committees uniformly in the most fair and effective ways yet devised.

Finally, given that Congress is beginning to employ reg neg in legislation, a statute reflecting the collected wisdom on how best to use this process is needed to serve as a common reference.

BALANCING FLEXIBILITY WITH EXPERT GUIDANCE

Negotiated rulemaking requires people to voluntarily meet together and hammer out their differences on a Federal regulation. Its hallmark is an ability to respond with flexibility to the dynamics of the people involved and the regulation under consideration in each instance. To bind the process too tightly, with too many procedural rules, would be to destroy its best features. That means that any statute on negotiated rulemaking must walk a fine line, providing needed guidance to agencies while avoiding inflexible provisions and unnecessary redtape.

The bill I am introducing today is designed to balance those concerns. It provides a framework of general rules of conducting a negotiated rulemaking and establishes mechanisms for agencies to obtain expert advice on particular points. It avoids rigid procedural requirements and explicitly permits further experimentation. The bill has undergone intense scrutiny by the reg neg community and emerged with a carefully constructed set of provisions whose content is the product of many expert reviews.

This refinement process continued even after passage of the Senate bill last year. The act being introduced today reflects several improvements over last year's legislation:

First, FACA provisions: The major change in the bill from last year is a decision to simplify and strengthen the language requiring agencies that sponsor negotiated rulemaking committees to comply with the Federal Advisory Committee Act.

Second, codification: A technical revision was made to include the bill's key provisions in title 5 of the United State Code, in the chapter on administrative rulemaking. This technical change has required the sections to be renumbered and, in some cases, reworded.

Third, judicial review: Language has been added to the section on judicial review to make it clear that regulations which are the product of negotiated rulemaking procedures are to be accorded no greater deference by a court than regulations which are the product of other rulemaking procedures.

Fourth, Federal notice: Language has also been added to the section requiring agencies to publish a notice in the Federal Register of an intent to establish a negotiated rulemaking committee. A new paragraph (8) requires that notice to explain how a person may apply, or nominate another person, for membership on the committee.

There are also a few minor differences in the wording of certain provisions to clarify their meaning without making substantive changes. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in full after my remarks.

The potential benefits of negotiated rulemaking have become clear. Instead of affected parties spendings their time and resources litigating a regulation drafted and imposed by an agency, the affected parties and agency spend their energies constructively developing a proposed rule together. The potential result is not only a rule which will become effective in less time, but also a rule which will be better substantively, since it will reflect the involvement of the interests who will be affected by it.

Nine years ago, there was insufficient evidence that the potential benefits of negotiated rulemaking would actually accrue. Now, we have a track record of success. Congress needs to extend that record of success by encouraging more agencies to try negotiated rulemaking under procedures which will guide but not inhibit the process. That is the goal of the Negotiated Rulemaking Act of 1989, and I hope my colleagues will join me in ensuring that this legislation receives early attention and action during the 101st Congress.●

● Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, today I am pleased to join with Senator LEVIN in introducing the Negotiated Rulemaking Act of 1989. I believe that this bill, which is a revised version of legislation that passed the Senate unanimously last year, will go far in encouraging a more open, cooperative, and efficient process of proposing regulations.

Negotiated rulemaking, or "reg neg" as it has come to be called, is the process by which an agency invites affected parties to sit down with the agency and to work with it in developing a proposed rule. Using the "reg neg" process, the agency can invite affected parties to form an ad hoc committee to devise a mutually acceptable draft regulation. After hammering out proposed areas of agreements, the committee presents a draft regulation to the agency. The agency then reviews the draft and publishes it, with any necessary revisions, as a proposed rule for public notice and comment in the Federal Register.

Since 1980, several agencies have used negotiated rulemaking voluntarily and have found it to be a very valuable process. Far from slowing down the process, "reg neg" has actually, in many circumstances, made the regulatory process more efficient, less costly, and fairer to parties affected by proposed rules. Perhaps the most important effect of regulatory negotiation is that it makes the regulatory process less adversarial than conventional rulemaking. By working together to reach consensus on proposed rules before they are published, agencies and diverse groups can come together sooner, perhaps avoiding the extreme positions and even costly litigation that occurs when the Government and interested parties are working at odds with each other.

I am sure that the concept of regulatory negotiation can, at first glance, sound somewhat dry, and even bureaucratic, to my colleagues. It can, however, have real life consequences. It has already been used to develop regulations in areas such as work hours for airline pilots, woodburning stoves, and pesticides. Many outside Government will benefit from its use, including consumer groups, industry, environmental groups and labor. By bringing these important voices into the process earlier, the Government is encouraging cooperation, rather than confrontation, from parties interested in proposed regulations. The Government also benefits, since negotiated rulemaking can, in the appropriate circumstances, result in more effective rules with less overall cost and less litigation.

The legislation we are introducing today will encourage the use of regulatory negotiation by agencies in appropriate circumstances. This bill, while keeping "reg neg" a voluntary alternative to conventional rulemaking, will give guidance to agencies on how to conduct negotiated rulemaking and will remove any doubt about agencies' authority to use this process.

I hope that the Senate will act swiftly to consider and pass this worthy measure and that the House will also act on this issue this year. The Government, the private sector and the consumer can benefit from negotiated rulemaking, and we should encourage its use.●

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague, Senator CARL LEVIN, as an original cosponsor of the Negotiated Rulemaking Act of 1989. This legislation spells out the procedures to be followed by agencies using advisory committees to develop proposed agency rules.

Several agencies, most notably the Environmental Protection Agency and the Departments of Labor and Transportation, have successfully experimented with this approach. The use of advisory committees comprised of parties affected by and interested in the agencies' rules can help to develop consensus for a proposed rule and thereby avoid litigation over the rule. The Administrative Conference of the United States has studied this process and recommended that it be used by other agencies as well. This legislation is intended to encourage agencies' use of negotiated rulemaking procedures, where appropriate, by clarifying the legal requirements for their use.

Legislative efforts to encourage the use of negotiated rulemaking have been advanced in this body for several years. During the last Congress, legislation very similar to the bill being introduced today was passed unanimously by the Senate. Unfortunately, it was not acted upon by the House of Representatives prior to adjournment. I am hopeful that our efforts during this 101st Congress will culminate in enactment of the Negotiated Rulemaking Act. I commend Senator LEVIN for his hard work and perseverance with respect to this issue, and trust that with his leadership we will reach our goal.●

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 304. A bill to promote nondiscrimination in State medical licensure and medical reciprocity standards; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY FOR MEDICAL LICENSURE AND RECIPROCITY ACT

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce "The Equal Opportunity for Medical Licensure and Reciprocity Act of 1989."

Simply put, this legislation will prohibit States from discriminating against graduates of foreign medical institutions. One's qualifications to practice medicine are not and should not be determined on the basis of national origin, but rather by objective tests of acumen. Passage of this bill will ensure that no person who is qualified, by experience and training, to practice medicine will be denied a license simply because he or she was trained beyond our shores.

This country owes a great debt to graduates of foreign medical institutions. In our inner cities as well as our rural areas, foreign medical graduates have willingly filled positions of great need, ministering to the poor, often accepting woefully low reimbursements for services rendered. In my own State of New York, many emergency rooms and rural health clinics would be forced to close were it not for the presence of capable medical personnel trained abroad. Given the invaluable role these fine doctors play in delivering health services to the poor of our nation, it is unconscionable and wholly unacceptable that many States have taken of a sudden to denying licenses to fully-qualified foreign medical graduates.

I want to make it absolutely clear that this legislation in no way preempts a State's right to conduct licensure procedures in any way the State sees fit—so long as such procedures treat each applicant equally and do not discriminate against applicants based on where the applicant obtained his or her medical degree.

I urge my colleagues to support this important piece of legislation, and I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 304

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Equal Opportunity for Medical Licensure and Reciprocity Act of 1989.

SEC. 2. The Purpose of this Act is to provide that any person that is a medical school graduate of a medical school outside the United States shall be given equal access to practice medicine within any jurisdiction in the United States. Discrimination against any graduate of a medical school outside the United States shall not be tolerated in licensure, reciprocity, jobs, promotions, hospital privileges, reimbursement, residency, medical staff academic appointments, and professional society membership. The Department of Health and Human Services shall enforce the provisions of this law.

SEC. 3. Any person who is a practicing and licensed physician in any one state of the United States and who is a graduate from a medical school outside the United States shall not be denied equal access to practice medicine within any jurisdiction in the United States.

SEC. 4. For any person who is a practicing and licensed physician in any one state of the United States, no provision of law, regulation, policy, or requirements for obtaining or maintaining a license to practice medicine shall discriminate against a person who is a graduate of a medical school outside the United States because of such person's status as a graduate of such a medical school.

SEC. 5. Any person who is a medical graduate from a medical school outside of the United States and has undergone postgraduate training in the United States and obtained a license to practice medicine in any State of the United States shall not be subjected to any conditions or requirements which materially differ in any respect from such conditions or requirements as applied to graduates from medical schools within the United States in relation to the following:

(a) any examination required as a condition to practice medicine or to continue the practice of medicine in the United States;

(b) any requirements or qualification criteria necessary to obtain or maintain medical board certification in the United States;

(c) access to residency training positions at any medical school, hospital or other medical facility within the United States;

(d) access to any form of financial assistance from the United States Government or any agency thereof to be provided to a medical graduate or to be provided to any person or entity where such financial assistance is in any way based on the status or origin of a medical graduate;

(e) State and jurisdictional standards and evaluation criteria for determining the method or manner of granting reciprocity to any medical graduate to practice medicine in such State or jurisdiction;

(f) membership in any public medical association or organization;

(g) any other such circumstances concerning the licensing of medical providers and/or the professional requirements within the medical system of the United States;

(h) that no Federal law shall be construed to require or permit discrimination in the payment for health care services which are furnished (or ordered to be furnished) by or under the supervision of a physician, solely on the basis that individual's qualification as a physician is based on the graduation from a medical school located outside the United States;

(i) no retroactive laws or regulations shall be applied to any practicing and licensed physician of the United States who is a graduate of a medical school located outside the United States; and

(j) information about the medical school from which the foreign medical graduate has graduated, which is either available or not available, will not affect the decision about the Foreign Medical Graduate's licensing, reciprocity, jobs, promotions, hospital privileges, reimbursements, residency, training, fellowship, professional membership, or in any other manner.

SEC. 6. The above provisions shall be equally applicable to conditions and requirements relating to any medical specialty as well as the general practice of medicine.

SEC. 7. The Secretary of Health and Human Services may not make a grant, loan guarantee, or interest subsidy under any provision of law to, or for the benefit of any school of medicine, unless the application for the grant, loan guarantee, or interest subsidy payment contains assurances satisfactory to the Secretary of Health and Human Services that the School of medicine will not discriminate in any way against any physician that is not a graduate of a medical school located within the United States.

SEC. 8. A State shall adopt medical licensure and medical reciprocity standards which provide equal opportunity to any person who is a graduate of a medical school which is within the United States, and to any person who is a graduate of a medical school outside the United States and such person has completed the United States postgraduate training and obtained a license to practice medicine in any State of the United States.

SEC. 9. The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall develop regulations to carry out the provisions of this Act.●

By Mr. DIXON (for himself, Mr. GARN, Mr. GRAHAM, and Mr. WIRTH):

S. 305. A bill to modernize and reform the regulation of financial services, to strengthen the enforcement authority of depository institutions regulating agencies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

PROXMIRE FINANCIAL MODERNIZATION ACT

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, on March 1 of last year, the moratorium on further actions by the Federal banking regulators on bank asset powers issues expired. The very next day, March 2, the Senate Banking Committee voted to report S. 1886, the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act of 1988, to the Senate floor by an 18 to 2 margin. By the end of the month, March 30 to be exact, the full Senate endorsed the committee's action, passing the bill by an overwhelming 94 to 2 vote with virtually no amendments.

The Senate therefore kept its part of the promise the Congress made in 1987 during debate on S. 790 and H.R. 27, which ultimately became law as the Competitive Equality Banking Act of 1987. That bill did not address fundamental banking law reform issues, but section 203(a) stated that—

It is the intent of the Congress, through the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the U.S. Senate and the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives to conduct a comprehensive review of our banking and financial laws and to make decisions on the need for financial restructuring legislation in the light of today's changing financial environment both domestic and international before the expiration of such moratorium.

For a variety of reasons, however, the House of Representatives was unable to complete action on its financial services reform legislation before the 100th Congress adjourned last October. Redeeming the pledge Congress made in 1987, therefore, is unfinished business that must be addressed early in the 101st Congress.

To begin that process, I am today introducing, together with my good friends and committee colleagues, Senators GARN, GRAHAM, and WIRTH, the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act of 1989.

It is important to remember, as we begin this process once again, that we are not in front of the reform process. In fact, unfortunately, we are well behind the fundamental changes in technologies and markets that make the need for reform so compelling.

It is also important to remember that the failure to enact these greatly needed reforms does not and cannot prevent reform from occurring. Congressional failure to act simply redirects the reform process into other channels. Because Congress has not acted, the Federal regulators and the Federal courts have been forced to act.

"Forced" is the proper word to describe the regulators' and the courts' activity in the reform process. They have been forced by the fundamental changes that have occurred and are continuing to occur in financial markets. They have been forced by the pressure for change that these financial revolutions have generated. They have been forced because they have the applications and the lawsuits in front of them and Because, unlike the Congress, they do not have the luxury of saying that they are not going to decide a question.

I strongly believe that Congress should take control of the financial reform process, but we should not be surprised by continuing efforts to creatively interpret existing law if we allow the law to lose touch with economic reality.

Change in the law is overdue; the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act of 1989 represens a moderate, wellthought-out approach that begins the reform process using a procompetition approach, while guarding the safety and soundness of our banking system.

The Proxmire Financial Services Modernization Act of 1989 is identical to S. 1886 as it passed the Senate last year, with a few minor modifications to bring the bill up to date. For example, the management interlock and home equity provisions are dropped because they became law last year in separate actions. In the corporate debt underwriting sections of the bill, the 6-month delayed effective date is dropped to reflect the fact that additional time has passed and because the Federal Reserve has acted on additional section 20 applications and granted securities affiliates of bank holding companies the right to underwrite corporate bonds.

Given the extensive legislative history already available on this bill, I do not want to take the time of the Senate now to describe it in detail. There is an exhaustive committee report on the bill, and there was a solid Senate floor debate. Instead, I want to address only one issue—does this bill deregulate?

The answer to that is simple—no. The bill permits bank holding companies to own affiliates that engage in a variety of securities activities. However, those securities activities are fully subject to every bit of securities regulation that applies to the rest of the securities industry. In addition, the bill mandates tough new statutory standards and regulations strengthening bank capital and regulating the transactions between a banking affiliate of a bank holding company and a securities affiliate. These restrictions are designed to protect banking organizations from the risks attributable to the activities of the securities affiliate, and to ensure that the securities affiliates do not have unfair competitive advantages over other securities firms.

The bottom line is that this bill does not deregulate; it does just the opposite. It provides for additional regulation to police the new authorities it contains. It is in the best tradition of reform legislation. It is procompetition, while strengthening the ability of the cop on the beat to uncover and deal with any problems that might arise.

This legislation is the result of over 83 days of hearings, testimony from over 457 witnesses, and over 18,000 pages of transcripts during the last 8 years. It is a solid bill, which is the reason it passed by such a strong margin in 1988.

This is the bill that was hammered out over many months in the last Congress with the direct involvement of virtually every member of the Senate Banking Committee.

I have already heard rumblings, Mr. President; I know there are those that would like to derail the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act of 1989 in the hope of getting either a much narrower bill or a renewal of the moratorium. To them, I simply want to repeat what I said last year: It will not happen.

Section 203(b) of the Competitive Equality Banking Act of 1987 makes that point crystal clear. It states:

> It is the intent of the Congress not to renew or extend the moratorium established under section 201 whether or not subsequent banking legislation is passed by the Congress.

Let me repeat that for my colleagues. The moratorium will not be renewed even if there is no further action on banking legislation.

This is one Senator, Mr. President, that intends to do everything he can to see that we live up to that promise. I look forward to working with the other members of the Senate Banking Committee, the members of the full Senate, and my colleagues in the House of Representatives toward enactment of the kind of reform legislation that addresses the real problems facing the financial services industry. The Proxmire Financial Modernization Act is that kind of legislation. I strongly believe it should be quickly enacted.

I want to say only one more thing before I conclude, Mr. President. As my colleagues know, this legislation was authored by the distinguished chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, Bill Proxmire, in the last Congress. It is the Senate's great lost that he has retired and is not on the floor here today to reintroduce his bill.

I was pleased to work with Bill in developing this legislation in the last Congress, and I am proud to be introducing it today. I want him, and all my colleagues, to know that I will work hard and long to see that this measure that bears his name is given the kind of priority attention that it deserves.

As I stated before, enactment of this bill is long overdue. The Proxmire Financial Modernization Act should be promptly passed by the Senate and the House and signed by the President. With the help of all my colleagues in the Senate and the House, it will be.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be included at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TITLE I—SECURITIES AFFILIATES OF BANK HOLDING COMPANIES

SEC. 101. AMENDMENTS TO THE BANKING ACT OF 1933.

Section 20 (12 U.S.C. 377) and section 32 (12 U.S.C. 78) of the Banking Act of 1933 are repealed.

SEC. 102. AUTHORIZATION FOR BANK HOLDING COMPANIES TO ACQUIRE SECURITIES AFFILIATES.

Section 4(c) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1843(c)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(15)(A) SECURITIES AFFILIATES.—Shares of a securities affiliate which may, in accordance with this paragraph, do one or more of the following:

"(i) Engage in underwriting, distributing, or dealing in securities of any type.

"(ii) Engage in securities brokerage, private placement, investment advisory, or other securities activities permitted for brokers or dealers registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 or for investment advisers registered under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940.

"(iii) Engage in, or acquire the shares of a company engaged in, any activity that is not described in clause (i) or (ii) of this subparagraph, if another provision of this section permits a bank holding company or subsidiary thereof to engage in that activity or acquire those shares, and—

"(I) the Board permits the bank holding company to engage in that activity or acquire those shares through the securities affiliate, or

"(II) that provision permits the bank holding company or a subsidiary thereof to engage in that activity or acquire those shares without the Board's approval.

"(B) APPLICATION REQUIREMENTS.—

"(i) Except as provided in subparagraph (D)(ii) of this paragraph, a bank holding company shall not directly or indirectly acquire or retain shares of a securities affiliate under this paragraph without complying with this subparagraph.

"(ii) The following provisions shall apply during the 4 years following the date of enactment of the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act of 1989:

"(I) A bank holding company shall not acquire or retain shares of a securities affiliate pursuant to this paragraph without the Board's prior approval.

"(II) In acting on an application under this paragraph, the Board shall apply the criteria specified in this subparagraph, in subparagraphs (C) and (D)(i) of this paragraph, and in paragraph (8)(B)(iv) of this subsection.

"(III) The Board shall not approve an application under this paragraph unless the Board is satisfied that the bank holding company possesses the managerial resources to conduct the securities activities safely and soundly. In making that determination, the Board shall take into account the experience of management and its record of successfully managing the bank holding company or enterprises engaged in activities that are the same as or similar to those authorized for securities affiliates under this paragraph.

"(iii) Beginning 4 years after the date of enactment of the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act of 1989, a bank holding company seeking to acquire or retain shares pursuant to this paragraph shall comply with paragraph (8)(B) of this subsection. In making a determination under that paragraph, the Board shall apply the criteria specified in clause (iv) of that paragraph and in subparagraphs (C) and (D)(i) of this paragraph.

"(C) CONCENTRATION OF RESOURCES.—

"(i) The Board shall disapprove any acquisition pursuant to this paragraph that would result in the affiliation of—

"(I) a bank holding company or bank that has, or had on average during any of the 8 calendar quarters preceding the date of the application, total assets of more than $30,000,000,000, with

"(II) an investment banking organization that has, or had on average during any of the 8 calendar quarters preceding the date of the application, total assets of more than $15,000,000,000.

"(ii) The dollar limitations in clause (i) of this subparagraph shall be adjusted annually after December 31, 1989, by the annual percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index as described in paragraph (8)(C) of this subsection.

"(D) INVESTMENT IN A SECURITIES AFFILIATE.—

"(i) A bank holding company shall not acquire control of a securities affiliate pursuant to this paragraph if the acquisition would reduce the bank holding company's capital below the minimum level established by the Board for bank holding companies.

"(ii) A bank holding company that has acquired control of a securities affiliate pursuant to this paragraph shall not directly or indirectly make any additional equity investment in the securities affiliate unless it gives the Board prior written notice of the proposed investment and—

"(I) the Board issues a written statement of its intent not to disapprove the notice; or

"(II) the Board does not disapprove the notice within 30 days after the notice is filed.

"(iii) The Board may disapprove a notice filed under clause (ii) if the Board finds that the investment would reduce the bank holding company's capital below the minimum level established by the Board or would otherwise be unsafe or unsound or inconsistent with the bank holding company's obligation to serve as a source of strength to its subsidiary banks.

"(E) CAPITAL STANDARDS.—(i) In determining whether a bank holding company complies with the capital requirements or guidelines established by the Board for bank holding companies—

"(I) the bank holding company's capital and total assets shall each be reduced by an amount equal to the amount of the bank holding company's equity investment in any securities affiliate, and by an amount equal to the amount of any extensions of credit by the bank holding company to any securities affiliate that are considered capital for purposes of any capital requirement imposed on the securities affiliate pursuant to section 15(c)(3) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78o(c)(3)),

"(II) the assets and liabilities of the securities affiliate shall not be consolidated with those of the bank holding company, and

"(III) the bank holding company's total assets and total liabilities shall each be reduced by an amount equal to the amount of the bank holding company's extensions of credit to any securities affiliate, excluding extensions of credit described in subclause (I).

"(ii) Clause (i) of this subparagraph does not apply to the extent that the Board determines by order that an item described in that clause relates to activities that are not described in clause (i) or (ii) of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

"(F) LIMITATIONS ON SECURITIES AFFILIATES AND THEIR AFFILIATES.—

"(i) No bank or insured institution affiliated with a securities affiliate shall, directly or indirectly—

"(I) extend credit in any manner to the securities affiliate or a subsidiary thereof,

"(II) purchase for its own account financial assets of the securities affiliate or a subsidiary thereof,

"(III) issue a guarantee, acceptance, or letter of credit, including an endorsement or a standby letter of credit, for the benefit of the securities affiliate or a subsidiary thereof, or

"(IV) extend credit in any manner to any investment company advised by or the shares of which are distributed by the securities affiliate.

"(ii) Clause (i)(I) of this subparagraph does not apply to any extension of credit by a bank or insured institution made to acquire or sell any securities of the United States or its agencies or securities on which the principal and interest are fully guaranteed by the United States or its agencies if—

"(I) the extension of credit is to be repaid on the same calendar day,

"(II) the extension of credit is incidental to the clearing of transactions in those securities through that bank or insured institution, and

"(III) both the principal of and the interest on the extension of credit are fully secured by securities of the United States or its agencies or securities on which the principal and interest are fully guaranteed by the United States or its agencies.

"(iii) No bank or insured institution affiliated with a securities affiliate shall directly or indirectly extend credit, or issue or enter into a standby letter of credit, asset purchase agreement, indemnity, guarantee, insurance, or other facility, for the purpose of enhancing the marketability of a securities issue underwritten or distributed by the securities affiliate.

"(iv) No bank holding company or subsidiary thereof (other than a securities affiliate) shall knowingly extend or arrange for the extension of credit, directly or indirectly, secured by or for the purpose of purchasing any security while, or for 30 days after, that security is the subject of a distribution in which a securities affiliate of that bank holding company participates as an underwriter or a member of a selling group.

"(v) No bank or insured institution affiliated with a securities affiliate shall, directly or indirectly, extend credit to an issuer of securities underwritten by the securities affiliate for the purpose of paying the principal of those securities or interest or dividends on those securities. Nothing in this clause prohibits an extension of credit for a documented purpose (other than paying principal, interest, or dividends) if the timing, maturity, and other terms of the credit, taken as a whole, are substantially different from those of the underwritten securities.

"(vi)(I) No officer or director of a securities affiliate shall serve at the same time as an officer or director of any affiliated bank or insured institution.

"(II) Notwithstanding subclause (I) of this clause, an officer or director of a securities affiliate may serve at the same time as an officer or director of an affiliated bank or insured institution if the securities affiliate and the affiliated bank or insured institution are subsidiaries of a bank holding company that has total banking assets of not more than $500,000,000.

"(III) The dollar limitation in subclause (II) of this clause shall be adjusted annually after December 31, 1989, by the annual percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index as described in paragraph (8)(C) of this section.

"(IV) The Board may, by order or by regulation, grant exemptions from subclause (I) of this clause. In determining whether to grant such exemptions, the Board shall consider the size of the bank holding companies, banks, and securities affiliates involved, any burdens that may be imposed by subclause (I), the safety and soundness of the banks and securities affiliates, and other appropriate factors, including unfair competition in securities activities or the improper exchange of nonpublic customer information.

"(vii) Pursuant to regulations issued by the Securities and Exchange Commission, a securities affiliate shall prominently disclose in writing to each of its customers—

"(I) that the securities affiliate is not a bank or insured institution and is separate from any affiliated bank or insured institution; and

"(II) that securities sold, offered, or recommended by the securities affiliate are not deposits, are not insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, are not guaranteed by an affiliated bank or insured institution, and are not otherwise an obligation of such a bank or insured institution.

"(viii) No bank, insured institution, or subsidiary thereof shall express an opinion on the value of, or the advisability of purchasing or selling, securities underwritten, distributed, or dealt in by an affiliated securities affiliate unless the bank, insured institution, or subsidiary discloses to the customer that the securities affiliate is underwriting, distributing, or dealing in the securities.

"(ix) No bank, insured institution, or subsidiary thereof shall disclose to an affiliated securities affiliate, nor shall a securities affiliate disclose to an affiliated bank, insured institution, or subsidiary thereof, any nonpublic customer information (including an evaluation of the creditworthiness of an issuer or other customer of that bank, insured institution, subsidiary, or securities affiliate) without the consent of that customer.

"(x) A securities affiliate shall not underwrite or distribute securities secured by or representing an interest in mortgages or other obligations originated by an affiliated bank, insured institution, or subsidiary thereof unless those securities—

"(I) are rated by an unaffiliated, nationally recognized statistical rating organization;

"(II) are issued or guaranteed by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation, the Federal National Mortgage Association, or the Government National Mortgage Association; or

"(III) represent interests in securities described in subclause (II) of this clause;

"(xi) Each appropriate Federal banking agency and the Securities and Exchange Commission shall establish a program for—

"(I) enforcing compliance with this paragraph by banks or insured institutions or securities affiliates under its supervision; and

"(II) responding to any complaints from customers about inappropriate cross-marketing of securities products or inadequate disclosure.

"(xii) Nothing in this paragraph limits—

"(I) any authority of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, or the Securities and Exchange Commission; or

"(II) any disclosure or registration requirements under the securities laws, as defined in section 21(g) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78u(g)).

"(G) SECURITIES AFFILIATES APPROVED UNDER PARAGRAPH (8).—

"(i) Effective after the expiration of 180 days after the date of enactment of this paragraph, no bank holding company may engage in, or retain the shares of any company engaged in, activities of the type described in subparagraph (A)(i) of this paragraph on the basis of the Board's approval of an application under paragraph (8) of this subsection—

"(I) unless the bank holding company obtains the Board's approval to retain the shares of that company pursuant to this paragraph; or

"(II) except to the extent that those activities are specifically authorized by statute for a national bank and involve securities that are expressly described in that statute, or that a regulation promulgated by the Comptroller of the Currency pursuant to that statute before November 18, 1987, expressly describes as being authorized for a national bank to underwrite or deal in.

"(ii) The Board shall, after the date of enactment of this paragraph, disapprove any notice by a bank holding company under paragraph (8) of this subsection to engage in, or acquire the shares of a company engaged in, any activity that is described in subparagraph (A)(i), except to the extent that the activity is described in clause (i)(II) of this subparagraph.

"(H) ACTIVITIES PERMITTED FOR BANK AFFILIATES.—A bank holding company that acquires control of a securities affiliate under this paragraph shall not, after one year from the date of that acquisition, permit a bank or insured institution that it controls or any subsidiary thereof to engage, directly or indirectly, in the United States—

"(i) in activities described in subparagraph (A)(i) (except to the extent that those activities are described in subparagraph (G)(i)(II)); or

"(ii) in underwriting or distributing securities backed by or representing an interest in mortgages or other obligations originated or purchased by the bank or its affiliates.

"(I) COMPLIANCE WITH RISK-BASED CAPITAL STANDARDS.—

"(i) Notwithstanding subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, a securities affiliate shall not commence any of the following activities unless each of its affiliated banks is in compliance with any applicable risk-based capital standards issued by the appropriate Federal banking agency:

"(I) underwriting, distributing, or dealing in unsecured corporate debt securities that at the time of issuance have a maturity of one year or more; or

"(II) underwriting, distributing, or dealing in equity securities other than those issued by an investment company registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940.

"(ii) A bank is in compliance with the capital standards described in clause (i) if that bank is in compliance with a schedule for achieving compliance with those standards prescribed by the appropriate Federal banking agency.

"(J) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) a branch or agency of a foreign bank or a commercial lending company controlled by a foreign bank (as the terms 'agency', 'branch', 'commercial lending company', and 'foreign bank' are defined in section 1 of the International Banking Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3101)), shall be considered a bank;

"(ii) each shareholder of or participant in a company that controls a bank described in section 5169(b)(1) of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 27(b)(1)) or in a similar statute of any State, and each subsidiary of such a shareholder or participant, shall be treated as if it were a subsidiary of that company;

"(iii) the term 'appropriate Federal banking agency' means the agencies referred to in section 3(q) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813(q)) with respect to banks referred to in that section and the Federal Home Loan Bank Board (acting directly or through the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation) with respect to insured institutions;

"(iv) the terms 'deal in' and 'dealing in' do not include purchasing or selling securities for the account of another person; and

"(v) the term 'securities' does not include insurance and the term 'securities activities' does not include insurance activities.

"(K) PHASE-IN OF OR SEPARATE CONGRESSIONAL VOTE ON CERTAIN SECURITIES ACTIVITIES.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, a securities affiliate shall not—

"(i) engage before 180 days after the date of enactment of the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act of 1989, in underwriting, distributing, or dealing in securities issued by an investment company registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940; or

"(ii) engage in underwriting, distributing, or dealing in equity securities, other than those issued by an investment company registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940, except as authorized pursuant to a joint resolution pursuant to section 113 of the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act of 1989.".

SEC. 103. DEFINITION OF SECURITIES AFFILIATE.

Section 2 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(n) SECURITIES AFFILIATE.—The term 'securities affiliate' means any company that—

"(1) is engaged in the United States pursuant to section 4(c)(15)(A) of this Act in one or more of the activities described in that section; and

"(2) is registered as a broker or dealer under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.".

SEC. 104. NINETY-ONE DAY RULE FOR SECURITIES AFFILIATE APPLICATIONS.

(a) NINETY-ONE DAY RULE.—Section 4(c) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1843(c)) is amended by striking out "paragraph (8)" in the penultimate sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraph (15)".

(b) SUNSET PROVISION.—The penultimate sentence of section 4(c) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (as amended by this Act) is repealed, effective 4 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 105. EFFECT ON STATE LAWS PROHIBITING THE AFFILIATION OF BANKS AND SECURITIES COMPANIES.

Section 7 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1846) is amended by inserting before the final period the following: ", except that no State may prohibit the affiliation of a bank or bank holding company with a securities affiliate solely because the securities affiliate is engaged in activities described in clause (i) or (ii) of section 4(c)(15)(A) of this Act.".

SEC. 106. AMENDMENT TO THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Section 23B(b)(1)(B) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 371c-1(b)(1)(B)) is amended by inserting "and for 30 days thereafter" after "during the existence of any underwriting or selling syndicate".

SEC. 107. SECURITIES AFFILIATIONS OF FDIC-INSURED BANKS.

(a) SECURITIES AFFILIATIONS.—Section 18(j)(3) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1828(j)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) SECURITIES AFFILIATIONS.—

"(A) GENERAL RULE.—Except as provided in section 4(c)(15) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, an insured bank shall not be an affiliate of any company that directly or indirectly acts in the United States as an underwriter or dealer of any security, other than a security that a national bank is specifically authorized by statute to underwrite or deal in and—

"(i) that is expressly described in that statute; or

"(ii) that a regulation promulgated by the Comptroller of the Currency pursuant to that statute before November 18, 1987, expressly describes as being authorized for a national bank to underwrite or deal in.

"(B) EXCEPTIONS.—This paragraph does not apply to—

"(i) an insured bank that is described in subparagraph (D), (F), (H), or (I) of section 2(c)(2) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841(c)(2)); or

"(ii) a foreign bank, as defined in section 1(b)(7) of the International Banking Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3101(7)), solely because it has an insured branch in the United States.

"(C) GRANDFATHER PROVISION.—This paragraph does not prohibit—

"(i) the continuation of an affiliation that existed on March 5, 1987; or

"(ii) any affiliation by an insured bank that has an affiliation that would be prohibited if it were not covered by clause (i) of this subparagraph.

"(D) TRANSITION RULE.—An affiliation that becomes unlawful as a result of the enactment of the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act of 1989, may continue until the expiration of one year following the date of enactment of such Act.

"(E) ACTIVITIES CONDUCTED DIRECTLY BY INSURED BANK.—Nothing in this paragraph restricts an activity that is conducted directly by an insured bank and is subject to section 21 of the Banking Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 378).

"(F) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this paragraph—

"(i) The term 'affiliate' has the meaning given to that term in section 2(k) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841(k)).

"(ii) The term 'company' has the meaning given to that term in section 2(b) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841(b)).

"(iii) The term 'dealer' has the meaning given to that term in section 3(a)(5) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(5)).

"(iv)(I) Except as provided in subclause (II) of this clause or except in the case of a contract of insurance, the term 'security' has the meaning given to that term in section 3(a)(10) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(10)).

"(II) The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may by regulation exempt from the definition of 'security' a banking product that has been traditionally and customarily originated or handled by national banks (such as loan participations, mortgage notes, and certificates of deposit) if the exemption is consistent with the purposes of this paragraph and of section 4(c)(15) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956.

"(v) The term 'underwriter' has the meaning given to that term in section 2(11) of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77b(11)).".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Clause (i) of section 408(m)(1)(A) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730a(m)(1)(A)) is amended by inserting after "clause (iii) of this subparagraph," the following: "and in section 18(j)(3) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act,".

(c) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 18(j)(4)(A) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1828(j)(4)(A)) is amended by striking "or any provision of section 20 of the Banking Act of 1933" and inserting "or any provision of paragraph (3) or (6) of this subsection".

(d) LIMITATIONS ON CERTAIN ACTIVITIES INVOLVING MUNICIPAL REVENUE BONDS.—Section 18(j) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1828(j)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) LIMITATIONS ON CERTAIN ACTIVITIES INVOLVING CERTAIN MUNICIPAL SECURITIES.—

"(A) UNDERWRITING OR DISTRIBUTION BY AFFILIATE OF INSURED BANK.—No affiliate of an insured bank shall underwrite or distribute securities described in subparagraph (C) of this paragraph unless that insured bank, as well as any affiliated insured institution (as defined in section 408(a)(1) of the National Housing Act), complies with section 4(c)(15)(F)(iii) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 in the same manner and to the same extent as if the insured bank were a bank and the affiliate were a securities affiliate for purposes of section 4(c)(15)(F)(iii).

"(B) UNDERWRITING OR DISTRIBUTION BY INSURED BANK.—An insured bank that underwrites or distributes securities described in subparagraph (C) of this paragraph shall not take any action with respect to those securities that would violate subparagraph (A) of this paragraph if those securities were underwritten or distributed by an affiliate of the insured bank.

"(C) CERTAIN MUNICIPAL SECURITIES DESCRIBED.—Securities are described in this subparagraph for purposes of this paragraph if—

"(i) a national bank could underwrite those securities only pursuant to the sentence of paragraph Seventh of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 24) that refers to an obligation issued by or on behalf of or guaranteed by a State, territory, or possession of the United States, or any political subdivision thereof, the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any of the foregoing; and

"(ii) no State, territory, or possession of the United States, political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia pledges its full faith and credit for payment of the entire principal of and interest on the securities.

"(D) DEFINITION OF 'AFFILIATE'.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'affiliate' has the meaning given to that term in section 2(k) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841(k)).".

SEC. 108. AUTHORIZATION FOR NATIONAL BANKS TO UNDERWRITE MUNICIPAL REVENUE BONDS, SPONSOR UNIT INVESTMENT TRUSTS, AND DISTRIBUTE INVESTMENT COMPANY SECURITIES.

(a) AUTHORIZATION.—Paragraph Seventh of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 24) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"The limitations and restrictions contained in this paragraph as to dealing in, underwriting, and purchasing for its own account, securities shall not apply to an obligation issued by or on behalf of or guaranteed by a State, territory, or possession of the United States, or any political subdivision thereof, the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any of the foregoing. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, such limitations and restrictions shall apply to a private activity bond (as defined in section 141 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) unless—

"(1) a State, territory, or possession of the United States or political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, pledges its full faith and credit for payment of the entire principal of and interest on such bond; or

"(2) the interest on such bond is excluded from gross income under section 103(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, and the issuer, or the governmental unit on behalf of which such bond was issued, is the sole owner, for Federal income tax purposes, of the facility to be financed from the proceeds of such bond.

For purposes of the foregoing sentence, any bond described in section 1312(c)(2) of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 to which section 141(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 does not apply (by reason of section 1311, 1312, or 1313 of that Act), shall not be treated as a private activity bond.

"If the association is not an affiliate of a securities affiliate (as the terms 'affiliate' and 'securities affiliate' are defined in section 2 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841)), the limitations and restrictions contained in this paragraph as to dealing in, underwriting, and purchasing for its own account, securities shall not apply to—

"(1) the securities of unit investment trusts (as defined in section 4(2) of the Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a-4(2)) holding only securities that the association is specifically authorized by statute to underwrite and that are expressly described in that authorizing statute, or expressly described as being authorized for a national bank to underwrite in a regulation promulgated before November 18, 1987, by the Comptroller of the Currency pursuant to that authorizing statute, and

"(2) the distribution of securities issued by investment companies (as defined in section 3 of the Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a-3)) that are not sponsored, managed, or controlled by the association or any affiliate of the association.".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—The sixth sentence of paragraph Seventh of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (12 U.S.C. 24) is amended by striking out "or general obligations of any State or of any political subdivision thereof,".

SEC. 109. AMENDMENTS TO THE INTERNATIONAL BANKING ACT OF 1978.

(a) RESTRICTIONS ON UNITED STATES BANKING ACTIVITIES OF LARGE FOREIGN BANKS THAT ACQUIRE LARGE INVESTMENT BANKING ORGANIZATIONS WITH UNITED STATES OFFICES.—Section 8 of the International Banking Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3106) is amended by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (g) and by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) No foreign bank or foreign company described in paragraph (2) of this subsection shall—

"(A) acquire or retain control of a bank,

"(B) establish or maintain a branch or agency in a State, or

"(C) acquire or retain control of a commercial lending company organized under State law.

"(2) A foreign bank or foreign company controlling a foreign bank is described in this paragraph for purposes of paragraph (1) if—

"(A) the foreign bank or foreign company became an affiliate of an investment banking organization (as that term is used in section 4(c)(15)(C)(i)(II) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956) after the date of enactment of the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act of 1989;

"(B) section 4(c)(15)(C) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 would have required the Board to disapprove the transaction that resulted in the affiliation if the foreign bank or foreign company had been a bank holding company at the time of the transaction;

"(C) the affiliation has not been terminated; and

"(D) the investment banking organization maintains an office or subsidiary in a State.".

(b) RESTRICTIONS ON UNITED STATES INVESTMENT BANKING ACTIVITIES OF LARGE FOREIGN INVESTMENT BANKING ORGANIZATIONS THAT ACQUIRE LARGE BANK HOLDING COMPANIES OR BANKS.—Section 8 of the International Banking Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3106) is amended by inserting after subsection (e) (as added by subsection (a)) the following:

"(f)(1) No foreign investment banking organization (including any of its subsidiaries or affiliates) described in paragraph (2) shall acquire or retain control of a securities affiliate.

"(2) A foreign investment banking organization (including any of its subsidiaries or affiliates) is described in this paragraph for the purposes of paragraph (1) if—

"(A) the foreign investment banking organization became an affiliate of a bank holding company or bank after the date of enactment of the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act of 1989;

"(B) section 4(c)(15)(C) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 would have required the Board to disapprove the transaction that resulted in the affiliation if the foreign investment banking organization had been required to file an application or notice under section 4(c)(15); and

"(C) the affiliation has not been terminated.".

(c) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 1(b)(13) of the International Banking Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3101(13)) is amended by inserting "affiliate," after "(13) the terms" and by inserting "securities affiliate" after "control,".

SEC. 110. DIVERSIFIED FINANCIAL HOLDING COMPANIES.

(a) DEFINITION.—Section 2 of the Bank Holding Company Act (12 U.S.C. 1841) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(o) DIVERSIFIED FINANCIAL HOLDING COMPANY.—For purposes of this Act, the term 'diversified financial holding company' means a company that directly or indirectly controls any bank and that is described in each of the following paragraphs:

"(1) ENGAGES ONLY IN FINANCIAL ACTIVITIES.—The company engages only in activities that are—

"(A) permissible for bank holding companies under section 4 of this Act (12 U.S.C. 1843); or

"(B) permissible under section 4(i)(4).

"(2) 80-PERCENT TEST.—On average during the preceding calendar year, the company devoted 80 percent or more of its consolidated assets to activities that are permissible under paragraph (8), (13), (14), or (15) of section 4(c) of this Act, excluding—

"(A) activities conducted by any entity described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (3) of this subsection; and

"(B) insurance activities that are permissible under section 4(c)(13) but not permissible under section 4(j), to the extent that those activities exceed 10 percent of the company's consolidated assets.

"(3) LIMIT ON FDIC-INSURED BANKS, FSLIC-INSURED INSTITUTIONS, AND SUBSIDIARIES THEREOF AS PERCENTAGE OF ASSETS.—On average during the preceding calendar year, 20 percent or less of the company's consolidated assets consisted of the following entities in aggregate:

"(A) insured banks (as defined in section 3(h) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813(h)) and any subsidiaries thereof; and

"(B) insured institutions and any subsidiaries thereof.

"(4) GLOBAL LIMIT ON DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS AND THEIR SUBSIDIARIES AS PERCENTAGE OF ASSETS.—On average during the preceding calendar year, 40 percent or less of the company's consolidated assets consisted of the following entities in aggregate:

"(A) insured banks and uninsured banks (as defined in section 3(h) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813(h)) and any subsidiaries thereof;

"(B) insured institutions and any subsidiaries thereof, and uninsured institutions (as defined in section 408(a)(1)(B) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730a(a)(1)(B)) and any subsidiaries thereof;

"(C) foreign banks (as defined in section 1(b)(7) of the International Banking Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3101(7)) and any subsidiaries thereof; and

"(D) other depository institutions, whether or not in the United States, and any subsidiaries thereof.

"(5) ELECTION.—The company has filed with the Board a written notice of its intent to be treated as a diversified financial holding company.".

(b) IN GENERAL.—Section 4 of the Bank Holding Company Act (12 U.S.C. 1843) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) DIVERSIFIED FINANCIAL HOLDING COMPANIES.—

"(1) STATUS.—A diversified financial holding company shall not be considered a bank holding company.

"(2) APPLICABLE LAW.—Except as provided in paragraph (4) or (6) of this subsection, a diversified financial holding company shall be subject to any provision of the United States Code relating to bank holding companies in the same manner and to the same extent as if it were a bank holding company.

"(3) INTERMEDIATE HOLDING COMPANIES.—

"(A) A subsidiary of a diversified financial holding company is not a bank holding company because it controls a bank.

"(B) If a subsidiary of a diversified financial holding company controls a bank, that subsidiary shall be subject to any provision of the United States Code relating to bank holding companies in the same manner and to the same extent as if it were a bank holding company, except to the extent that the diversified financial holding company is not subject to that provision.

"(4) AUTHORITY TO CONTINUE TO ENGAGE IN NONCONFORMING FINANCIAL ACTIVITIES.—Notwithstanding subsection (a) of this section, a diversified financial holding company may engage in, or acquire or retain direct or indirect ownership or control of shares of any company engaged in, any activity described in paragraph (5) of this subsection (other than an activity described in subsection (c)(15)(A)(i) of this section) in which the diversified financial holding company was lawfully engaged in the United States, directly or through a subsidiary, as of February 1, 1989.

"(5) DEFINITION OF FINANCIAL ACTIVITIES.—The following activities are described in this paragraph for purposes of paragraph (4) of this subsection:

"(A) insurance underwriting activities;

"(B) insurance agency activities;

"(C) real estate brokerage activities;

"(D) real estate investment and development activities;

"(E) travel agency activities; and

"(F) any other activities that the Board has determined to be financial.

"(6) EXEMPTION FROM EXAMINATION AND CAPITAL REQUIREMENTS.—

"(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, a diversified financial holding company, and any subsidiary (other than a bank) of that bank holding company, shall not be subject to inspection or examination or to reporting or capital requirements established by the Board under this Act or the International Lending Supervision Act of 1983.

"(B) The Board may examine or require reports of any company that has filed a notice under section 2(o)(5) of this Act, and any nonbank subsidiary thereof, in order to—

"(i) determine whether that company is a diversified financial holding company;

"(ii) assure compliance by that company or nonbank subsidiary with the provisions of this Act, the Bank Holding Company Act Amendments of 1970 (12 U.S.C. 1972), and sections 23A and 23B of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 371c, 371c-1); or

"(iii) assure that the safety and soundness of that company's subsidiary banks are not threatened by the activities or condition of that company or its nonbank subsidiaries whenever the Board determines that emergency conditions exist requiring such assurance.

"(7) RESTRICTIONS ON JOINT MARKETING.—No subsidiary bank of a diversified financial holding company shall—

"(A) offer or market products or services of an affiliate that are not permissible for bank holding companies to provide under subsection (c)(8) or (c)(15) of this section, or

"(B) permit its products or services to be offered or marketed in connection with products or services of an affiliate that are not permissible for bank holding companies to provide under subsection (c)(8) or (c)(15).

"(8) RESTRICTIONS ON LENDING TO AFFILIATES ENGAGED IN NONCONFORMING ACTIVITIES.—If a company engages in any activity pursuant to paragraph (4) of this subsection, subsection (c)(15)(F)(i) of this section shall apply with respect to that company in the same manner and to the same extent as if the company were a securities affiliate.

"(9) DIVESTITURE OF SUBSIDIARY BANKS.—

"(A) If a company that has filed a notice under section 2(o)(5) of this Act fails to maintain the capital of each of its subsidiary banks at or above the level established for that bank by the appropriate Federal banking agency, the Board shall notify the company of the capital deficiency and provide the company 30 days in which to restore the capital of the bank to the level required by the appropriate Federal banking agency.

"(B) If the Board determines that the company is unable to restore the capital of its subsidiary bank to the required level, the Board may issue an order requiring the company to terminate its ownership or control of the bank within 180 days of the date of the order.".

SEC. 111. STUDY ON HARMONIZING THE REGULATION OF BANKING AND SECURITIES ORGANIZATIONS.

(a) FINDING.—The Congress hereby finds that authorization for banks to be affiliated with securities firms pursuant to section 102 of this Act and the provision of banking-type services by firms affiliated with securities firms calls for steps to be taken toward the promotion of regulatory equity between such firms. Among the most important tasks necessary to achieve this goal are the development and harmonization of capital adequacy and financial condition reporting requirements applicable to such firms. To that end, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"), the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission shall review and coordinate their respective rules applicable to capital adequacy, reporting requirements, and transactions with affiliates on an ongoing basis in order to move in an orderly fashion toward greater compatibility and consistency.

(b) STUDY.—The agencies referred to in subsection (a) shall study the issues set forth below and prepare a joint report to the Congress within one year of the enactment of this Act setting forth the results of their study and any recommendations they may have for implementing their conclusions. The issues to be studied are—

(1) the advisability and effect of requiring the consolidated application of prudential standards and reports of financial condition on companies controlling banks or securities firms;

(2) the appropriate techniques, to the extent necessary, for supervision of financial interrelationships of banks and securities firms with their affiliates;

(3) the direction of efforts to achieve international harmony and convergence of capital adequacy and financial condition reporting standards for banks, securities firms, and companies controlling banks and securities firms;

(4) the effect of the conduct of financial activities across national borders on the provision of securities services within the United States and on the supervision of such services within the United States;

(5) the advisability of establishing a permanent international framework for developing and implementing global policies to better harmonize financial market regulation, including capital adequacy standards; registration and reporting standards for banks and securities firms (including associated activities in futures markets), and companies controlling banks and securities firms; direct trading, clearing, and funds transfer mechanisms; routine exchange of information to facilitate international market surveillance of capital positions, trading activity, intercompany transfers, and potential abusive practices; exchange of information to facilitate the investigation of individual enforcement cases; dealing with international market emergencies; and approval of new products and services;

(6) the nature and techniques used in the supervision of banks, securities firms, and companies controlling banks and securities firms; and

(7) the impact of financial services competition from firms that are neither banks nor securities firms.

(c) CONSULTATION.—With due regard for the existing agreement and understandings between bank supervisors on an international level regarding capital adequacy of banks, the agencies referred to in subsection (a) on an ongoing basis shall—

(1) each review their respective rules applicable to capital adequacy and reporting of financial condition;

(2) develop proposed revisions to those rules that would move toward the harmonization of such rules;

(3) provide such proposed revisions to the other for comment and discussion; and

(4) discuss in detail, in the report required by subsection (d), any proposed revisions on which the agencies disagree.

(d) REPORTING.—No later than September 30 of each year, the agencies referred to in subsection (a) shall submit a joint annual report to Congress covering their progress toward the goals set forth in subsection (a) and recommending amendments to law, if any, that they believe would be necessary or advisable in order to attain those goals.

SEC. 112. STUDY OF THE NATIONAL PAYMENTS SYSTEM.

(a) FINDING.—It is the finding of Congress that the continued smooth and efficient functioning of the large-dollar payments system of the United States, including systems that provide for the delivery of securities against payment, is essential to the growth and stability of the economy of the United States and other nations and that the recent growth in the volume of payments due to new technology and changes in the financial services industry suggest that consideration of the mechanism by which large-dollar payments in the United States are made is necessary.

(b) STUDY.—The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System is hereby directed to study and prepare a report on the steps necessary to ensure the integrity and reliability of large-dollar payments systems in the United States, including the current status of the mechanism by which large-dollar payments are made in the United States and the steps that appear necessary or advisable to strengthen the reliability and safety and soundness of that mechanism over time. Such report shall be presented to Congress within one year of the passage of this Act.

(c) CONSULTATION.—The Board is directed to consult with the providers of large-dollar payment services, the users of such services, the vendors of equipment used in the provisions of such services, and the regulators of all of the above in conducting the study.

SEC. 113. CONGRESSIONAL VOTE ON WHETHER TO PERMIT SECURITIES AFFILIATES TO UNDERWRITE EQUITY SECURITIES.

(a) DEFINITION AND SUBMISSION OF JOINT RESOLUTION.—

(1) JOINT RESOLUTION DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, a joint resolution means a joint resolution introduced pursuant to the procedures described in this section—

(A) the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows:

"That section 4(c)(15)(K) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 is repealed.";

(B) which does not have a preamble; and

(C) the title of which is "Joint Resolution pursuant to the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act of 1989".

(2) SUBMISSION TO THE CONGRESS.—On the first day of the first session of the 102d Congress, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit the joint resolution to the Congress, together with a specific legislative recommendation on whether or not securities affiliates should be permitted to underwrite, distribute, and deal in equity securities. The recommendation shall be prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury in consultation with the Comptroller General of the United States, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Comptroller of the Currency, and shall be limited solely to the issue of whether the powers prohibited under section 4(c)(15)(K)(ii) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 shall be authorized.

(b) PROCEDURE FOR HANDLING JOINT RESOLUTION.—

(1) Within 30 days of the date of submission by the Secretary of the Treasury, such joint resolution as defined in subsection (a) of this section shall be introduced (by request) in the House by the Speaker of the House for himself and the minority leader of the House or by Members of the House designated by the Speaker and the minority leader, and shall be introduced (by request) by the majority leader of the Senate for himself and the minority leader of the Senate or by Members of the Senate designated by the majority leader and the minority leader.

(2) Such joint resolution introduced in the House of Representatives shall be referred to the appropriate Committee or Committees, and such joint resolution introduced in the Senate shall be referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

(3) If any Committee of either House to which the joint resolution has been referred has not reported the joint resolution at the end of 30 days after its referral, the Committee shall be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution or of any other joint resolution introduced with respect to the same matter.

(4) Not later than 90 calendar days after the first day of session of the 102d Congress, it shall be in order to move to proceed to the consideration of such joint resolution.

(5)(A) A motion in the House of Representatives to proceed to the consideration of such joint resolution shall be highly privileged and not debatable. An amendment to the motion shall not be in order, nor shall it be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

(B) Debate in the House of Representatives on such joint resolution shall be limited to not more than 20 hours, which shall be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the joint resolution. A motion to further limit debate shall not be debatable. No amendment to, or motion to recommit, the joint resolution shall be in order. It shall not be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution is agreed to or disagreed to.

(C) Motions to postpone made in the House of Representatives with respect to the consideration of such joint resolution and motions to proceed to the consideration of other business shall be decided without debate.

(D) All appeals from the decisions of the Chair relating to the application of the Rules of the House of Representatives to the procedure relating to such joint resolution shall be decided without debate.

(E) Except to the extent specifically provided in the preceding provisions of this paragraph, consideration of such joint resolution in the House of Representatives shall be governed by the Rules of the House of Representatives applicable to other joint resolutions in similar circumstances.

(6)(A) A motion in the Senate to proceed to the consideration of such joint resolution shall be privileged. An amendment to the motion shall not be in order, nor shall it be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

(B) Debate in the Senate on such joint resolution and on all debatable motions and appeals in connection therewith shall be limited to not more than 20 hours, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the majority leader and the minority leader or their designees.

(C) Debate in the Senate on any debatable motion or appeal in connection with such joint resolution shall be limited to not more than one hour, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the mover and the manager of such joint resolution, except that in the event the manager of the joint resolution is in favor of any such motion or appeal, the time in opposition shall be controlled by the minority leader or his designee. Such leaders, or either of them, may, from time under their control on the passage of such joint resolution, allot additional time to any Senator during the consideration of any debatable motion or appeal.

(D) A motion in the Senate to further limit debate on a resolution, debatable motion, or appeal is not debatable. No amendment to, or motion to recommit, the joint resolution is in order in the Senate.

(7) In the case of a joint resolution described in subsection (a), if prior to the passage by one House of a joint resolution of that House, that House received the joint resolution with respect to the same matter from the other House, then—

(A) the procedure in that House shall be the same as if the joint resolution had been received from the other House; but

(B) the vote on final passage shall be on the joint resolution of the other House.

(8) The vote on passage of the joint resolution in each House shall occur on or before April 1, 1991.

TITLE II—EXPEDITED PROCEDURES

SEC. 201. EXPEDITED PROCEDURES FOR FORMING A BANK HOLDING COMPANY.

Section 3(a) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1842(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "or (B)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(B)",

(2) by inserting before the period at the end of the second sentence the following: "; or (C) with 30 days prior notification to the Board, the acquisition by a company of control of a bank in a reorganization in which a person or group of persons exchange their shares of the bank for shares of a newly formed bank holding company and receive, after the reorganization, substantially the same proportional share interest in the holding company as they held in the bank except for changes in shareholders' interests resulting from the exercise of dissenting shareholders' rights under State or Federal law if, immediately following the acquisition, the bank holding company meets the capital and other financial standards prescribed by the Board by regulation for such a bank holding company and the holding company does not engage in any activities other than those of banking or managing and controlling banks. In promulgating regulations pursuant to this subsection, the Board shall not require more capital for the subsidiary bank immediately following the reorganization than is required for a similarly sized bank that is not a subsidiary of a bank holding company".

SEC. 202. EXEMPTION OF CERTAIN HOLDING COMPANY FORMATIONS FROM REGISTRATION UNDER THE SECURITIES ACT OF 1933.

Section 4 of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77d) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) transactions involving offers or sales of equity securities, in connection with the acquisition of a bank by a company under section 3(a) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1842(a)), if the acquisition occurs solely as part of a reorganization in which a person or group of persons exchange their shares of a bank for shares of a newly formed bank holding company and receive, after that reorganization, substantially the same proportional share interests in the bank holding company as they held in the bank, except for changes in shareholders' interests resulting from the exercise of dissenting shareholders' rights under State or Federal law.".

SEC. 203. EXPEDITED PROCEDURES FOR BANK HOLDING COMPANIES TO SEEK APPROVAL TO ENGAGE IN NONBANKING ACTIVITIES.

Paragraph (8) of section 4(c) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1843(c)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraphs (C), (D), and (E) as subclauses (I) and (II), respectively;

(2) by redesignating subparagraphs (A) through (G), and any cross references thereto as clauses (i) through (vii), respectively; and

(3) by striking out all that precedes "purposes of this subsection it is not" and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(8)(A) ACTIVITIES CLOSELY RELATED TO BANKING.—In accordance with the limitations and requirements contained in subparagraphs (B) and (C) of this paragraph, shares of any company whose activities the Board has determined (by order or regulation) to be so closely related to banking or managing or controlling banks as to be a proper incident thereto, after taking into account technological or other innovations in the provision of banking or banking-related services.

"(B) NOTICE REQUIREMENTS.—

"(i) No bank holding company shall engage in any activity or acquire the shares of a company pursuant to this paragraph, either de novo or by an acquisition in whole or in part of a going concern, unless the Board has been given 60 days prior written notice of that proposal and, within that period, the Board has not issued an order—

"(I) disapproving the proposal, or

"(II) extending the time period in accordance with clause (iii) below.

"(ii)(I) An acquisition may be made prior to the expiration of the disapproval period if the Board issues a written statement of its intent not to disapprove the proposal.

"(II) The Board shall publish in the Federal Register notice of receipt of a notice under this paragraph involving insurance and provide a reasonable period for public comment. The Board shall issue an order involving any such notice.

"(III) No notice under this paragraph is required for a bank holding company to establish de novo an office to engage in any activity previously authorized for that bank holding company under this paragraph or to change the location of an office engaged in that activity.

"(iii) The notice submitted to the Board shall contain such information as the Board shall prescribe by regulation or by specific request in connection with a particular notice, except that the Board may require only such information as may be relevant to the nature and scope of the proposed activity and to the Board's evaluation of the notice under the criteria specified in clause (iv). If the Board requires additional relevant information beyond that provided in the notice, the Board may by order extend the time period provided in clause (i) of this subparagraph until it has received that information, and the activity that is the subject of the notice may be commenced within 60 days of the date of that receipt unless the Board issues a disapproval order as provided in clause (i). Such an extension order is reviewable under section 9 of this Act.

"(iv) In determining whether to disapprove a notice under this paragraph, the Board shall consider whether the performance of the activity described in the notice by a bank holding company or subsidiary thereof can reasonably be expected to produce benefits to the public, such as greater convenience, increased competition, or gains in efficiency, that outweigh possible adverse effects, such as undue concentration of resources, decreased or unfair competition, conflicts of interest, or unsound banking practices. In orders and regulations under this paragraph, the Board may differentiate between activities commenced de novo and activities commenced by the acquisition, in whole or in part, of a going concern.

"(v) The Board shall by order set forth the reasons for any disapproval or determination not to disapprove a notice under this paragraph.

"(C) INSURANCE ACTIVITIES NOT CLOSELY RELATED TO BANKING.—For".

SEC. 204. REDUCTION OF POST-APPROVAL WAITING PERIOD FOR BANK HOLDING COMPANY ACQUISITIONS.

Section 11(b)(1) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1849(b)(1)) is amended by adding before the period at the end of the fourth sentence thereof the following: "or if no adverse comment has been received regarding section 4(c)(8)(C) or section 4(j) of this Act, such shorter period of time as may be prescribed by the Board with the concurrence of the Attorney General, but in no event less than 5 days".

SEC. 205. REDUCTION OF POST-APPROVAL WAITING PERIOD FOR BANK MERGERS.

Section 18(c)(6) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1828(c)(6)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the last sentence thereof the following: "or such shorter period of time as may be prescribed by the agency with the concurrence of the Attorney General, but in no event less than 5 days".

SEC. 206. BANKERS' BANKS.

(a) BANKERS' BANKS AND BANK HOLDING COMPANIES.—

(1) Paragraph Seventh of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 24) is amended by inserting "or their holding companies" after "is owned exclusively (except to the extent directors qualifying shares are required by law) by depository institutions".

(2) Section 5169 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 27) is amended by inserting—

(A) ", directly or through a holding company," after "which is owned", and

(B) "or their holding companies" after "other depository institutions" each place it appears in paragraph (b)(1).

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT ON BANKERS' BANKS AND DEPOSIT INSURANCE.—Section 3(e) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1842(e)) is amended by striking "bank described in the last sentence of section 2(c)" and inserting "a bankers' bank as described in section 5169 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 27)".

(c) LIMIT ON LOANS SECURED BY SECURITIES.—Section 11(m) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 248(m)) is amended by striking "10 percentum" in each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "15 percent".

TITLE III—BROKERS AND DEALERS

SEC. 301. DEFINITION OF BROKER.

Section 3(a)(4) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(4)) is amended to read as follows:

"(4) 'BROKER'.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'broker' means any person engaged in the business of effecting transactions in securities for the account of others.

"(B) EXCLUSION OF BANKS.—Such term does not include a bank unless the bank publicly solicits such business or is compensated for such business by the payment of commissions or similar remuneration based on effecting transactions in securities (excluding fees calculated as a percentage of assets under management) in excess of the bank's incremental costs directly attributable to effecting such transactions (hereinafter referred to as 'incentive compensation').

"(C) BANK ACTIVITIES.—A bank shall not be deemed to be a 'broker' because it engages in one or more of the following activities:

"(i) Enters into a contractual or other arrangement with a broker or dealer registered under this title pursuant to which the broker or dealer will offer brokerage services on or off the premises of the bank if—

"(I) such broker or dealer is clearly identified as the person performing the brokerage services;

"(II) bank employees perform only clerical or ministerial functions in connection with brokerage transactions unless such employees are qualified as registered representatives pursuant to the requirements of a self-regulatory organization;

"(III) bank employees do not receive incentive compensation for any brokerage activities unless such employees are qualified as registered representatives pursuant to the requirements of a self-regulatory organization; and

"(IV) such services are provided by the broker or dealer on a basis in which all customers are fully disclosed.

"(ii) Engages in trust activities (including effecting transactions in the course of such trust activities) permissible for national banks under the first section of the Act of September 28, 1962 (12 U.S.C. 92a) or for State banks under relevant State trust statutes or law unless the bank—

"(I) publicly solicits brokerage business other than by advertising, in conjunction with advertising its other trust activities, that it effects transactions in securities, and

"(II) receives incentive compensation.

This clause does not apply to securities safekeeping, self-directed individual retirement accounts, or managed agency or other functionally equivalent accounts of a bank.

"(iii) Effects transactions in exempted securities, other than municipal securities, or in commercial paper, bankers' acceptances, or commercial bills.

"(iv) Effects transactions in municipal securities and does not have a securities affiliate as provided in section 4(c)(15) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956.

"(v) Effects transactions as part of any bonus, profit-sharing, pension, retirement, thrift, savings, incentive, stock purchase, stock ownership, stock appreciation, stock option, dividend reinvestment, or similar plan for employees or shareholders of an issuer or its subsidiaries.

"(vi) Effects transactions as part of a program for the investment or reinvestment of bank deposit funds into any no-load open-end investment company registered pursuant to the Investment Company Act of 1940 that attempts to maintain a constant net asset value per share and has an investment policy calling for investment of at least 80 percent of its assets in debt securities maturing in 13 months or less.

"(vii) Effects transactions for the account of any affiliate of the bank, as the term 'affiliate' is defined in section 2 of the Banking Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 221a), treating all banks as member banks for purposes of such definition.

"(viii) Effects sales (I) as part of a primary offering of securities by an issuer, not involving a public offering, pursuant to sections 3(b), 4(2), or 4(6) of the Securities Act of 1933 and the rules and regulations thereunder, and (II) exclusively to: a bank as defined in section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933 whether acting in its individual or fiduciary capacity; an insurance company as defined in section 2(13) of the Securities Act of 1933; an investment company registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940 or a business development company as defined in section 2(a)(48) of that Act; a Small Business Investment Company licensed by the Small Business Administration; an insured institution, as defined in section 401 of the National Housing Act; an employee benefit plan within the meaning of title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, if the investment decision is made by a plan fiduciary, as defined in section 3(21) of such Act, that is a bank as defined in section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933, an insurance company as defined in section 2(17) of the Investment Company Act of 1940, or an investment adviser registered under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, or if the employee benefit plan has total assets in excess of $5,000,000; an employee benefit plan as defined in section 3 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, established and maintained by a State, its political subdivisions, or any agency or instrumentality of a State or its political subdivisions exclusively for the benefit of its employees or their beneficiaries that is governed by fiduciary principles comparable to those contained in such Act, if (i) the plan has total assets in excess of $25,000,000, and (ii) investment decisions for the plan are made by a plan fiduciary, as defined in section 3(21) of such Act, that is a bank, as defined in section 3(a)(2) of the Securities Act of 1933, an insurance company as defined in section 2(17) of the Investment Company Act of 1940, or an investment adviser registered under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940; a corporation with total assets in excess of $50,000,000 and net worth in excess of $5,000,000, as reflected on financial statements prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles; an organization described in section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code with total assets in excess of $5,000,000; a foreign bank, broker, dealer, insurance company, or government or government agency; or a natural person with a net worth exceeding $5,000,000. The dollar limitations in this clause shall be adjusted annually after December 31, 1989, by the annual percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"(ix) Effects fewer than 1,000 transactions per year in securities other than transactions referenced in clauses (i) through (viii) of this subparagraph, if the bank does not have a subsidiary or affiliate registered as a broker or dealer under section 15 of this title.".

SEC. 302. DEFINITION OF DEALER.

Section 3(a)(5) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(5)) is amended to read as follows:

"(5) 'DEALER'.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'dealer' means any person engaged in the business of buying and selling securities for his own account through a broker or otherwise.

"(B) EXCEPTIONS.—Such term does not include—

"(i) any person insofar as that person buys or sells securities for his own account, either individually or in some fiduciary capacity, but not as a part of a regular business; or

"(ii) any bank insofar as the bank (I) buys and sells commercial paper, bankers' acceptances, or commercial bills, or exempted securities other than municipal securities; (II) buys and sells municipal securities and does not have a securities affiliate as provided in section 4(c)(15) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956; (III) engages in trust or fiduciary activities (including buying and selling securities for investment purposes in the course of such trust or fiduciary activities); or (IV) engages in the issuance or sale through a grantor trust or otherwise of securities backed by or representing an interest in obligations (other than securities of which the bank is not the issuer) originated or purchased by the bank, its affiliates, or its subsidiaries.".

SEC. 303. POWER TO EXEMPT FROM THE DEFINITIONS OF BROKER AND DEALER.

Section 3 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(e) The Commission, by rule, regulation, or order, upon its own motion or upon application, may conditionally or unconditionally exempt any person or class of persons from the definitions of 'broker' or 'dealer', if the Commission finds that such exemption is consistent with the public interest, the protection of investors, or the purposes of this title.".

SEC. 304. REQUIREMENT THAT BANKS FALLING WITHIN THE DEFINITIONS OF BROKER OR DEALER PLACE THEIR SECURITIES ACTIVITIES IN A SEPARATE CORPORATE ENTITY.

Section 15(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) It shall be unlawful for any broker or dealer that is either a person other than a natural person or a natural person not associated with a broker or dealer that is a person other than a natural person (other than such a broker or dealer whose business is exclusively intrastate and who does not make use of any facility of a national securities exchange) to make use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce to effect any transactions in, or to induce or attempt to induce the purchase or sale of, any security (other than an exempted security or commercial paper, bankers' acceptances, or commercial bills) unless such broker or dealer is registered in accordance with subsection (b) of this section.

"(2) It shall be unlawful for any bank to act as a broker or dealer, except in the course of an exclusively intrastate business. This section shall not preclude a subsidiary of a bank or an affiliate of a bank holding company, other than a bank, as those terms are defined in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, that is registered in accordance with subsection (b) of this section from acting as a broker or dealer to any extent otherwise permissible by law.

"(3) The Commission, by rule or order, as it deems consistent with the public interest and the protection of investors, may conditionally or unconditionally exempt from paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection any broker or dealer or class of brokers or dealers specified in such rule or order.".

SEC. 305. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This title shall take effect upon the expiration of 270 days after the date of its enactment.

TITLE IV—BANK INVESTMENT COMPANY ACTIVITIES

SEC. 401. CUSTODY OF INVESTMENT COMPANY ASSETS BY AFFILIATED BANKS.

(a) MANAGEMENT COMPANIES.—Section 17(f) of the Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a-17(f)) is amended by striking "trusts" the first place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "trusts, but, where any such bank or an affiliated person thereof is an affiliated person, promoter, or sponsor of, or principal underwriter for, such registered company, only in accordance with such rules and regulations or orders as the Commission may from time to time prescribe for the protection of investors, after consulting in writing with the appropriate Federal banking agency as defined in section 3(q) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813(q))".

(b) UNIT INVESTMENT TRUSTS.—Section 26(a)(1) of the Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a-26(a)(1)) is amended by inserting after "bank" the following: "not affiliated with such underwriter or depositor, or where such bank is so affiliated, only in accordance with such rules and regulations or orders as the Commission may from time to time prescribe for the protection of investors after consulting in writing with the appropriate Federal banking agency as defined in section 3(q) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813(q))".

SEC. 402. AFFILIATED TRANSACTIONS.

Section 10(f) of the Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a-10(f)) is amended by—

(1) inserting "(A)" immediately before "a principal underwriter"; and

(2) inserting ", or (B) the proceeds of which will be used to retire an indebtedness owed to a bank where the bank or an affiliated person thereof is an affiliated person, promoter, or sponsor of, or principal underwriter for, such registered company" after "for the issuer".

SEC. 403. BORROWING FROM AN AFFILIATED BANK.

Section 18(f) of the Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a-18(f)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(3) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection, it shall be unlawful for any registered open-end company to borrow from any bank if such bank or any affiliated person thereof is an affiliated person, promoter, or sponsor of, or principal underwriter for, such company, except that the Commission may, by rules and regulations or order, permit such borrowing which the Commission finds to be in the public interest and consistent with the protection of investors.".

SEC. 404. INDEPENDENT DIRECTORS.

(a) INTERESTED PERSON.—Section 2(a)(19)(A)(v) of the Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a-2(a)(19)(A)(v)) is amended by striking out "1934 or any affiliated person of such a broker or dealer, and" and inserting in lieu thereof "1934 or any person that, at any time during the preceding 6 months, has acted as custodian or transfer agent or has executed any portfolio transactions for, engaged in any principal transactions with, or loaned money to, the investment company, or any other investment company having the same investment adviser, principal underwriter, sponsor, or promoter, or any affiliated person of such a broker, dealer, or person, and".

(b) AFFILIATION OF DIRECTORS.—Section 10(c) of the Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a-10(c)) is amended by striking "bank, except" and inserting in lieu thereof "bank and its subsidiaries or any one bank holding company and its affiliates and subsidiaries, as those terms are defined in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, except".

(c) The provisions of subsection (a) of this section shall become effective after one year following the date of enactment of this title.

SEC. 405. ADDITIONAL SEC DISCLOSURE AUTHORITY.

Section 35(a) of the Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a-35(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 35. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, in issuing or selling any security of which a registered investment company is the issuer, to represent or imply in any manner whatsoever that such security or company has been guaranteed, sponsored, recommended, or approved by the United States or any agency or officer thereof or has been insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation or is guaranteed by or is otherwise an obligation of any bank or insured institution. If a bank holding company, bank, or separately identifiable division or department of a bank, or any affiliate or subsidiary thereof, is an investment adviser, organizer, sponsor, promoter, principal underwriter or an affiliated person of a registered investment company, or a bank or an affiliated person of a bank is offering or selling securities of a registered investment company, or the name of an investment company is that of, or similar to that of, a bank, pursuant to regulations adopted by the Commission, after consultation in writing with the appropriate Federal banking agencies, as defined in section 3(q) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813(q)), any person in issuing or selling securities of such investment company may be required to disclose prominently that the investment company and any security issued by it is not insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, is not guaranteed by an affiliated bank or insured institution, and is not otherwise an obligation of such a bank or insured institution.".

SEC. 406. DEFINITION OF BROKER.

Section 2(a)(6) of the Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a-2(a)(6)) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) 'Broker' has the same meaning as in the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, but does not include any person solely by reason of the fact that such person is an underwriter for one or more investment companies.".

SEC. 407. DEFINITION OF DEALER.

Section 2(a)(11) of the Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a-2(a)(11)) is amended to read as follows:

"(11) 'Dealer' has the same meaning as in the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, but does not include an insurance company or investment company.".

SEC. 408. REMOVAL OF THE EXCLUSION FROM THE DEFINITION OF INVESTMENT ADVISER FOR BANKS THAT ADVISE INVESTMENT COMPANIES.

Section 202(a)(11) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80b-2(a)(11)) is amended—

(1) by striking "investment company" and inserting "investment company, except that the term 'investment adviser' includes any bank or bank holding company to the extent that such bank or bank holding company acts as an investment adviser to a registered investment company unless the bank performs such services through a separately identifiable department or division of the bank, in which case the department or division and not the bank itself shall be deemed to be the 'investment adviser' "; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following: "For purposes of this paragraph, a separately identifiable department or division of a bank shall mean a unit that—

"(A) is under the direct supervision of an officer or officers designated by the board of directors of the bank as responsible for the day-to-day conduct of the bank's investment adviser activities for one or more investment companies, including the supervision of all bank employees engaged in the performance of such activities; and

"(B) there are separately maintained in or extractable from such unit's own facilities or the facilities of the bank, all of the records relating to such investment adviser activities and such records are so maintained or otherwise accessible as to permit independent examination thereof and enforcement of the Act and rules and regulations thereunder.".

SEC. 409. DEFINITION OF BROKER.

Section 202(a)(3) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80b-2(a)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) 'Broker' has the same meaning as in the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.".

SEC. 410. DEFINITION OF DEALER.

Section 202(a)(7) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80b-2(a)(7)) is amended to read as follows:

"(7) 'Dealer' has the same meaning as in the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, but does not include an insurance company or investment company.".

SEC. 411. NOTIFICATION AND CONSULTATION.

The Investment Advisers Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80b-1 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 210 the following new section:

"NOTIFICATION AND CONSULTATION

"SEC. 210A. (a) IN GENERAL.—The Commission, prior to the examination of, the entry of an order of investigation of, or the commencement of any disciplinary or law enforcement proceedings against, any bank holding company, bank, or department or division of a bank that is a registered investment adviser shall give notice to the appropriate Federal banking agency, as defined in section 3(q) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813(q)), of the identity of such bank holding company, bank, or department or division and the nature of such proposed action and shall consult in writing with such appropriate Federal banking agency concerning any such proposed action, unless the protection of investors requires immediate action by the Commission and prior notice or consultation is not practical under the circumstances, in which case notice shall be given and the appropriate Federal banking agency shall be notified and consulted as promptly as possible thereafter.

"(b) EXAMINATION RESULTS.—The Commission and the appropriate Federal banking agency shall exchange the results of any examination of any bank holding company, bank, or department or division of a bank that is a registered investment adviser.

"(c) EFFECT ON OTHER AUTHORITY.—Nothing herein shall limit in any respect the authority of the appropriate Federal banking agency with respect to such bank holding company, bank, or department or division under any provision of law.".

SEC. 412. PUBLICITY.

Section 210(b) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of paragraph (1);

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(3) by adding the following paragraphs after paragraph (2):

"(3) in the case of any State or Federal Government official or agency or any self-regulatory organization, as defined in section 3(a)(26) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, for law enforcement or regulatory purposes; or

"(4) in the case of any foreign government official or agency for law enforcement or regulatory purposes.".

SEC. 413. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This title shall take effect upon the expiration of 270 days after the date of its enactment.

TITLE V—STRENGTHENED ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY

SEC. 501. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Enforcement Powers Improvement Act of 1989".

PART A—REGULATION OF BANKS

SEC. 511. AMENDMENTS TO THE FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE ACT.

(a) AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 8.—Section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1818) is amended—

(1) by striking the following phrases:

(A) "director, officer, employee, agent, or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of such bank";

(B) "director, officer or other person"; and

(C) "director, officer, employee, agent or other person";

each place they appear and inserting "institution-related party";

(2) at the end of paragraph (1) of subsection (b), by striking the period and inserting: "including, without limitation, reimbursement, restitution, indemnification, rescission, the disposal of loans or assets, guarantees against loss, or other action the appropriate Federal banking agency deems appropriate. Such order may place limitations on the activities or functions of the bank or any institution-related party necessary to correct the conditions resulting from any such violation or practice.";

(3) after the first sentence of paragraph (1) of subsection (c), by inserting the following sentence: "Such order may place limitations on the activities or functions of the bank or any institution-related party.";

(4) at the end of subsection (c), by adding the following new paragraph:

"(3) Whenever a notice of charges specifies that an insured bank's books and records are so incomplete or inaccurate that the appropriate Federal banking agency is unable with reasonable effort to determine the financial condition of that bank or the details or purpose of any transaction or transactions that may have a substantial effect on the financial condition of that bank, the agency may issue a temporary order requiring cessation of any activities the agency deems appropriate until completion of proceedings conducted under paragraph (1) of subsection (b) of this section. Such order shall become effective upon service, and unless set aside, limited, or suspended by a court in proceedings authorized by paragraph (2) of this subsection, shall remain effective and enforceable pending completion of the administrative proceeding initiated under such notice or until the agency determines by examination or otherwise that the bank's books and records are accurate and capable of reflecting the financial condition of the bank.";

(5) in subsection (e), by striking paragraph (2) and amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(1) Whenever the appropriate Federal banking agency determines that—

"(A) any institution-related party, directly or indirectly, has violated any law, rule, regulation, or cease-and-desist order which has become final, or has engaged or participated in any unsafe or unsound practice in connection with any insured bank or business institution, or has committed or engaged in any act, omission, or practice which constitutes a breach of his fiduciary duty;

"(B) such insured bank or business institution has suffered or will probably suffer substantial financial loss or other damage, or the interests of its depositors have been or could be seriously prejudiced by reason of such violation, practice, or breach, or the institution-related party has received financial gain by reason of such violation, practice, or breach; and

"(C) such violation, practice, or breach involves personal dishonesty on the part of such institution-related party or demonstrates willful or continuing disregard for the safety or soundness of such insured bank or business institution, the agency may serve upon such institution-related party a written notice of its intention to remove such party from office or to prohibit his further participation in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of any insured bank.";

(6) in subsection (e), by redesignating paragraphs (3) through (6) as paragraphs (2) through (5), respectively, and by amending paragraph (3), as redesignated, to read as follows:

"(3) In respect to any institution-related party referred to in paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection, the appropriate Federal banking agency may, if it deems it necessary for the protection of the bank or the interests of its depositors, by written order to such effect served upon such party, suspend him from office or prohibit him from further participation in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of the bank. Such suspension or prohibition shall become effective upon service of such order on the institution-related party and, unless stayed by a court in proceedings authorized by subsection (f) of this section, shall remain in effect pending the completion of the administrative proceedings pursuant to the notice served under paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection and until such time as the agency shall dismiss the charges specified in such notice, or, if an order of removal or prohibition is issued against such party, until the effective date of any such order. Copies of any order issued pursuant to this paragraph shall also be served upon any bank where the party involved is presently associated.";

(7) after paragraph (5) of subsection (e), as redesignated, by inserting the following new paragraph:

"(6) Any person who is subject to a removal, suspension, or prohibition order pursuant to this subsection or subsection (g) shall also be removed, suspended, or prohibited from participation in the conduct of the affairs of—

"(A) any insured institution,

"(B) any bank holding company or subsidiary of a bank holding company,

"(C) any organization organized and operated under section 25(a) of the Federal Reserve Act or operating under section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act,

"(D) any savings and loan holding company (as those terms are defined in the National Housing Act), and

"(E) any institution chartered under the Farm Credit Act of 1971, unless the party involved has received the prior written approval of the appropriate Federal regulatory agency to continue such affiliation or to continue participating in the affairs of such institution.";

(8) in subsection (f), by striking "(e)(4)" in subsection (f) and inserting "(e)(3)", and by striking "(e)(1), (e)(2), or (e)(3)" and inserting "(e)(1) or (e)(2)";

(9) in subsection (i), by redesignating paragraphs (1) and (2) as paragraphs (2) and (3), respectively, and by inserting after "(i)" the following new paragraph:

"(1) The jurisdiction and authority of the appropriate Federal banking agency to proceed under this section against any institution-related party shall not be affected by the resignation, termination of employment, or other separation of such person from an insured bank.";

(10) in the first sentence of subsection (i)(3)(i), as redesignated, by inserting after

"this section" the following: "or any condition imposed in writing by the agency in connection with the granting of any application or other request by the bank";

(11) by amending subsection (j) to read as follows:

"(j) PENALTY.—Any person against whom there is outstanding and effective any order served upon such person under paragraph (3) or (4) of subsection (e) or under subsection (g) who, directly or indirectly, without the prior written approval of the appropriate Federal regulatory agency—

"(1) participates in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of any insured institution, any bank holding company or subsidiary of a bank holding company (as those terms are defined in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956), any organization organized and operated under section 25(a) of the Federal Reserve Act or operating under section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act, any savings and loan holding company or subsidiary of a savings and loan holding company (as those terms are defined in the National Housing Act), or any institution chartered under the Farm Credit Act of 1971, from which he has been suspended, removed, or prohibited, or solicits or procures, or transfers or attempts to transfer, or votes or attempts to vote any proxies, consents, or authorization in respect to any voting rights in such institution; or

"(2) votes for a director, or serves or acts as a director, officer, employee, or agent, or otherwise participates in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of any insured institution, any bank holding company or subsidiary thereof or any other institution described in paragraph (1) of this subsection; shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. Any order issued under subsection (e) of this section may prohibit any act that would violate this subsection.";

(12) by amending subsection (k) to read as follows:

"(k) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

"(1) The term 'appropriate Federal regulatory agency' means—

"(A) the appropriate Federal banking agency, as provided in subsection (q) of section 3 (12 U.S.C. 1813);

"(B) the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, acting either in its own name or as operating head of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, in the case of a depository institution whose accounts are insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, or the subsidiary of such an institution, a Federal savings bank or a subsidiary of such a savings bank, a savings and loan holding company, or a subsidiary of a savings and loan holding company;

"(C) the National Credit Union Administration Board in the case of a depository institution whose accounts are insured by the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund; and

"(D) the Farm Credit Administration in the case of an institution chartered under the Farm Credit Act of 1971.

"(2) The terms 'cease-and-desist order which has become final' and 'order which has become final' mean a cease-and-desist order or other order issued by the appropriate Federal banking agency (i) with the consent of the bank or the institution-related party concerned; (ii) with respect to which no petition for review of the action of the agency has been filed and perfected in a court of appeals as specified in paragraph (2) of subsection (h) of this section; (iii) with respect to which the action of the court in which such a petition is so filed is not subject to further review by the Supreme Court of the United States in proceedings provided for in that paragraph; or (iv) under paragraph (1) or (3) of subsection (g) of this section.

"(3) The term 'institution-related party' means a director, officer, employee, agent, or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of an insured bank or a subsidiary of an insured bank, or any person who has filed or is required to file a change-in-control notice with the appropriate Federal banking agency under section 7(j).

"(4) The term 'insured institution' means an insured bank or a depository institution whose accounts are insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation or the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund.

"(5) The term 'violation' includes without limitation any action (alone or with another or others) for or toward causing, bringing about, participating in, counseling, or aiding or abetting a violation."; and

(13) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(t) EFFECT ON OTHER AUTHORITY.—The authority granted to the Federal banking agencies under this section shall be in addition to, and not restricted by, any other authority provided by Federal or State law.".

(b) INCREASED PENALTY FOR PARTICIPATION BY CONVICTED INDIVIDUAL.—Section 19 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1829) is amended to read as follows:

"PENALTY FOR PARTICIPATION

"SEC. 19. Except with the written consent of the Corporation, no person who has been convicted, or who is hereafter convicted of any criminal offense involving dishonesty or a breach of trust shall serve as the director, officer, or employee of an insured bank or shall participate in the conduct of the affairs of such bank. For each knowing violation of this section, the bank or the individual involved shall each be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000 for each day such prohibition is violated, which the Corporation may recover for its use.".

SEC. 512. PENALTY FOR VIOLATION OF "CHANGE IN BANK CONTROL ACT".

Section 7(j)(16) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(j)(16)) is amended to read as follows:

"(16)(A) Any person who violates any provision of this subsection, or any regulation or order issued by the appropriate Federal banking agency pursuant thereto, shall forfeit and pay a civil money penalty of not more than $10,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues. The agency having authority to impose a civil money penalty may, in its discretion, compromise, modify, or remit any civil money penalty which is subject to imposition or has been imposed under such authority. The penalty may be assessed and collected by the appropriate Federal banking agency by written notice. As used in this paragraph, the term 'violates' includes without any limitation any action (alone or with another or others) for or toward causing, bringing about, participating in, counseling, or aiding or abetting a violation.

"(B) In determining the amount of the penalty the appropriate Federal banking agency shall take into account the appropriateness of the penalty with respect to the size of financial resources and good faith of the person charged, the gravity of the violation, the history of previous violations, and such other matters as justice may require.

"(C) The person assessed shall be afforded an opportunity for agency hearing upon request made within 10 days after receipt of the notice of assessment. In such hearing all issues shall be determined on the record pursuant to section 554 of title 5, United States Code. The agency determination shall be made by final order which may be reviewed only as provided in subparagraph (D). If no hearing is requested as herein provided, the assessment shall constitute a final and unappealable order.

"(D) Any bank or person against whom an order imposing a civil money penalty has been entered after agency hearing under this section may obtain review by the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the home office of the insured bank is located, or the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, by filing a notice of appeal in such court within 20 days from the date of such order and simultaneously sending a copy of such notice by registered or certified mail to the appropriate Federal banking agency. The agency shall promptly certify and file in such court the record upon which the penalty was imposed, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. The findings of the agency shall be set aside if found to be unsupported by substantial evidence as provided by section 706(2)(E) of title 5, United States Code.

"(E) If any person fails to pay an assessment after it has become a final and unappealable order, or after the court of appeals has entered final judgment in favor of the agency, the agency shall refer the matter to the Attorney General, who shall recover the amount assessed by action in the appropriate United States district court. In such action, the validity and appropriateness of the final order imposing the penalty shall not be subject to review.

"(F) All penalties collected under authority of this section shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.".

SEC. 513. REPORTS.

(a) AMENDMENT TO THE BANK PROTECTION ACT OF 1968.—Section 3 of the Bank Protection Act of 1968 (12 U.S.C. 1882) is amended by striking in the first sentence of subsection (b) the phrase "and shall require the submission of periodic reports with respect to the installation, maintenance, and operation of security devices and procedures".

(a) NATIONAL HOUSING ACT.—Section 407(g) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730(g)) is amended—

(1) by striking paragraph (2) and amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(1) Whenever, in the opinion of the Corporation—

"(A) any institution-related party, directly or indirectly, has committed any violation of law, rule, or regulation, or of a cease-and-desist order, which has become final, or has engaged or participated in any unsafe or unsound practice in connection with any insured institution or other business institution, or has committed or engaged in any act, omission or practice which constitutes a breach of its fiduciary duty;

"(B) such insured institution or other business institution has suffered or will probably suffer substantial financial loss or other damage or that the interests of savings account holders have been or could be seriously prejudiced by reason of such violation, practice, or breach or the institution-related party has received financial gain by reason of such violation, practice, or breach; and

"(C) such violation, practice, or breach involves personal dishonesty on the part of the institution-related party or demonstrates willful or continuing disregard for the safety or soundness of the insured institution or other business institution, the Corporation may serve on such institution-related party a written notice of its intention to remove such party from office or to prohibit the party's further participation in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of any insured institution.";

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (3) through (5) as paragraphs (2) through (4) respectively, and by amending paragraph (3) of subsection (g) (as so redesignated) to read as follows:

"(3) In respect to any institution-related party or any other person referred to in paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection, the Corporation may if it deems it necessary for the protection of the institution or the interests of its savings account holders or of the Corporation, by written order to such effect served upon such party, suspend that party from office or prohibit that party from further participation in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of the institution. Such suspension or prohibition shall become effective upon service of such order upon the institution-related party and, unless stayed by a court in proceedings authorized by paragraph (6) of this subsection, shall remain in effect pending the completion of the administrative proceeding pursuant to the notice served under paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection and until such time as the Corporation shall dismiss the charges specified in such notice, or, if an order of removal or prohibition is issued against such party, until the effective date of any such order. Copies of any order issued pursuant to this paragraph shall also be served upon the institution with which the party involved is presently associated."; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (4) of subsection (g) (as so redesignated) the following:

"(5) Any person who, pursuant to this subsection or subsection (h), is removed, suspended, or prohibited from participation in the conduct of the affairs of an insured institution or a service corporation or a subsidiary of a service corporation of an insured institution, whether wholly or partly owned, shall also be removed, suspended, or prohibited from participation in the conduct of the affairs of—

"(A) any insured bank (as that term is defined in the Federal Deposit Insurance Act),

"(B) any bank holding company or subsidiary of a bank holding company (as those terms are defined in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956),

"(C) any organization organized and operated under section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act,

"(D) any insured institution,

"(E) any service corporation or subsidiary of a service corporation of an insured institution, whether wholly or partly owned,

"(F) any savings and loan holding company or subsidiary of a savings and loan holding company,

"(G) any depository institution whose accounts are insured by the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund, and

"(H) any institution chartered under the Farm Credit Act of 1971, without the prior written approval of the appropriate Federal regulatory agency, as that term is defined in the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, to continue participation in the affairs of such institution.".

(b) HOME OWNERS' LOAN ACT OF 1933.—Section 5(d)(4) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1464(d)(4)) is amended—

(1) by striking subparagraph (B) and amending subparagraph (A) to read as follows:

"(4)(A) Whenever, in the opinion of the Board—

"(i) any association-related party, directly or indirectly, has committed any violation of law, rule, or regulation, or of a cease-and-desist order which has become final, or has engaged or participated in any unsafe or unsound practice in connection with any association or other business institution, or has committed or engaged in any act, omission, or practice which constitutes a breach of its fiduciary duty;

"(ii) such association or other business institution has suffered or will probably suffer substantial financial loss or other damage or the interests of savings account holders have been or could be seriously prejudiced by reason of such violation, practice, or breach, or the association-related party has received financial gain by reason of such violation, practice, or breach; and

"(iii) such violation, practice, or breach involves personal dishonesty on the part of the association-related party, or demonstrates willful or continuing disregard for the safety or soundness of the association or other business institution, the Board may serve upon such association-related party a written notice of its intention to remove such party from office or to prohibit the party's further participation in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of any institution.";

(2) by redesignating subparagraphs (C) through (E) as subparagraphs (B) through (D) respectively, and by amending subparagraph (C) (as so redesignated) to read as follows:

"(C) In respect to any association-related party or any other person referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B) of this paragraph, the Board may, if it deems it necessary for the protection of the association or the interests of its savings account holders, by written order to such effect served upon such party, suspend that party from office or prohibit that party from further participation in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of the association. Such suspension or prohibition shall become effective upon service of such order upon the association-related party and, unless stayed by a court in proceedings authorized by subparagraph (F) of this paragraph, shall remain in effect, pending the completion of the administrative proceedings pursuant to the notice served under subparagraph (A) or (B) of this paragraph and until such time as the Board shall dismiss the charges specified in such notice, or, if an order of removal or prohibition is issued against such party, until the effective date of any such order. Copies of any order issued pursuant to this subparagraph shall also be served upon the association with which the party involved is presently associated."; and

(3) by inserting after subparagraph (D) of subsection (d)(4) (as so redesignated) the following:

"(E) Any person who, pursuant to this subsection or subsection (d)(5), is removed, suspended, or prohibited from participation in the conduct of the affairs of an association or a service corporation or a subsidiary of a service corporation of an association, whether partly or wholly owned, shall also be removed, suspended, or prohibited from participation in the conduct of the affairs of—

"(i) any insured bank (as that term is defined in the Federal Deposit Insurance Act),

"(ii) any bank holding company or subsidiary of a bank holding company (as those terms are defined in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956),

SEC. 527. PENALTIES.

"(p) PENALTIES.—(1) Any person against whom there is outstanding and effective any order served upon such person under paragraph (3) or (4) of subsection (g) or under subsection (h) who, directly or indirectly, without the prior written approval of the appropriate Federal regulatory agency, as that term is defined in section 8(k) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act—

"(A) participates in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of any insured institution, any insured bank (as that term is defined in the Federal Deposit Insurance Act), any service corporation of an insured institution or subsidiary of a service corporation, any bank holding company or subsidiary of a bank holding company (as those terms are defined in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956), any organization organized and operated under section 25(a) of the Federal Reserve Act or operating under section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act, any savings and loan holding company or subsidiary of a savings and loan holding company (as these terms are defined in the National Housing Act), any depository institution whose accounts are insured by the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund, or any institution chartered under the Farm Credit Act of 1971, from which that person has been suspended, removed, or prohibited, or solicits or procures, or transfers or attempts to transfer, or votes or attempts to vote any proxies, consents, or authorizations in respect to any voting rights in such institutions; or

"(B) votes for a director, or serves or acts as a director, officer, employee, or agent, or otherwise participates in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of any insured institution, any insured bank or any other institution described in paragraph (i) of this subsection, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. Any order issued under subsection (g) of this section may prohibit any act that would violate this subsection.

"(2) Except with the prior written consent of the Corporation, no person shall serve as a director, officer, or employee of an insured institution or shall participate in the conduct of the affairs of such institution who has been convicted, or who is hereafter convicted, of any criminal offense involving dishonesty or a breach of trust. For each knowing violation of this prohibition, the institution or the individual involved shall each be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000 for each day this prohibition is violated, which the Corporation may recover by suit or otherwise for its own use.".

(b) HOME OWNERS' LOAN ACT OF 1933.—Section 5(d)(12) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1464(d)(12)) is amended by striking paragraphs (A) and (B) and inserting the following:

"(12) PENALTIES.—(A) Any person against whom there is outstanding and effective any order served upon such person under subparagraph (C) or (D) of paragraph (4) or under (5) who, directly or indirectly, without the prior written approval of the appropriate Federal regulatory agency (as that term is defined in section 8(k) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act)—

"(i) participates in any manner in the conduct of any association or institution insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, any insured bank (as that term is defined in the Federal Deposit Insurance Act), any bank holding company or subsidiary of a bank holding company (as those terms are defined in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956), any organization organized and operated under section 25(a) of the Federal Reserve Act or operating under section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act, any savings and loan holding company or subsidiary of a savings and loan holding company (as those terms are defined in the National Housing Act), any depository institution whose accounts are insured by the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund, any association or other institution insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, any service corporation of an association or institution insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation or subsidiary of a service corporation, or any institution chartered under the Farm Credit Act of 1971, from which he has been suspended, removed, or prohibited, or solicits or procures, or transfers or attempts to transfer, or votes or attempts to vote any proxies, consents or authorizations in respect to any voting rights in such institutions; or

"(ii) votes for a director, or serves or acts as a director, officer, employee, or agent, or otherwise participates in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of any insured institution, any insured bank, or any other institution described in subparagraph (A)(i) of this subsection; shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. Any order issued under subsection (d)(4) of this section may prohibit any act that would violate this subsection.

"(B) Except with the prior written consent of the Board, no person shall serve as a director, officer, or employee of an association or shall participate in the conduct of the affairs of such association who has been convicted, or who is hereafter convicted, of any criminal offense involving dishonesty or a breach of trust. For each knowing violation of this prohibition, the association or the individual involved shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000 for each day this prohibition is violated, which the Board may recover by suit or otherwise for its own use.".

SEC. 528. CIVIL PENALTY.

Section 407(q)(17) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730(q)(17)) is amended to read as follows:

"(17)(A) Any person who violates any provision of this subsection, or any regulation or order issued by the Corporation pursuant thereto, shall forfeit and pay a civil money penalty of not more than $10,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues. The Corporation may, in its discretion, compromise, modify, or remit any civil money penalty which is subject to imposition or has been imposed. The penalty may be assessed and collected by the Corporation by written notice. As used in this section, the term 'violates' includes without any limitation any action (alone or with another or others) for or toward causing, bringing about, participating in, counseling, or aiding or abetting a violation.

"(B) In determining the amount of the penalty the Corporation shall take into account the appropriateness of the penalty with respect to the size of financial resources and good faith of the person charged, the gravity of the violation, the history of previous violations, and such other matters as justice may require.

"(C) The person assessed shall be afforded an opportunity for agency hearing, upon request made within ten days after issuance of the notice of assessment. In such hearing all issues shall be determined on the record pursuant to section 554 of title 5, United States Code. The Corporation's determination shall be made by final order which may be reviewed only as provided in subparagraph (D). If no hearing is requested as herein provided, the assessment shall constitute a final and unappealable order.

"(D) Any insured institution or person against whom an order imposing a civil money penalty has been entered after agency hearing under this section may obtain review by the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the home office of the insured institution is located, or the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, by filing a notice of appeal in such court within 20 days from the service of such order, and simultaneously sending a copy of such notice by registered or certified mail to the Corporation. The Corporation shall promptly certify and file in such Court the record upon which the penalty was imposed, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. The findings of the Corporation shall be set aside if found to be unsupported by substantial evidence as provided by section 706(2)(E) of title 5, United States Code.

"(E) If any person fails to pay an assessment after it has become a final and unappealable order, or after the court of appeals has entered final judgment in favor of the agency, the agency shall refer the matter to the Attorney General, who shall recover the amount assessed by action in the appropriate United States district court. In such action, the validity and appropriateness of the final order imposing the penalty shall not be subject to review.

"(F) All penalties collected under authority of this section shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.".

SEC. 529. DEFINITIONS.

(1) by redesignating subparagraphs (B) through (D) of paragraph (1) as subparagraphs (C) through (E), respectively;

(2) by striking subparagraph (A) of paragraph (1) and inserting the following:

"(A) The term 'cease-and-desist order which has become final' and 'order which has become final' mean a cease-and-desist order or other order issued by the Corporation (i) with the consent of the institution or the institution-related party concerned; (ii) with respect to which no petition for review of the action of the Corporation has been filed and perfected in a court of appeals as specified in paragraph (2) of subsection (j) of this section; (iii) with respect to which the action of the court in which such a petition is so filed is not subject to further review by the Supreme Court of the United States in proceedings provided for in subsection (j); or (v) an order issued under subsection (h) of this section.

"(B) The term 'institution-related party' means a director, officer, controlling person, employee, agent, or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of an insured institution or of any service corporation or any subsidiary of a service corporation or an insured institution, whether partly or wholly owned, or of any savings and loan holding company or any subsidiary of a savings and loan holding company as those terms are defined in section 408 of this title; and any person who has filed or is required to file a change-in-control notice with the Corporation under subsection (q) of this section. For the purpose of enforcing any law, rule, regulation, or cease-and-desist order in connection with an interlocking relationship, 'institution-related party' includes an employee or officer with management functions, an advisory or honorary director, a trustee of an association under the control of trustees, or any person who has a representative or nominee serving in any such capacity."; and

(3) by striking paragraph (4) and inserting the following:

"(4) As used in subsections (e), (f), (g), (h), and (p) of this section, the term 'insured institution' means any institution the deposits of which are insured by the Corporation, any institution that retains deposits insured by the Corporation notwithstanding termination of its status as an insured institution, a Federal savings bank the deposits of which are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and any former Federal savings bank that retains deposits insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation notwithstanding termination of its status as an insured bank.".

(b) HOME OWNERS' LOAN ACT OF 1933.—Section 5(d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1464(d)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (2) through (4) of paragraph (13)(A) as paragraphs (3) through (5) respectively; and

(2) by striking paragraph (1) of paragraph (13)(A) and inserting the following:

"(1) The terms 'cease-and-desist order which has become final' and 'order which has become final' mean a cease-and-desist order or other order issued by the Board (A) with the consent of the association or the association-related party concerned; (B) with respect to which no petition for review of the action of the Board has been filed and perfected in a court of appeals as specified in paragraph (7)(B) of this subsection;

(C) with respect to which the action of the court in which such a petition is filed is not subject to further review by the Supreme Court of the United States in proceedings provided for in paragraph (7)(B); or (D) under paragraph (5) (A) or (C) of this subsection.

"(2) The term 'association-related party' means—

"(A) a director, officer, controlling person, employee, agent, or other person participating in the conduct of affairs of an association or of any service corporation or of any subsidiary of a service corporation of an association, whether partly or wholly owned, or of any savings and loan holding company or any subsidiary of a savings and loan holding company, as those terms are defined in section 408 of the National Housing Act, or of any association with respect to which the Federal Home Loan Bank Board now or hereafter has any statutory power of examination or supervision under any Act or joint resolution of Congress other than this Act, the Federal Home Loan Bank Act and the National Housing Act; or

"(B) any person who has filed or is required to file a change-in-control notice with the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation under subsection (q) of section 407 of the National Housing Act.

For the purpose of enforcing any law, rule, regulation, or cease-and-desist order in connection with an interlocking relationship, 'association-related party' includes an employee or officer with management functions, an advisory or honorary director, a trustee of an association under the control of trustees, or any person who has a representative or nominee serving in any such capacity."; and

(3) by striking paragraph (14) and inserting the following:

"(14)(A) As used in paragraphs (2), (3), (4), (5), and (12) of this subsection, the term 'association' includes any former association that retains deposits insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation notwithstanding termination of its status as an institution insured by such Corporation, and any Federal savings bank whose deposits are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and any former Federal savings bank that retains deposits insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation notwithstanding termination of its status as an insured bank.

"(B) As used in this subsection, the terms 'Federal savings and loan association' and 'association' include any institution with respect to which the Federal Home Loan Bank Board now or hereafter has any statutory power of examination or supervision under any Act or joint resolution of Congress other than this Act, the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, and the National Housing Act.

"(C) References in this subsection to savings account holders and to members of associations shall be deemed to be references to holders of withdrawable accounts in institutions over which the Board has any statutory power of examination or supervision as provided in this paragraph, and references therein to boards of directors of associations shall be deemed to be references to boards of directors or other governing boards of such institutions. The Board shall have power by regulation to define, for the purposes of this paragraph, terms used or referred to in the preceding sentence and other terms used in this subsection.".

SEC. 530. REPORTS OF CONDITION.

Section 407 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(u) REPORTS OF CONDITION; PENALTIES.—

"(1) Each insured institution or Federal saving bank shall make reports of condition to the Corporation which shall be in such form and shall contain such information as the Corporation may require. The Corporation may require reports of condition to be published in such manner, not inconsistent with any applicable law, as it may direct.

"(2) Any insured institution or Federal saving bank which fails to obtain and furnish any report or information required by the Corporation under this section within the period of time the Corporation specifies or which submits any false or misleading report or information shall be subject to a penalty of $1,000 each day during which such failure continues or is not corrected. Such penalty shall be assessed and collected in the manner as prescribed by section 407(q)(17) of this title.".

SEC. 531. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.

(a) NATIONAL HOUSING ACT.—Section 407(h) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730(h)) is amended by striking "(1), (2), (3), or (4)" from the fifth sentence of paragraph (1) and inserting "(1), (2), or (3)".

(b) HOME OWNERS' LOAN ACT OF 1933.—Section 5(d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1464(d)) is amended by striking "(A), (B), (C) or (D)" from the fifth sentence of subparagraph (5)(A) and inserting "(A), (B) or (C)".

SEC. 532. PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO REPORT.

Section 408 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730a) is amended by adding at the end of subsection (b)(2) thereof the following: "Every savings and loan holding company which fails to make such reports within the period of time specified by the Corporation or which submits or publishes any false or misleading report or information shall be subject to a penalty of $1,000 for each day during which such failure continues or such information is not corrected; such penalty to be assessed and collected in the same manner as prescribed by subsection (j)(4) of this section.".

SEC. 533. REPEALER.

Section 5(d)(15) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1464(d)(15)) is repealed, and section 5(d)(16) (12 U.S.C. 1464(d)(16)) is redesignated as section 5(d)(15) (12 U.S.C. 1464(d)(15)).

PART C—CREDIT UNIONS

SEC. 541. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 206.

(a) Section 206 of the Federal Credit Union Act (12 U.S.C. 1786) is amended—

(1) by striking the following phrases:

(A) "director, officer, committee member, employee, agent, or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of such a credit union";

(B) "director, officer, committee member, employee, agent, or other person";

(C) "director, officer, committee member, or employee";

(D) "director, officer, or committee member";

(E) "director, committee member, or officer";

(F) "director, committee member, officer, or other person";

(G) "officer, director, committee member, employee, agent, or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of such a credit union";

(H) "officer, director, committee member, employee, agent, or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of such credit union";

(I) "director, committee member, or officer or other person";

(J) "director, officer, committee member, or other person"; and

(K) "director, committee member, or officer of an insured credit union, or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of such credit union";

each place they appear and inserting "institution-related party";

(2) at the end of paragraph (1) of subsection (e), by striking the period and inserting the following: "including, without limitation, reimbursement, restitution, indemnification, rescission, the disposal of loans or assets, guarantees against loss, or other action the Board deems appropriate. Such order may place limitations on the activities or functions of the credit union or any institution-related party necessary to correct the conditions resulting from any such violation or practice.";

(3) after the first sentence of paragraph (1) of subsection (f), by inserting the following sentence: "Such order may place limitations on the activities or functions of the credit union or any institution-related party.";

(4) in subsection (f), by redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) as paragraphs (3) and (4), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) Whenever a notice of charges specifies that any insured credit union's books and records are so incomplete or inaccurate that the Board is unable with reasonable effort to determine the financial condition of that credit union or the details or purpose of any transactions that may have a substantial effect on the financial condition of that credit union, the Board may issue a temporary order requiring cessation of any activities the Board deems appropriate until completion of proceedings conducted under paragraph (1) of subsection (e) of this section. Such order shall become effective upon service, and, unless set aside, limited, or suspended by a court in proceedings authorized by paragraph (3) of this subsection, shall remain effective and enforceable pending completion of the administrative proceeding initiated under such notice or until the Board determines by examination or otherwise that the credit union's books and records are accurate and capable of reflecting the financial condition of the credit union.";

(5) by striking paragraph (2) and amending paragraph (1) of subsection (g) to read as follows:

"(1) Whenever the Board determines that—

"(A) any institution-related party, directly or indirectly, has violated any law, rule, regulation, or cease-and-desist order which has become final, or has engaged or participated in any unsafe or unsound practice in connection with any insured credit union or other business institution, or has committed or engaged in any act, omission, or practice which constitutes a breach of his fiduciary duty, or by conduct or practice has evidenced his personal dishonesty or unfitness to continue as an institution-related party; and

"(B) such insured credit union or other business institution has suffered or will probably suffer substantial financial loss or other damage, or the interests of its insured members have been or could be seriously prejudiced by reason of such violation, practice, or breach, or the institution-related party has received financial gain by reason of such violation, practice, or breach, the Board may serve upon such institution-related party a written notice of its intention to remove such party from office or to prohibit his further participation in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of any insured credit union.";

(6) in subsection (g), by striking "(A)" and striking subparagraph (B) in paragraph (7), and by redesignating paragraphs (3) through (7) of subsection (g) as paragraphs (2) through (6), respectively, and by amending paragraph (3) (as so redesignated) to read as follows:

"(3) In respect to any institution-related party referred to in paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection, the Board may, if it deems necessary for the protection of the credit union or the interests of its members, by written order to such effect served upon such party, suspend that party from office or prohibit that party from further participation in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of the credit union. Such suspension or prohibition shall become effective upon service of such order on the institution-related party and, unless stayed by a court in proceedings authorized by paragraph (5) of this subsection, shall remain in effect pending the completion of the administrative proceedings pursuant to the notice served under paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection and until such time as the Board shall dismiss the charges specified in such notice, or, if an order of removal or prohibition is issued against such party, until the effective date of any such order. Copies of any order issued pursuant to this paragraph shall also be served upon any institution where the party involved is presently associated.";

(7) in subsection (g)(6), as redesignated, by striking all that follows "National Housing Act)," and inserting "and any institution chartered under the Farm Credit Act of 1971, unless the party involved has received the prior written approval of the appropriate Federal regulatory agency to continue such affiliation or to continue participating in the affairs of such institution.";

(8) in subsection (g)(5) (as redesignated), by striking "(4)" and inserting "(3)", and by striking "(1), (2), or (3)" and inserting "(1) or (2)";

(9) by redesignating paragraph (1) of subsection (k) as paragraph (2), by redesignating paragraph (2) of subsection (k) as paragraph (3), and by inserting after "(k)" the following:

"(1) The jurisdiction and authority of the Board to proceed under this section against any institution-related party shall not be affected by the resignation, termination of employment, or other separation of such person from an insured credit union.";

(10) in the first sentence of paragraph (3)(A) of subsection (k) (as redesignated), by inserting after "this section" the following: "or any condition imposed in writing by the Board in connection with the granting of any application or other request by the credit union", and by striking "subsection (e), (f), or (q)" and inserting "subsection (e), (f), or (p)";

(11) by amending subsection (l) to read as follows:

"(l) Any person against whom there is outstanding and effective any order served upon such person under paragraph (3) or (4) of subsection (g) or under subsection (i) who, directly or indirectly, without the prior written approval of the Board—

"(1) participates in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of—

"(A) any insured institution,

"(B) any bank holding company or subsidiary of a bank holding company (as those terms are defined in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956),

"(C) any organization organized and operated under section 25(a) of the Federal Reserve Act or operating under section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act,

"(D) any savings and loan holding company or subsidiary of a savings and loan holding company (as those terms are defined in the National Housing Act), or

"(E) any institution chartered under the Farm Credit Act of 1971, from which he has been suspended, removed, or prohibited, or solicits or procures, or transfers or attempts to transfer, or votes or attempts to vote any proxies, consents, or authorization in respect to any voting rights in such institution; or

"(2) votes for a director, or serves or acts as a director, officer, committee member, employee, or agent, or otherwise participates in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of any insured institution, any bank holding company or subsidiary thereof, or any other institution described in paragraph (1) of this subsection, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. Any order issued under subsection (g) of this section may prohibit any act that would violate this subsection.";

(12) by striking subsection (m) and redesignating subsections (n), (o), (p) and (q) of this section as subsections (m), (n), (o) and (p) respectively; and

(13) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(q) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

"(1) The term 'appropriate Federal regulatory agency' has the same meaning as in section 8(k) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

"(2) The terms 'cease-and-desist order which has become final' and 'order which has become final' mean a cease-and-desist order or other order issued by the Board (A) with the consent of the credit union or the institution-related party concerned; (B) with respect to which no petition for review of the action of the agency has been filed and perfected in a court of appeals as specified in paragraph (2) of subsection (j) of this section; (C) with respect to which the action of the court in which such a petition is so filed is not subject to further review by the Supreme Court of the United States in proceedings provided for in that paragraph; or (D) under paragraphs (1) or (3) of subsection (i) of this section.

"(3) The term 'institution-related party' means a director, officer, committee member, employee, agent, or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of an insured credit union.

"(4) The term 'insured institution' means an insured credit union, as defined in section 101, or a depository institution whose accounts are insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

"(5) The term 'violation' includes without limitation any action (alone or with another or others) for or toward causing, bringing about, participating in, counseling, or aiding or abetting a violation.

"(r) EFFECT OF OTHER LAW.—The authority granted to the Board under this section shall be in addition to, and not restricted by, any other authority provided by Federal or State law.".

SEC. 542. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 205.

Section 205 of the Federal Credit Union Act (12 U.S.C. 1785) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence of subsection (d), by inserting after the phrase "insured credit union" "or shall participate in the conduct of the affairs of such insured credit union";

(2) by striking the second sentence of subsection (d) and inserting "For each knowing violation of this subsection, the credit union or the individual involved shall each be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000 for each day this prohibition is violated, which the Board may recover for its use."; and

(3) in the first sentence of paragraph (2) of subsection (e), by inserting a period after the word "standards" and striking the phrase "and shall require the submission of periodic reports with respect to the installation, maintenance, and operation of security devices and procedures".

TITLE VI—TRUTH IN SAVINGS AND INVESTMENTS

SEC. 601. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Truth in Savings and Investments Act".

SEC. 602. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress hereby finds that economic stability would be enhanced, competition among depository institutions and investment companies would be improved, and the ability of the consumer to make informed decisions regarding accounts and investments would be strengthened if there was uniformity in the disclosure of terms and conditions on which interest and earnings are paid and fees are assessed.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this title to require the clear and uniform disclosure of—

(1) the rates of interest and yields which are payable on accounts and investments; and

(2) the fees that are assessable against accounts and investments, so that consumers can make meaningful comparisons among the competing claims of depository institutions and investment companies.

SEC. 603. DEFINITIONS.

For the purposes of this title—

(1) DEPOSITORY INSTITUTION.—The term "depository institution" has the meaning given such term in clauses (i) through (vi) of section 19(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Reserve Act.

(2) BOARD.—The term "Board" means the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

(3) ACCOUNT.—The term "account" means any account offered to 1 or more individuals or an unincorporated nonbusiness association of individuals by a depository institution into which a customer deposits funds, including demand accounts, time accounts, negotiable order of withdrawal accounts, and share draft accounts.

(4) INTEREST.—The term "interest" includes dividends paid with respect to share draft accounts which are accounts within the meaning of paragraph (3).

(5) MULTIPLE RATE ACCOUNT.—The term "multiple rate accounts" means any account that has 2 or more annual rates of simple interest which take effect in succeeding periods and which are known at the time of disclosure.

(6) ANNUAL PERCENTAGE YIELD.—The term "annual percentage yield" shall be equal to the total amount of interest that would be received on a $100 deposit under the terms described in paragraphs (3) and (4) of section 605(c) over a year, expressed as a percentage calculated by a method which shall be prescribed by the Board in regulations.

SEC. 604. DISCLOSURE OF YIELDS AND TERMS OF ACCOUNTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), each advertisement, announcement, or solicitation initiated by any depository institution relating to any account which includes any reference to a specific rate of interest payable on amounts held in such account, or to a specific yield or rate of earnings on amounts so held, shall state the following information, to the extent applicable, in a clear and conspicuous manner:

(1) The annual percentage yield (which shall be noted in greater prominence than any other stated rate).

(2) The period during which such annual percentage yield is in effect.

(3) All minimum account balance and time requirements which must be met in order to earn the advertised yield (and, in the case of accounts for which more than 1 yield is stated, each annual percentage yield and the account minimum balance requirement associated with each such yield shall be in close proximity and have equal prominence).

(4) The minimum amount of the initial deposit which is required to open the account in order to obtain the yield advertised, if such minimum amount is greater than the minimum balance necessary to earn the advertised yield.

(5) A statement that regular fees or other conditions could reduce the yield.

(6) A statement of any penalty imposed for early withdrawal.

(b) BROADCAST AND ELECTRONIC MEDIA AND OUTDOOR ADVERTISING EXCEPTION.—The Board may, by regulation, exempt advertisements, announcements, or solicitations made by any broadcast or electronic medium or outdoor advertising display not on the premises of the depository institution from any disclosure requirements described in paragraph (4) or (5) of subsection (a) if the Board finds that any such disclosure would be unnecessarily burdensome.

(c) MISLEADING DESCRIPTIONS OF FREE OR NO-COST ACCOUNTS PROHIBITED.—No advertisement, announcement, or solicitation made by any depository institution may refer to or describe an account as a free or no-cost account if—

(1) in order to avoid fees or service charges for any period—

(A) a minimum balance must be maintained in the account during such period; or

(B) the number of transactions are limited during such period; or

(2) any regular service or transaction fee is imposed.

SEC. 605. ACCOUNT SCHEDULE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Each depository institution shall maintain a schedule of fees, charges, yields, and other terms and conditions applicable to each class of accounts offered by the depository institution, in accordance with the requirements of this section and regulations which the Board shall prescribe. The schedule for each class may be in the form of separate schedules or one comprehensive document. The Board shall specify, in regulations, which fees, charges, penalties, terms, conditions, and account restrictions must be included in a schedule required under this subsection. A depository institution need not include in such schedule any information not specified in such regulation.

(b) INFORMATION ON FEES AND CHARGES.—The schedule required under subsection (a) with respect to any account shall contain the following information:

(1) A description of all fees, periodic service charges, and penalties which may be charged or assessed against the account (or against the account holder in connection with such account), the amount of any such fees, charges, or penalties (or the method by which such amounts will be calculated), and the conditions under which any such amounts will be assessed.

(2) All minimum balance requirements that affect fees, charges, and penalties, including a clear description of how each minimum balance is calculated.

(3) Any minimum amount required with respect to the initial deposit in order to open the account.

(c) INFORMATION ON YIELDS.—The schedule required under subsection (a) with respect to any account shall include the following information:

(1) Any annual percentage yield.

(2) The period during which any annual percentage yield will be in effect.

(3) Any annual rate of simple interest.

(4) The frequency with which interest will be compounded and credited.

(5) A clear description of the method used to determine the balance on which interest is paid.

(6) The information described in paragraphs (1), (3), and (4) shall be provided for each period during which a different annual rate of simple interest is in effect (or, if applicable, the method for computing such information).

(7) Any minimum balance which must be maintained to earn the rates and obtain the yields disclosed pursuant to this subsection and a clear description of how such minimum balance is calculated.

(8) A clear description of any minimum time requirement which must be met in order to obtain the yields disclosed pursuant to this subsection and any information described in paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) that will apply if any time requirement is not met.

(9) A statement, if applicable, that any interest which has accrued but has not been credited to an account at the time of a withdrawal from the account will not be paid by the depository institution or credited to the account by reason of such withdrawal.

(10) Any provision or requirement relating to nonpayment of interest, including any charge or penalty for early withdrawal, and the conditions under which any such charge or penalty may be assessed.

(d) OTHER INFORMATION.—The schedule required under subsection (a) shall include such other disclosures as the Board may determine to be necessary to allow consumers to understand and compare accounts, including frequency of interest rate adjustments, account restrictions, and renewal policies for time accounts.

(e) STYLE AND FORMAT.—Schedules required under subsection (a) shall be written in clear and plain language and be presented in a format designed to give consumers the ability to readily understand the terms of the accounts offered.

SEC. 606. DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS FOR CERTAIN ACCOUNTS.

The Board shall by regulation prescribe such modifications in the disclosure requirements under this title relating to annual percentage yields as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this title in the case of—

(1) accounts with respect to which determination of annual percentage yield is based on an annual rate of interest that is guaranteed for a period of less than 1 year;

(2) variable rate accounts;

(3) accounts which, pursuant to law, do not guarantee payment of a stated rate; and

(4) multiple rate accounts.

SEC. 607. DISTRIBUTION OF SCHEDULES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any schedule required under section 605 shall be—

(1) mailed to holders of the account not more than 90 days after the effective date of the initial regulations prescribed by the Board under this Act;

(2) made available to any person upon request; and

(3) provided to any potential customer before an account is opened or a service is rendered.

(b) DISTRIBUTION IN CASE OF CERTAIN INITIAL DEPOSITS.—If—

(1) a depositor is not physically present at an office of a depository institution at the time an initial deposit is accepted with respect to an account established by or for such person; and

(2) the schedule required under section 605(a) has not been furnished previously to such depositor, the depository institution shall mail the schedule to the depositor at the address shown on the records of the depository institution for such account not later than 10 days after the date of the initial deposit.

(c) DISTRIBUTION OF NOTICE OF CERTAIN CHANGES.—If—

(1) any change is made in any term or condition which is required to be disclosed in the schedule required under section 605(a) with respect to any account; and

(2) the change may reduce the yield or adversely affect any holder of the account, all account holders who may be affected by such change shall be notified and provided with a description of the change by mail at least 30 days before the change takes effect.

(3) This subsection does not apply to changes in annual percentage yields of variable rate accounts.

(d) DISTRIBUTION IN CASE OF ACCOUNTS ESTABLISHED BY MORE THAN 1 INDIVIDUAL OR BY A GROUP.—If an account is established by more than 1 individual or for a person other than an individual, any distribution described in this section with respect to such account meets the requirements of this section if the distribution is made to 1 of the individuals who established the account or 1 individual representative of the person on whose behalf such account was established.

SEC. 608. PAYMENT OF INTEREST.

(a) DETERMINATION OF BALANCE ON WHICH INTEREST IS CALCULATED.—Except as provided in subsection (b), interest shall be calculated on the principal balance in an interest-bearing account at a depository institution by using the average daily balance method, which is the sum of each day's closing balance divided by the number of days in the period.

(b) SPECIAL RULE FOR CREDIT UNIONS.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to an account at a depository institution described in section 19(b)(1)(A)(iv) of the Federal Reserve Act if the depository institution—

(1) calculates the accrual of interest or dividends by a method other than the method described in subsection (a) with respect to all funds, including cash, deposited in such account; and

(2) provides notice of interest payment policy in the manner required by section 605(e) of the Expedited Funds Availability Act.

(c) CALCULATED ON FULL AMOUNT OF PRINCIPAL.—Interest on an interest-bearing account at any depository institution shall be calculated by such institution on the full amount of principal in the account for each day of the stated calculation period at the rate or rates of interest disclosed pursuant to this title.

(d) NO PARTICULAR METHOD OF COMPOUNDING INTEREST REQUIRED.—Subsection (c) shall not be construed as prohibiting or requiring the use of any particular method of compounding or crediting interest.

SEC. 609. REGULATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Board, after consultation with each agency referred to in section 610(a) and after providing public notice and opportunity for comment, shall prescribe regulations to carry out the purpose and provisions of this title. The regulations may contain any classification, differentiation, or other provision, and may provide an exception for any class of accounts which, in the judgment of the Board, may be necessary or proper to carry out the purposes of this title, to prevent circumvention or evasion of the requirements of this title, or to facilitate compliance with the requirements of this title.

(b) MODEL FORMS AND CLAUSES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall publish model forms and clauses for common disclosures to facilitate compliance with this title. In devising such forms, the Board shall consider the use by depository institutions of data processing or similar automated machines.

(2) USE OF FORMS AND CLAUSES DEEMED IN COMPLIANCE.—Nothing in this title may be construed to require a depository institution to use any such model form or clause prescribed by the Board under this subsection. A depository institution shall be deemed to be in compliance with the disclosure provisions of this title if the depository institution—

(A) uses any appropriate model form or clause published by the Board; or

(B) uses any such model form or clause and changes it by—

(i) deleting any information which is not required by this title; or

(ii) rearranging the format,

if in making such deletion or rearranging the format, the depository institution does not affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the disclosure.

(3) PUBLIC NOTICE AND OPPORTUNITY FOR COMMENT.—The Board shall adopt model disclosure forms and clauses after giving appropriate notice and opportunity for public comment in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code.

SEC. 610. ADMINISTRATIVE ENFORCEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Compliance with the requirements imposed under this title shall be enforced under—

(1) section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, in the case of—

(A) national banks, by the Comptroller of the Currency;

(B) member banks of the Federal Reserve System (other than national banks), by the Board; and

(C) depository institutions described in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) of section 19(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Reserve Act (other than member banks of the Federal Reserve System) by the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation;

(2) section 5(d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, section 407 of the National Housing Act, and sections 6(i) and 17 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board (acting directly or through the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation) in the case of depository institutions described in clause (v) or (vi) of section 19(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Reserve Act;

(3) the Federal Credit Union Act, by the National Credit Union Administration Board in the case of Federal credit unions; and

(4) the Federal Trade Commission Act, by the Federal Trade Commission in the case of State-chartered credit unions.

(b) ADDITIONAL ENFORCEMENT POWERS.—

(1) VIOLATION OF THIS TITLE TREATED AS VIOLATION OF OTHER ACTS.—For purposes of the exercise by any agency referred to in subsection (a) of such agency's powers under any Act referred to in such subsection, a violation of a requirement imposed under this title shall be deemed to be a violation of a requirement imposed under that Act.

(2) ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY UNDER OTHER ACTS.—In addition to the powers of any agency referred to in subsection (a) under any provision of law specifically referred to in such subsection, each agency may exercise, for purposes of enforcing compliance with any requirement imposed under this title, any other authority conferred on such agency by law.

(c) REGULATIONS BY AGENCIES OTHER THAN THE BOARD.—The authority of the Board to issue regulations under this title does not impair the authority of any other agency referred to in subsection (a) to make rules regarding its own procedures in enforcing compliance with the requirements imposed under this title.

SEC. 611. CIVIL LIABILITY.

(a) CIVIL LIABILITY.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, any depository institution which fails to comply with any requirement imposed under this title or any regulation prescribed under this title with respect to any person is liable to such person in an amount equal to the sum of—

(1) any actual damage sustained by such person as a result of the failure;

(2)(A) in the case of an individual action, such additional amount as the court may allow, except that the liability under this subparagraph shall not be less than $100 nor greater than $1,000; or

(B) in the case of a class action, such amount as the court may allow, except that—

(i) as to each member of the class, no minimum recovery shall be applicable; and

(ii) the total recovery under this subparagraph in any class action or series of class actions arising out of the same failure to comply by the same depository institution shall not be more than the lesser of $500,000 or 1 percent of the net worth of the depository institution involved; and

(3) in the case of any successful action to enforce any liability under paragraph (1) or (2), the costs of the action, together with a reasonable attorney's fee as determined by the court.

(b) CLASS ACTION AWARDS.—In determining the total amount of an award in a class action, the court shall consider, among other relevant factors—

(1) the amount of any actual damages awarded;

(2) the frequency and persistence of failures of compliance;

(3) the resources of the depository institution;

(4) the number of persons adversely affected; and

(5) the extent to which the failure of compliance was intentional.

(c) BONA FIDE ERRORS.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—A depository institution may not be held liable in any action brought under this section for a violation of this title if the depository institution demonstrates by a preponderance of the evidence that the violation was not intentional and resulted from a bona fide error, notwithstanding the maintenance of procedures reasonably adapted to avoid any such error.

(2) EXAMPLES.—Examples of a bona fide error include clerical, calculation, computer malfunction and programming, and printing errors. An error of legal judgment with respect to a depository institution's obligation under this title is not a bona fide error.

(d) JURISDICTION.—Any action under this section may be brought in any United States district court, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction, within one year after the date of the occurrence of the violation involved.

(e) RELIANCE ON BOARD RULINGS.—No provision of this section imposing any liability shall apply to any act done or omitted in good faith in conformity with any rule, regulation, or interpretation thereof by the Board, or in conformity with any interpretation or approval by an official or employee of the Federal Reserve System duly authorized by the Board to issue such interpretation or approval under procedures prescribed by the Board, notwithstanding, the fact that after such act or omission has occurred, such rule, regulation, interpretation, or approval is amended, rescinded, or determined by judicial or other authority to be invalid for any reason.

(f) NOTIFICATION OF AND ADJUSTMENT FOR ERRORS.—A depository institution shall not be liable under this section or section 610 for any failure to comply with any requirement imposed under this title with respect to any account if—

(1) before—

(A) the end of the 60-day period beginning on the date on which the depository institution discovered the failure to comply;

(B) any action is instituted against the depository institution by the account holder under this section with respect to such failure to comply; and

(C) any written notice of such failure to comply is received by the depository institution from the account holder, the depository institution notifies the account holder of the failure of such institution to comply with such requirement; and

(2) the depository institution makes such adjustments as may be necessary with respect to such account to ensure that—

(A) the account holder will not be liable for any amount in excess of the amount actually disclosed with respect to any fee or charge;

(B) the account holder will not be liable for any fee or charge imposed under any condition not actually disclosed; and

(C) interest on amounts in such account will accrue at the annual percentage yield, and under the conditions, actually disclosed (and credit will be provided for interest already accrued at a different annual percentage yield and under different conditions than the yield or conditions disclosed).

(g) MULTIPLE INTERESTS IN 1 ACCOUNT.—If more than 1 person holds an interest in any account—

(1) the minimum and maximum amounts of liability under subsection (a)(2)(A) for any failure to comply with the requirements of this title shall apply with respect to such account; and

(2) the court shall determine the manner in which the amount of any such liability with respect to such account shall be distributed among such persons.

(h) CONTINUING FAILURE TO DISCLOSE.—

(1) CERTAIN CONTINUING FAILURES TREATED AS 1 VIOLATION.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the continuing failure of any depository institution to disclose any particular term required to be disclosed under this title with respect to a particular account shall be treated as a single violation for purposes of determining the amount of any liability of such institution under subsection (a) for such failure to disclose.

(2) SUBSEQUENT FAILURE TO DISCLOSE.—The continuing failure of any depository institution to disclose any particular term required to be disclosed under this title with respect to a particular account after judgment has been rendered in favor of the account holder in connection with a prior failure to disclose such term shall be treated as a subsequent violation for purposes of determining liability under subsection (a).

(3) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 610.—This subsection shall not limit or otherwise affect the enforcement power under section 610 of any agency referred to in subsection (a) of such section.

SEC. 612. CREDIT UNIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—No regulation prescribed by the Board under this title shall apply directly with respect to any depository institution described in clause (iv) of section 19(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Reserve Act.

(b) REGULATIONS PRESCRIBED BY THE NCUA.—Within 90 days of the effective date of any regulation prescribed by the Board under this title, the National Credit Union Administration Board shall prescribe a regulation substantially similar to the regulation prescribed by the Board taking into account the unique nature of credit unions and the limitations under which they may pay dividends on member accounts.

SEC. 613. REVIEW OF DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS FOR OPEN-END MANAGEMENT INVESTMENT COMPANIES.

The Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a-1 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 66. REVIEW OF DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS FOR YIELDS AND TERMS.

"Not later than January 1, 1989, and annually thereafter, the Commission shall consult with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (and any other agency it deems appropriate) to review the regulations prescribed under this title and the Securities Act of 1933 and the regulations prescribed under the Truth in Savings and Investments Act to determine whether such regulations are providing consumers the ability to effectively compare savings and investments options. If at any time as a result of such review, the Commission finds its regulations are not providing consumers the ability to effectively compare savings and investments options, it shall modify its regulations to insure that consumers have such ability.".

SEC. 614. EFFECT ON STATE LAW.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The provisions of this title shall supersede any provisions of the law of any State relating to the disclosure of yields payable or terms for accounts to the extent such State law requires the disclosure of such yields or terms for accounts. The Board is authorized to determine whether such inconsistencies exist.

(b) BALANCE ON WHICH INTEREST IS CALCULATED.—The provisions of this title shall supersede any provisions of any State law relating to the determination of the balance on which interest is calculated to the extent such State law specifies the manner for determining the balance on which interest is calculated.

TITLE VII—INSURANCE ACTIVITIES

SEC. 701. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Bank Holding Company and National Bank Improvements Act of 1989".

SEC. 702. AMENDMENTS TO THE BANK HOLDING COMPANY ACT OF 1956 RELATING TO INSURANCE ACTIVITIES.

(a) DEFINITION.—Section 2 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(p) INSURANCE ACTIVITIES.—For the purposes of this Act, the term 'insurance activities' means providing insurance as principal, agent, or broker.

(b) INSURANCE ACTIVITIES.—Section 4 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1843) is amended—

(1) by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(j) INSURANCE ACTIVITIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section or section 3 of this Act (but subject to paragraphs (2) and (3)), a bank holding company or any bank or nonbank subsidiary or affiliate thereof shall not engage in insurance activities in the United States, except that a bank holding company or any bank or nonbank subsidiary or affiliate thereof may provide insurance—

"(A) pursuant to subsection (c)(8) of this section;

"(B) through a State bank or subsidiary thereof to the extent permissible under clause (i), (ii), (iii), (v), or (vi) of subsection (c)(8)(C) and under State law;

"(C) if—

"(i) the insurance is provided by a State bank subsidiary of a bank holding company, or by a subsidiary of that State bank;

"(ii) that bank or subsidiary thereof is located in the one State where the operations of that bank holding company's banking subsidiaries are principally conducted for purposes of section 3(d) of this Act;

"(iii) the insurance activities engaged in by the bank or subsidiary thereof are authorized by State law; and

"(iv) the insurance is provided only to residents of that State, natural persons employed in that State, or natural persons otherwise present in that State; or

"(D) pursuant to section 5136 or 5136B of the Revised Statutes.

"(2) EXCLUSIONS.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to insurance activities of any company or institution pursuant to section 3(f) or the proviso to subsection (a)(2) of this section.

"(3) AUTHORITY TO CONTINUE CERTAIN ACTIVITIES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, a bank holding company may continue to—

"(A) engage in any insurance activity through a State bank or subsidiary thereof if—

"(i) the bank was acquired after December 31, 1984, and before March 2, 1988, pursuant to Board approval under section 3(d) of this Act;

"(ii) the bank provides insurance only to residents of that State, natural persons employed in that State, or natural persons otherwise present in that State; and

"(iii) such insurance insures against the same types of risks as insurance provided by the bank or subsidiary as of the day before its acquisition by the out-of-state bank holding company or as of March 2, 1988, or against functionally equivalent risks;

"(B) provide title insurance coverage through a State bank or subsidiary thereof if the bank was required to be empowered to provide title insurance as a condition of its initial chartering under State law;

"(C) continue to engage in any insurance activity lawfully engaged in prior to the date of enactment of this subsection, in the State of Indiana and in any State contiguous thereto, if the bank holding company or subsidiary thereof is located in the State of Indiana and was acquired on June 30, 1986, pursuant to Board approval under section 3(d) of this Act issued on May 28, 1986;

"(D) engage in any insurance activity through a State bank or subsidiary thereof if—

"(i) the bank is described in clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A); and

"(ii) the insurance activity of the State bank or subsidiary thereof is limited (I) to life, accident, and health insurance activities for which it has been licensed prior to March 2, 1988, pursuant to State law enacted after July 20, 1987, and in effect prior to September 28, 1987, and (II) to the State in which it has been licensed; or

"(E) provide through a State bank, or subsidiary thereof, pursuant to authorization by the appropriate State banking regulator prior to March 2, 1988, financial guaranty insurance. For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'financial guaranty insurance' means insurance against the risk of default on State and local government debt obligations, corporate debt and other monetary obligations, pass-through securities (other than those secured by mortgages on real property which are insurable by a mortgage guaranty insurer), and installment purchase agreements executed as a condition of sale, but such term does not include life, property, or casualty insurance. This subparagraph does not preclude any interested party from challenging the legality of these described activities under section 4(c)(8) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, as in effect on March 2, 1988.

"(4) DEFINITIONS.—

"(A) INSURANCE.—For purposes of this subsection and subsections (c)(8) and (c)(15)(J)(iv) of this section, the term 'insurance' means—

"(i) traditional insurance products and services;

"(ii) variable annuity contracts; and

"(iii) variable life insurance contracts.

"(B) RESIDENT.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'residents of that State' includes natural persons who are residents of the State and—

"(i) companies incorporated in, or organized under the laws of, the State,

"(ii) companies licensed to do business in the State, and

"(iii) companies having an office in the State."; and

(2) in subsection (c)(8)(C)(iv), by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end the following: ", except that—

"(I) the authorization to provide insurance pursuant to this clause shall terminate if control of the company providing the insurance is acquired by a bank holding company—

"(a) on or after October 15, 1982, in a transaction requiring Board approval under section 3(d) if the bank holding company did not obtain board approval to engage in such insurance activities under this section prior to March 2, 1988; or

"(b) on or after March 2, 1988;

unless such acquiring company is a successor or is and continues to be a bank holding company with total assets of $50,000,000 or less; and

"(II) no company that is an affiliate of a company providing insurance pursuant to this clause shall provide insurance pursuant to this clause on or after March 2, 1988, unless such affiliated company itself meets the requirements of this clause.".

SEC. 703. AMENDMENTS TO THE NATIONAL BANK ACT.

(a) Section 5136 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 24) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a) IN GENERAL.—" immediately before "Upon duly making and filing"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) LIMITATION ON INSURANCE POWERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), a national bank, or subsidiary (as defined in section 2(d) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956) of a national bank, may not engage in insurance activities in the United States except to the extent that the insurance is limited to assuring the repayment of the outstanding balance due on any specific extension of credit by the national bank in the event of the death, disability, or involuntary unemployment of the debtor and except to the extent provided in section 5136B of this title.

"(2) EXCEPTIONS.—Paragraph (1) does not prohibit (A) any company engaged in municipal bond guarantee insurance activities pursuant to authorization by the Comptroller of the Currency on or before May 2, 1985, from continuing to engage in such activities, or (B) any company lawfully engaged in title insurance activities as of March 2, 1988, from continuing to engage in such activities, if such activities are limited to the State in which the bank is located, and if the bank is not acquired after March 2, 1988, by a bank holding company the principal banking operations of which are conducted in another State.

"(3) INSURANCE DEFINITION.—The term 'insurance' has the meaning given to that term in section 4(j)(4) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956.

"(4) INSURANCE ACTIVITIES DEFINED.—The term 'insurance activities' means providing insurance as principal, agent, or broker.".

(b) Chapter 1 of title LXII of the Revised Statutes is amended by inserting after section 5136A the following new section:

"SEC. 5136B. LIMITED INSURANCE POWERS FOR NATIONAL BANKS LOCATED IN RURAL AREAS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—In addition to the powers vested by law in national banking associations, any such association located in a place that has a population not exceeding 5,000 (as shown by the preceding decennial census) may sell insurance as defined in section 5136(b)(3) so long as such insurance activities are confined to that place, and the insurance is sold only to residents of the State in which the association is located or to natural persons employed in that State. For purposes of this subsection, the term 'residents of that State' includes natural persons who are residents of the State and (1) companies incorporated in, or organized under the laws of, the State, (2) companies licensed to do business in the State, and (3) companies having an office in the State.

"(b) ADDITIONAL LIMITATIONS.—No national banking association described in subsection (a) may—

"(1) assume or guarantee the payment of any premium on insurance policies issued through the agency of the association by the insurance company for which such association is acting as agent pursuant to subsection (a); and

"(2) guarantee the truth of any statement made by an assured in filing such person's application for insurance.".

(c) EFFECT ON CERTAIN COMPANIES.—This section shall not affect the ability of—

(1) a national bank or a subsidiary thereof, located in Oregon or Washington, to continue to engage in insurance activities lawfully engaged in as of March 2, 1988, within the State in which the main office of such national bank is located; or

(2) a national bank chartered in 1882 (or a subsidiary thereof) to continue to engage in insurance activities in which it was lawfully engaged as of March 2, 1988, within 30 miles of such bank's main office if such main office is not within 30 miles of any city that had a population exceeding 150,000 under the 1980 census.

SEC. 704. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The provisions of this title shall take effect on March 5, 1987.

TITLE VIII—MISCELLANEOUS

SEC. 801. STUDY OF HOSTILE ACQUISITIONS OF UNITED STATES BANKS.

(a) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section to require the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (hereinafter referred to as the "Board") to make a study of the effects that hostile acquisitions in the banking industry could have on the safety and soundness of banking in the United States.

(b) STUDY.—The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, in consultation with the Attorney General, the Comptroller General of the United States, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, shall prepare a study of the effects that hostile acquisitions in the banking industry could have on the United States banking and financial markets. The study shall pay particular attention to the potential adverse effects on safety, soundness, and stability of banks and the banking industry of hostile acquisitions of United States banking institutions and shall address the following issues:

(1) the effects that hostile acquisitions could have on consolidation within the banking industry, taking into consideration the continuing removal of barriers to interstate banking;

(2) the effects that hostile acquisitions could have on concentration of economic resources generally, and the specific markets for banking and financial services, including securities markets in which banks are eligible to participate;

(3) the effects that hostile acquisitions could have on instability, uncertainty and confidence in banking, and on consumer and small business services;

(4) whether specific regulations are needed to process acquisition applications that proceed on a hostile basis rather than a consensual basis in order to ensure—

(A) the adequacy and quality of capital, particularly with respect to equity capital, and the adverse consequences of the use of debt in hostile acquisitions;

(B) the quality of assets in the surviving institution due to the disposition of assets to meet regulatory capital requirements;

(C) the strength of the surviving institution against unforeseen weaknesses that could have been discovered had adequate due diligence been conducted as is done in a consensual acquisition;

(D) the strength of the target, acquiring, or surviving institutions to withstand the adverse consequences of the use of special defensive and protective steps taken to prevent a hostile acquisition from being consummated;

(5) whether special regulations are needed, once a contested application has been approved, to ensure that the conditions set forth in the approval order are met, and that the consolidation of the two institutions can proceed without undue disruption to either the target or acquiring institution;

(6) whether foreign banks or other potential acquirers of banking resources in the United States should be permitted to make hostile acquisitions of United States banking institutions;

(7) whether the stock market decline and related problems of October 1987 impair the ability of banking institutions to raise capital to conduct or resist hostile acquisitions; and

(8) any other issues which the Board deems necessary and appropriate.

(c) HEARINGS.—The Board and the other governmental agencies involved in the study shall hold public hearings on hostile acquisitions of banking institutions and solicit opinions and testimony as they deem necessary.

(d) REPORT.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Board shall transmit a report containing the results of the study, along with its recommendations for legislation, to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 802. LIMITATIONS ON GRANDFATHERED NONBANK BANKS OWNED BY BANK HOLDING COMPANIES.

Section 4(g)(1) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1843(g)(1)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "or" at the end of subparagraph (A);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(3) by inserting at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) accept demand deposits or deposits that the depositor may withdraw by check or similar means for payment to third parties or others, or make commercial loans, unless authorized to do so by the Board as of August 10, 1987.".

SEC. 803. JOINT MARKETING RESTRICTIONS.

(a) BANK HOLDING COMPANIES.—Section 4(f)(3)(B)(ii) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1843(f)(3)(B)(ii)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or subsection (c)(15)" after "subsection (c)(8)" the first place it appears; and

(2) by striking "by or through an affiliate (other than an affiliate that engages only in activities permissible for bank holding companies under subsection (c)(8)" and inserting "in connection with products or services of an affiliate that are not permissible for a bank holding company to provide under subsection (c)(8) or subsection (c)(15)".

(b) SAVINGS AND LOAN HOLDING COMPANIES.—Section 408(p)(2)(A) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730a(p)(2)(A)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or section 4(c)(15)" after "section 4(c)(8)" the first place it appears; and

(2) by striking "by or through an affiliate (other than an affiliate that engages only in activities permissible for bank holding companies under section 4(c)" and inserting "in connection with products or services of an affiliate that are not permissible for a bank holding company to provide under section 4(c)(8) or section 4(c)(15)".

SEC. 804. INDUSTRIAL BANKS.

(a) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 2(c)(2)(H)(i)(I) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841(c)(2)(H)(i)(I)) is amended by inserting "or deposits" after "demand deposits".

(b) ACTIVITIES AUTHORIZED AS OF MARCH 5, 1987.—Section 2(c)(2)(H)(ii) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841(c)(2)(H)(ii)) is amended by inserting after "was not lawfully engaged" the words ", or authorized to engage,".

SEC. 805. STATUS OF CERTAIN REGISTERED INVESTMENT COMPANY.

A corporation, incorporated on March 29, 1985, under the laws of the State of Maryland, and duly registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940 on February 21, 1986, all of the present shareholders of which are savings banks, shall be deemed to have been registered under such Act on the date of its incorporation.

SEC. 806. AMENDMENT TO THE FEDERAL POWER ACT.

Section 305(b) of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 825d(b)) is amended by adding the following at the end of the subsection:

"Any person now holding or proposing to hold the position of officer or director of a public utility and officer or director of a bank, trust company, or banking association is authorized to hold such positions without authorization of the Commission, as long as such bank, trust company, or banking association does not underwrite or participate in the marketing of securities (including commercial paper) of the public utility for which the person serves or proposes to serve as an officer or director.".

SEC. 807. EXPEDITED FUNDS AVAILABILITY.

(a) REASONABLE EXCEPTIONS.—Section 604 of the Expedited Funds Availability Act (12 U.S.C. 4003) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b), by inserting "subparagraph (A), (B), (C), or (F) of subsection (a)(2) or" after "limitation established under"; and

(2) in subsection (d), by inserting "(a)(2)," after "subsections".

(b) DISCLOSURE.—Section 604(f) of such Act is amended by adding the following:

"(4) NOTICE WITH RESPECT TO CASHIER'S, CERTIFIED, AND SIMILAR CHECKS.—A depository institution issuing a check described in section 603(a)(2)(F) in excess of $5,000 shall notify the person to whom it issued that funds may be made available later than the time specified in section 603(a).".

SEC. 808. PAYROLL TAX FILING SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS.

Section 2(c)(2)(D) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841(c)(2)(D)) is amended—

(1) in clause (i), by inserting after "in trust funds" the following: "or in Treasury tax and loan accounts maintained by a payroll tax filing service organization,";

(2) in clause (iii), by inserting after "third parties or others" the following: ", except for deposits of funds by a payroll tax filing service organization in Treasury tax and loan accounts or in trust pending payment of such funds for Federal, State, or local tax obligations,"; and

(3) in clause (iv)(I), by inserting before the semicolon the following: "except in connection with the transfer by a payroll tax filing service organization of funds held in trust pending payment of such funds for Federal, State, or local tax obligations".

SEC. 809. EFFECTUATING THE PRINCIPLE OF NATIONAL TREATMENT FOR BANKS.

The International Banking Act of 1978 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"NATIONAL TREATMENT

"SEC. 15. (a) GENERAL RULE.—If the President or his designee has made a written determination that a foreign country is described in subsection (b) of this section, has transmitted the determination to a Federal banking agency, and has not revoked the determination, the Federal banking agency may, notwithstanding any other provision of law, deny any application by an entity described in subsection (c) that requires the approval of that agency, or disapprove any notice by such an entity that is subject to disapproval by that agency, if—

"(1) that entity is chartered or incorporated or has its principal place of business in that foreign country; or

"(2) any person that directly or indirectly controls that entity resides, is chartered or incorporated, or has its principal place of business in that foreign country.

"(b) DENIAL OF NATIONAL TREATMENT.—A country is described in this subsection for purposes of this section if that country does not accord to United States banks and bank holding companies the same competitive opportunities as it accords to domestic banks and bank holding companies.

"(c) CERTAIN FOREIGN ENTITIES DESCRIBED.—The following entities are described in this subsection for purposes of this paragraph:

"(1) a foreign bank; and

"(2) any other company subject to the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 under section 8(a) of this Act.".

SEC. 810. EFFECTUATING THE PRINCIPLE OF NATIONAL TREATMENT FOR BROKERS AND DEALERS.

Section 15(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78o(b)) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(11)(A) The following provisions shall apply if the President or his designee has published a written determination that a foreign country is described in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph and has not revoked that determination:

"(i) No person of that foreign country, acting directly or indirectly, shall acquire control of any registered broker or dealer unless—

"(I) the Commission has been given notice 45 days in advance of that proposed acquisition, in such form as the Commission shall prescribe by rule; and

"(II) the Commission has not prohibited that acquisition.

"(ii) The Commission may, by order, extend the notice period with respect to any particular acquisition for no more than 60 days.

"(iii) The Commission, consistent with the protection of investors and the maintenance of fair and orderly markets, may—

"(I) deny any application for registration under this subsection filed by a person of that foreign country; and

"(II) prohibit, by order, any person of that foreign country from acquiring control of a registered broker or dealer, irrespective of when the acquisition was initiated.

"(B) A country is described in this subparagraph for purposes of this paragraph if that country does not accord to United States brokers and dealers the same competitive opportunities as it accords to domestic brokers and dealers.

"(C) A person is a 'person of a foreign country' for purposes of this paragraph if that person, or another person that directly or indirectly controls that person, is a resident of a foreign country, is organized under the laws of that country, or has its principal place of business in that country.".

SEC. 811. STUDY OF MERGER OF COMMERCE AND BANKING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Board of Governors shall conduct a study of the need, if any, to continue the separation of full-service banking and commerce in the United States. In carrying out such study, the Board shall consult with all appropriate departments and agencies of the United States and representatives of all segments of the financial services and other industries.

(b) PARTICULAR AREAS OF STUDY.—In carrying out the study under this section, the Board shall in particular examine—

(1) the economic, regulatory, and consumer issues involved in continuing or eliminating the separation of banking and commerce;

(2) the competitive issues involved in eliminating the separation of banking and commerce, including the adequacy of antitrust and other laws relating to the maintenance of other competition; and

(3) organizational issues, particularly with respect to the appropriate types and structures of organizations that may engage in full-service banking, financial services, and commercial activities.

(c) REPORT REQUIRED.—Not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall transmit the report required by this section to the Congress.

SEC. 812. INCREASED PENALTIES UNDER THE BANK HOLDING COMPANY ACT.

(a) Section 8(a) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 is amended by striking "$1,000" and inserting "$50,000", by striking "$10,000" and inserting "$100,000", and by striking "one year" and inserting "three years".

Section 8(b)(1) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1847(b)(1)) is amended by striking "$1,000" and inserting "$5,000".

SEC. 813. FINANCIAL CONSUMERS ASSOCIATIONS.

(a) NATIONAL BANKS.—Whenever a State has by statute established a consumer membership organization subject to a statutory charter mandate to inform and represent consumers in the financial service area and subject to statutorily prescribed democratic rules of governance and such State has also required State chartered insured banks, as defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, to include in their deposit account statement mailings to consumers a statutorily prescribed insert concerning the consumer membership organization, national banks shall comply with the insert requirements.

(b) SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.—Section 5 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1464) is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(t) FINANCIAL CONSUMERS ASSOCIATIONS.—Whenever a State has by statute established a consumer membership organization subject to a statutory charter mandate to inform and represent consumers in the financial service area and subject to statutorily prescribed democratic rules of governance and such State has also required State chartered insured institutions as defined in section 401 of the National Housing Act to include in their deposit account statement mailings to consumers a statutorily prescribed insert concerning the consumer membership organization, associations, as defined in subsection (d), shall comply with the insert requirement.".

(c) CREDIT UNIONS.—Title I of the Federal Credit Union Act (12 U.S.C. 1751 et seq.) is amended by adding the following new section:

"FINANCIAL CONSUMERS ASSOCIATIONS

"SEC. 130. Whenever a State has by statute established a consumer membership organization subject to a statutory charter mandate to inform and represent consumers in the financial service area and subject to statutorily prescribed democratic rules of governance and such State has also required State chartered insured credit unions as defined in section 101(7) of this Act to include in their deposit account statement mailings to consumers a statutorily prescribed insert concerning the consumer membership organization, Federal credit unions shall comply with the insert requirement.".

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I rise today to join the senior Senator from Illinois in cosponsoring the reintroduction of the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act. As most observers of financial legislation know, Senator Proxmire and I introduced the original version of this bill in the last Congress, and it eventually passed the full Senate by the overwhelming margin of 94 to 2. The bill was the product of a hard-fought compromise in the Banking Committee built on a voluminous hearing record and many months of intense negotiations. Unfortunately, it died at the end of the last Congress when the House of Representatives failed to act.

Before I describe the key aspects of the bill, let me say that I did not agree then and do not agree now with every aspect of it. But it was obviously a sound compromise since so many of my colleagues subsequently voted for it. That is the principal reason why I support its reintroduction today. We in this body may not return to these issues any time soon because of the problems of the thrift industry, but sooner or later we will have to. When we do, this bill will be the marker, the reminder of a consensus that was reached to address some very thorny problems. Rather than begin all over again, we should use this consensus and build on it to usher our financial system into the modern era.

In essence, the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act would repeal key sections of the 56-year-old Glass-Steagall Act, replacing them with a very carefully conceived statutory framework that would dramatically change the financial institution landscape. Bank holding companies would be permitted to engage in the full range of securities activities other than corporate equities, but only through separately capitalized holding company subsidiaries called securities affiliates. Stringent safeguards or "firewalls" would be imposed between the bank and its securities affiliate for two very important reasons: to prevent the bank's exposure to undue risk, and to prevent the securities affiliate from using the bank's Federal benefits—like deposit insurance and access to the payments system—to gain an unfair competitive advantage over securities companies that are not affiliated with banks.

Taken as a whole, this new financial structure would permit U.S. bank holding companies to regain their international competitive position without compromising the fundamental safety and soundness of the system. This is absolutely critical in an era where other countries are targeting financial services as the next major U.S. industry to challenge. We cannot continue to hamstring our best financial competitors and expect them to survive, let alone excel. This legislation addresses that problem.

This bill also contains provisions, requested by all of the bank and thrift regulatory agencies, which strengthen their enforcement powers. In light of the continuing studies which demonstrate that fraud and insider abuse are key elements in many bank and thrift institution failures, the importance of these amendments appears obvious.

The bill also contains several provisions intended to provide additional consumer protection, primarily in the form of additional disclosure requirements. Thus, for example, depository institutions would be required to make detailed disclosures of yields and rates and fees in deposit account advertisements.

With respect to insurance, the bill includes a carefully crafted compromise title that essentially permits bank holding companies to engage in insurance activities through State bank subsidiaries in States that authorize such activities for their banks. The bank holding company would have to have its principal banking operations in that State, and the insurance products would have to be sold to residents of that State, persons employed in that State, or persons otherwise present in that State. This title also resolves controversies involving the insurance powers of national banks.

Finally, the bill includes certain amendments designed to streamline the application procedure under the Bank Holding Company Act. This amendment, which has been suggested by the Federal Reserve Board, will substantially relieve the regulatory burden placed upon the banking industry and at the same time allow the Federal Reserve to make better use of its staff.

Mr. President, while this bill ought to be enacted, it is also true that Congress has dragged its heels for too long on this issue. It has had many opportunities to act, and has seized none of them. In the meantime the regulators, like the Federal Reserve Board in its recent section 20 decision, have moved forward cautiously with determinations that provide an extremely limited amount of new competitive opportunities for banks and bank holding companies. That is entirely appropriate. They have a legal duty to act with reasonable promptness on applications before them, consistent with their interpretations of statutes; their determinations have been conservative and prudent; in my own view they have been sound on the merits; and as mentioned above, Congress simply has not demonstrated that it is prepared to act on these issues any time soon.

Let me conclude by reiterating a key point: this bill represents a carefully constructed compromise among many conflicting interests. I certainly believe it could be improved, while at the same time I am fully aware that others would like to dilute it and load it up with regressive provisions. If we begin to take the latter course, I will not feel bound by this compromise product, however much sense it might make to a broad range of interests.

I believe that Congress must address these issues, and this bill reflects the type of consensus that we will most certainly need.●

S. 306. A bill to amend the Social Security Act to make certain modifications in the Medicare Program with respect to payments made under such program to hospitals located in rural areas, to improve the delivery of health services to individuals residing in such areas, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

EQUITY FOR RURAL HOSPITALS ACT

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, today, I am introducing the Equity for Rural Hospitals Act of 1989, a bill I consider essential to the well-being of Medicare beneficiaries and all Americans in rural areas who depend on their local hospitals for the delivery of health care. I am pleased to be joined by my distinguished colleague, the minority leader from Kansas, Senator DOLE, along with 12 of my colleagues from around the country, in introducing this bill. The Equity for Rural Hospitals Act provides both urgently needed short-term relief for the escalating problems faced by rural hospitals and long-term structural reforms as well.

In 1988, 43 rural hospitals closed across the United States, bringing the total number of closures in rural areas since 1984 to 159. My home State of Texas has the unfortunate distinction of having led the Nation in closures with 18 hospitals closing their doors last year. But my concern goes well beyond the borders of my own State, Mr. President. Hospital administrators surveyed recently by Touche Ross suggest that as many as 600 hospitals could close their doors in the next 5 years. In particular, almost 60 percent of the administrators of rural hospitals believe their institutions are vulnerable to financial failure. This is an intolerable situation which requires immediate attention.

Rural hospitals are the cornerstone of the health care delivery system in their communities. Without them, people residing in small, often isolated areas can be denied vital health care services. This is particularly true for older Americans enrolled in Medicare; the elderly comprise 12 percent of the Nation's population as a whole, but 25 percent of the population of rural areas. The elderly use more health services and are less likely to seek health care outside their communities, according to recent studies. The closure of community hospitals does not just affect the elderly, however. Patients who suffer acute illnesses or injuries frequently require medical stabilization at a local hospital before being transferred to a tertiary care facility. In reality, a rural hospital closure has a far-reaching effect on every aspect of community life. A major source of employment is lost. Without a hospital, it is difficult to attract physicians. Rural communities with no hospital can also experience difficulty in attracting new industry.

Each year since the creation of the Medicare prospective payment system [PPS], the financial status of most rural hospitals has gotten worse. According to recent analyses by the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission [PROPAC], over half of rural hospitals are losing money treating Medicare patients. In the third year of the system, rural facilities, which account for half the Nation's hospitals, made up almost 80 percent of the institutions that fared worst under PPS. Major changes in health care delivery under PPS have contributed to the current situation. There have been dramatic reductions in both the number of patients admitted to the hospital and the average length of an inpatient stay. Small rural hospitals have been forced to spread their fixed operating costs over fewer patients, although may of these costs—24-hour laboratory services, emergency room, and the like—are the same as those facing larger hospitals in urban areas.

These problems were compounded by the way in which PPS was originally designed. I have heard time and time again from administrators of rural hospitals that they believe the system's most unfair and unjustified feature is the differential of about 12 to 13 percent between what Medicare pays rural and urban hospitals. The basis for this differential was that, historically, rural hospitals have on average incurred lower costs. No one is arguing that Medicare should ignore the higher costs incurred by hospitals where the more complex cases are treated or where higher wages drive up average costs. However, Mr. President, the basic PPS system should not systematically penalize rural hospitals because they have been able to deliver quality health care at lower costs.

PPS is not working for small rural hospitals, and it needs to be modified if they are going to survive.

Specifically, Mr. President, the bill calls for eliminating the current differential between Medicare PPS rates for urban and rural hospitals in favor of a single national rate for all hospitals. Because such a change would have a substantial financial impact on the more than 5,000 hospitals participating in PPS, the new national rate would be phased in over a period of 4 years beginning in fiscal year 1992. The bill requires the Secretary of HHS to conduct a thorough analysis of each special feature of PPS and to develop a legislative proposal that would treat rural and urban hospitals equitably while recognizing legitimate cost differences among institutions. For example, Mr. President, one issue of concern to many hospital administrators in urban areas is that PPS in no way recognizes the severity of a patient's illness. All patients with the same diagnosis generate the same Medicare payment, even though urban hospitals often tend to treat more severely ill patients. I hope that the Secretary's report will yield a better understanding of any shortcomings facing all hospitals—urban and rural—under PPS. This bill takes an important step toward making PPS more equitable for all hospitals. The Secretary's report would be due to Congress early in 1991, leaving ample time for analysis by CBO and PROPAC.

However, the Nation's most vulnerable rural hospitals cannot wait until 1991 for action. Therefore, on an interim basis, the bill provides financial relief for rural hospitals with fewer than 100 beds that depend on Medicare for 70 percent or more of their revenues. While these hospitals would remain on PPS, and would continue to have the opportunity to benefit financially from any management improvements, they would be protected from financial losses in treating Medicare patients. Mr. President, PPS is simply not working for small hospitals. Until more permanent relief can be assured under the single national rate, I am deeply concerned that institutions which are significant sources of care for the elderly not be forced to close their doors.

Another feature of PPS which bears reexamination is the special status accorded 360 sole community hospitals [SCH's]. These hospitals qualify for special status under guidelines issued by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, because they are isolated by location, weather conditions, travel distance, and lack of other facilities. They are paid a special rate comprised of 75 percent of their own hospital-specific costs and 25 percent of the PPS rate for their region. Over time, the shortcomings of this special payment formula have become clear, and indeed PROPAC tells us that many hospitals that might qualify as SCH's do not apply for this status because of flaws in the current system. For example, hospital-specific costs for each case have gone up much faster than increases allowed by Congress as the volume of cases declines, and the regional PPS rate in many cases is well below the national rate all hospitals receive.

Therefore, Mr. President, S. 306 requires the Secretary of HHS, where it would be to the SCH's financial advantage, to recompute SCH rates to use more recent information on hospital-specific costs per case and national, rather than regional, PPS rates. I hope this will make SCH status more attractive to many hospitals, particularly in the South, where this valuable option has been underused. The bill also requires the Secretary of HHS to take into account the time it takes individuals to travel to the next nearest hospital—as well as distance—and a hospital's market share in determining whether it qualifies for SCH status.

Mr. President, I am concerned not only with the problems of isolated rural hospitals, but also with the special problems facing rural facilities which are located close enough to an urban area that they are forced to compete with more generously compensated hospitals for the same labor and materials. The Committee on Finance in recent years has received numerous requests for special treatment from rural hospitals in this situation, especially because the Health Care Financing Administration [HCFA] has refused to use its administrative authority to grant relief for even the most legitimate inequities faced by these border hospitals. I must confess my disappointment and frustration at the last administration's willingness to take administrative action in this area, despite repeated requests from myself and many other Members of the Senate. As a result, the bill calls for the creation of a Medicare Geographic Classification Review Board which will examine the requests of rural border hospitals who believe they are unfairly treated by Medicare. I believe this is preferable to continuing to legislate case-by-case exceptions for border hospitals.

The bill we are introducing today expands two demonstration programs created in the 1987 budget reconciliation bill that have proved to be of great interest to rural hospital administrators. Within the last 2 weeks, HCFA has announced its plans for awarding 2-year transition grants to about 90 rural hospitals where creative managers will be investigating ways to modify the types of services they deliver to improve service to their communities. There has been tremendous interest in these grants from rural hospital administrators, who have been working on their own with limited resources to explore creative ways to diversify, such as adding outpatient facilities and converting acute-care beds to long-term care use. However, many institutions will be unable to qualify because the program received only $8.9 million in fiscal year 1989, although $15 million was authorized. Under the bill, the program's authorization would be extended through fiscal year 1992, and its authorization increased to $25 million annually. Further, the Secretary of HHS would be permitted to waive the program's limit of $50,000 annually for each hospital should such a waiver help the hospital actually implement changes in its mission.

Studies of rural hospitals that have been forced to close show that one important factor is an absence of physicians in the community. Physician shortages are particularly severe in the smallest, most isolated rural areas. Even the most generous reimbursement system does a rural hospital little good if no doctors exist to treat the community's patients and to refer patients to the hospital. Physicians—most of whom are trained in urban teaching facilities—have little exposure to clinical practice in small rural communities and are unlikely to consider practicing in an unfamiliar environment. Therefore, Mr. President, the bill also expands from 4 sites to 10 a demonstration program created in last year's reconciliation bill that makes it easier for teaching hospitals to send resident physicians to rural areas during their training. Under these demonstrations, Medicare will help pay any additional costs the teaching hospital may incur. I believe that this expansion is warranted not only by the high level of interest already expressed by at least 80 rural hospitals, but because of the benefit to resident physicians who will gain valuable clinical experience and rural communities which will be served by an additional primary care provider.

Finally, Mr. President, S. 306 recognizes the importance of nursing to the Nation's health care system. It is well known that we face a nursing shortage of crisis proportions in this country, and I am particularly concerned about the effects of this shortage on rural communities. I am pleased that we were able to include in the tax technicals bill enacted shortly before the end of the last Congress a demonstration project to promote graduate clinical training for nurses, legislation that was one of my highest priorities last year. Under those demonstrations, hospitals that cooperate with nursing schools to offer expanded clinical training opportunities for nurses can qualify for Medicare payments for stipends, supervision and classroom costs for 5 years. In this bill, I am proposing to create new demonstrations focusing on clinical training for undergraduate nurses. By easing the financial burdens facing providers, schools and students, these demonstrations will encourage students to enter the nursing profession and, at the same time, expand clinical training opportunities, thereby putting students at the bedside to provide patient care.

Mr. President, the Senate Finance Committee will consider S. 306 during this Congress, and I encourage my colleagues to join me and the Republican leader as cosponsors of this important measure.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 306

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Equity for Rural Hospitals Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. ELIMINATION OF AVERAGE STANDARDIZED AMOUNTS FOR HOSPITALS IN DIFFERENT AREAS AND CREATION OF SEVERITY ADJUSTMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") or the designee of the Secretary shall design a legislative proposal to eliminate the system of determining separate average standardized amounts for subsection (d) hospitals (as defined in section 1886(d)(1)(B) of the Social Security Act) classified as being located in large urban, other urban, or rural areas under section 1886(d)(2)(D) of such Act. Such proposal shall include—

(1) a transition period from the current system of determining separate average standardized amounts to a system based on one single rate beginning in fiscal year 1992, with such single rate to be completely in effect by fiscal year 1995;

(2) recommendations, where appropriate, for modifying, eliminating, or maintaining additional payments or adjustments for teaching hospitals, rural referral centers, sole community hospitals, disproportionate share hospitals, and outlier cases under title XVIII of the Social Security Act; and for creating additional payments or adjustments where deemed appropriate by the Secretary;

(3) recommendations, where appropriate, for modifying reimbursement for hospitals other than subsection (d) hospitals;

(4) a recommendation for a methodology to reflect the severity of illness of different patients within the same Diagnoses Related Group (as determined in section 1886(d)(4)(B) of the Social Security Act); and

(5) an impact analysis of the proposed elimination of separate average standardized amounts on hospitals according to the following characteristics: urban or rural (as defined in section 1886(d)(2)(D) of the Social Security Act), teaching, disproportionate share, bed size, medicare volume, sole community status, region, and such other characteristics that the Secretary deems significant.

(b) REPORT AND STUDY.—(1) The Secretary shall submit a report (on the proposal described in subsection (a) to the Congress no later than October 1, 1990.

(2) The report described in paragraph (1) shall be reviewed by the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission and the Congressional Budget Office. The Prospective Payment Assessment Commission and the Congressional Budget Office shall each submit a report including an impact analysis as described in subsection (a)(6) containing the results of their study to the Congress no later than April 1, 1991.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall become effective upon the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. INTERIM PROVISION TO ENSURE ADEQUATE PAYMENTS FOR INPATIENT HOSPITAL SERVICES FURNISHED BY MEDICARE-DEPENDENT, SMALL, RURAL HOSPITALS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1886(d)(5) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww(d)(5)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(G)(i) For cost reporting periods beginning after September 30, 1989, and ending before October 1, 1991, the Secretary shall provide for an additional payment amount for each medicare-dependent, small, rural hospital (as defined in clause (ii)) to ensure that the total of the payments made to the hospital under this section (including this clause) for any such cost reporting period is at least equal to the reasonable costs associated with the hospital's operating costs of inpatient hospital services for medicare beneficiaries for that period. In determining the reasonable costs of a hospital under the previous sentence, the Secretary may not apply limits which would limit reimbursement based on average costs incurred by hospitals. In the case of a hospital receiving payments on a periodic interim basis under section 1815(e)(1) and entitled to additional payment amounts under this subparagraph, such additional payment amounts shall be included in the payments made under section 1815(e)(1).

"(ii) In clause (i), the term 'medicare-dependent, small, rural hospital' means, for a cost reporting period with respect to which such clause applies, a subsection (d) hospital—

"(I) that is receiving payments based on the rural standardized amount and has no more than 100 beds; and

"(II) for which period at least 70 percent of inpatient hospital services (determined, at the hospital's option, on a per diem basis or on a discharge basis) are attributable to inpatients who are entitled to benefits under part A.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall become effective on the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4. MODIFICATIONS WITH RESPECT TO SOLE COMMUNITY HOSPITALS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1886(d)(5)(C)(ii) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww(d)(5)(C)(ii)) is amended—

(1) by striking the first sentence and inserting the following new sentence: "With respect to a subsection (d) hospital which is a "sole community hospital", payment under paragraph (1)(A) for any cost reporting or fiscal year beginning on or after October 1, 1989, shall be equal to the sum of—

"(I) 75 percent of the greater of the hospital's target amount (as defined in subsection (b)(3)(A), but determined without the application of subsection (a)), or a target amount determined by the Secretary in the same manner, but using information from the most recent cost reporting period or periods available; and

"(II) 25 percent of the greater of the applicable regional or national DRG prospective payment rate determined under subsection (d)(3).."; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In determining the factors that constitute a sole community hospital for purposes of the preceding sentence the Secretary shall consider—

"(I) the time needed to travel to the nearest alternative source of appropriate inpatient care;

"(II) in those cases where the Secretary determines a hospital's eligibility for sole community hospital status using criteria related to such hospital's share of beneficiaries eligible for benefits under this title or total population of such beneficiaries in the area served by the hospital, the Secretary shall then take into account the total number of patients (whether or not such patients are eligible for benefits under this title) who seek health services unavailable in the area served by such hospital, without regard to the number of beds in such hospital; and

"(III) such other factors that the Secretary considers relevant.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall become effective upon the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. ESTABLISHMENT OF MEDICARE GEOGRAPHICAL CLASSIFICATION REVIEW BOARD.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF BOARD.—Section 1886(d) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww(d)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(10)(A) There is hereby established the 'Medicare Geographical Classification Review Board' (hereinafter in this paragraph referred to as the 'Board').

"(B)(i) The Board shall be composed of 5 members appointed by the Secretary without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service. Two of such members shall be representatives of subsection (d) hospitals classified as located in a rural area under paragraph (2)(D). At least 1 member shall be a member of the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission, and at least 1 member shall be knowledgeable in the field of analyzing costs with respect to the provision of inpatient hospital services.

"(ii) The Secretary shall make all appointments to the Board as provided in this paragraph within 60 days after the date of the enactment of the Equity for Rural Hospitals Act of 1989.

"(C)(i) The Board shall consider the application of—

"(I) any subsection (d) hospital, or

"(II) any subsection (d) Puerto Rico hospital, located in a rural area requesting that the Board classify such hospital as a hospital located in a urban area for purposes of determining the hospital's average standardized amount under paragraph (2)(D). Such application shall specify which Metropolitan Statistical Area the requesting hospital would like to be classified in, and shall be submitted no later than January 31, of the year in which such hospital requests reclassification.

"(ii)(I) The Board shall render a decision either accepting or denying the application of a hospital located in a rural area to be reclassified as a hospital located in a urban area by June 1, of the year in which such applying hospital submits an application as described in this paragraph. The Board in rendering such decision shall take into consideration and make specific findings on the record regarding the criteria published by the Secretary as described in subparagraph (D).

"(II) A decision of the Board shall be final unless the unsuccessful applicant appeals such decision to the Secretary by July 1, of the year in which such applicant unsuccessfully applied for reclassification pursuant to this paragraph. The Secretary in considering the appeal of an applicant shall receive no new evidence but shall consider the record as a whole as such record appeared before the Board. The Secretary shall issue a decision either affirming or reversing the decision of the Board by September 1, of the year in which such unsuccessful applicant appeals a decision of the Board pursuant to this section. The decision of the Secretary in either affirming or reversing the decision of the Board shall be final and shall not be subject to judicial review.

"(iii) A decision of the Board or a decision of the Secretary, if a decision of the Board is appealed to the Secretary, shall become effective in the first fiscal year following the year in which such decision is rendered, and if such decision is in favor of the applying hospital, such hospital shall be reclassified by the Secretary as being located in an urban area for purposes of subsection (d) and section 1815 (e)(1).

"(D)(i) The Secretary shall publish guidelines to be utilized by the Board in rendering decisions on the applications of applying hospitals. Such criteria to be published by the Secretary shall include the following:

"(I) A comparison of wages, taking into account occupational mix, between a hospital located in a rural area applying for reclassification as a hospital located in a urban area, and hospitals located in the urban area into which such applying hospital would be reclassified.

"(II) An examination of whether the applying hospital is located in a county that, on the basis of the most recent data published by the Bureau of the Census, meets requirements of the Office of Management and Budget for inclusion as an outlying county of a Metropolitan Statistical Area, without regard to any requirement by the Office of Management and Budget that certain data for qualification be from the decennial census.

"(III) Consideration of the effects on access to inpatient hospital services by medicare beneficiaries should an applying hospital not be reclassified as urban.

"(ii) The Secretary shall publish the criteria described in clause (i) by July 1, 1989.

"(E)(i) The Board shall have full power and authority to make rules and establish procedures, not inconsistent with the provisions of this title or regulations of the Secretary, which are necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this paragraph. In the course of any hearing the Board may administer oaths and affirmations. The provisions of subsections (d) and (e) of section 205 with respect to subpenas shall apply to the Board to the same extent as such provisions apply to the Secretary with respect to title II.

"(ii) The Board is authorized to engage such technical assistance and to receive such information as may be required to carry out its functions, and the Secretary shall, in addition, make available to the Board such secretarial, clerical, and other assistance as the Board may require to carry out its functions.

"(F)(i) Each member of the Board who is not an officer or employee of the Federal Government shall be compensated at a rate equal to the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay prescribed for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code, for each day (including travel time) during which such member is engaged in the performance of the duties of the Board. All members of the Board who are officers or employees of the United States shall serve without compensation in addition to that received for their services as officers or employees of the United States.

"(ii) The members of the Board shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, at rates authorized for employees of agencies under subchapter I of chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code, while away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Board.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall become effective upon the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 6. MODIFICATIONS IN GRANT PROGRAM FOR RURAL HEALTH CARE TRANSITION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 4005(e) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3)(A) by inserting "to the Administrator and a copy of such application" after "an application";

(2) in paragraph 3(b) by striking "any application" and all that follows through "accompanied by" and inserting in lieu thereof "to the Secretary";

(3) in paragraph (6) by striking "A grant" and all that follows through "2 years" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "A grant to a hospital under this subsection may not exceed $50,000 a year, unless the Secretary determines that an amount in excess of $50,000 a year is necessary to assist a hospital receiving such a grant in implementing a project as described in paragraph (1). A grant to a hospital under this subsection may not exceed 3 years"; and

(4) in paragraph (9) by striking "$15,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1989 and 1990" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall become effective on October 1, 1989.

SEC. 7. INCREASE IN RURAL HEALTH MEDICAL EDUCATION DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 4038 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 is amended—

(1) in subsection (a) by striking "enter into agreements with four sponsoring" and all that follows through "rural areas" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "enter into agreements—

"(1) with 4 sponsoring hospitals submitting applications under this subsection; and

"(2) with 6 sponsoring hospitals submitting applications under this subsection without regard to the requirements contained in subsection (c), to conduct demonstration projects to assist resident physicians in developing field clinical experience in rural areas.";

(2) in subsection (c) by striking "subsection (a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (a)(1)"; and

(3) in subsection (e) by striking "Each demonstration project" and all that follows through "three years" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Each demonstration project under—

"(1) subsection (a)(1) shall be commenced not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, and

"(2) subsection (a)(2) shall be commenced not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of the Equity for Rural Hospitals Act of 1989, and shall be conducted for a period of 3 years.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall become effective on the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 8. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN NURSING EDUCATION PROGRAMS.

(a) DEMONSTRATION OF JOINT NURSING UNDER GRADUATE EDUCATION PROGRAMS.—

(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall provide for demonstration programs under this subsection in each of 5 hospitals for cost reporting periods beginning on or after July 1, 1990, and before July 1, 1995.

(2) Under each demonstration project, subject to paragraph (4), the reasonable costs incurred by a hospital pursuant to a written agreement with an educational institution for the activities described in paragraph (3) conducted as part of an approved educational program that leads to a bachelor's degree in nursing, shall be allowable as reasonable costs under title XVIII of the Social Security Act and reimbursed under such title on the same basis as if they were allowable direct costs of a hospital-operated approved educational program (other than an approved graduate medical education program).

(3) The activities described in this paragraph are the activities for which the reasonable costs of conducting such activities are allowable under title XVIII of the Social Security Act if conducted under a hospital-operated approved educational program (other than an approved graduate medical education program), but only to the extent such activities —

(A) are directly related to the operation of the educational program conducted pursuant to the written agreement between the hospital and the educational institution; and

(B) take place in a year of an undergraduate nursing program during or after which clinical training has begun.

(4) The amount paid under a demonstration program under this subsection to a hospital for a cost reporting period may not exceed $200,000.

(5) The Secretary shall report to the Congress, by not later than January 1, 1996, on the demonstration programs conducted under this subsection and on the supply and characteristics of nurses trained under such programs.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall take effect upon the date of enactment of this Act.●

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am very pleased to join with my very distinguished colleague from Texas, Senator BENTSEN in introducing this legislation.

As this Senator noted last week when introducing S. 10, the rural hospitals in this country are facing hard times—and as a result the people who depend on them for services may be faced with a life threatening dilemma. In those parts of the country where there are a number of large, remote areas with low population density, ready access to care becomes critical. Those of you who come from more populated areas than my own may think that 30 miles is no great trial, but let me tell you that if the weather is bad or the road conditions poor—30 miles may as well be 300 for all the good it does.

There is a problem in rural America which we had a hand in creating—so it falls to us to help resolve it.

When we first put the Medicare prospective payment system into place we acknowledged that this new system might well have a negative impact on some rural hospitals and our fears have been proven out. Since 1983, 188 rural hospitals have closed—and more are teetering on the brink of disaster.

Granted there are a number of reasons behind these closures, some of which we cannot solve, but we can provide some assistance. This bill attempts to do just that.

First we address the payment system itself by requiring that we move toward a national rate. We recognize that in doing this we must also finally take account of the so-called severity difference which exist.

While we move toward this new rate we also propose taking particular care of the very small and isolated rural hospitals. We cannot allow our health care system to further decline during this transition.

As important as these payment changes are—we must also address some of the other problems being faced by rural hospitals and rural communities—including a shortage of health manpower. The bill also provides funds for efforts at training and retention.

Mr. President, Senator BENTSEN is to be commended by leading this important effort. I urge each of my colleagues to consider carefully our proposal. Nothing about it is written in stone. We welcome your comments and suggestions. Our intention is not to do harm to all the other hospitals. What we hope to achieve is equity.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join today with Senators BENTSEN, DOLE, and others in introducing the Equity for Rural Hospitals Act of 1989.

I have spoken here many times over the years on the shaky status of rural health care and rural hospitals.

And I have worked to modify Medicare to make it fairer for rural America.

In 1986 I introduced the Rural Health Care Improvement Act. And in 1987, the Rural Health Care Viability Act.

Last year, along with my colleagues Senators ROCKEFELLER and DASCHLE, I introduced the Rural Health Payment Reform Act of 1988.

PREVIOUS SUCCESSES

Each of these proposals was an effort to restore some fairness to Medicare's treatment of rural health care.

Many of the provisions in these bills have become law.

To name a few examples:

My first rural health bill contained a provision establishing an Office of Rural Health Policy at HHS. That Office is now up and running.

My second rural health proposal required that new Federal regulations include an analysis of their effect on rural health care before they are implemented. That policy is now in place.

Other provisions of my rural Health Care Viability Act strengthened financial protections under PPS for sole community hospitals, and increased reimbursement for rural health clinics.

We have had some significant successes. But there is a great deal of work yet to be done.

THE EQUITY FOR RURAL HOSPITALS ACT OF 1989

The bill we are introducing today is a big step in the right direction for rural America.

The bill directs the Secretary of Health and Human Services to make a fundamental change in PPS to move hospital payments to a single national rate.

As the system is set up now, rural hospitals get paid significantly less from Medicare for providing the same service. Once this bill has been fully implemented, rural hospitals will finally get their fair share from Medicare. Rural hospitals will no longer be treated as second-class hospitals.

This change will be phased in over a period of several years, to be completed by 1994.

Many will say that's not soon enough.

They are right. Too many rural hospitals are too close to the edge of failure to hold out that long.

So in the meantime, the bill provides that rural hospitals with 100 or fewer beds, that are heavily dependent on Medicare, will receive additional payments to ensure that they are able to meet their costs for Medicare patients.

The bill also contains provisions modifying Medicare's treatment of sole community hospitals. It creates a Medicare Geographical Classification Review Board to make determinations about hospitals' urban or rural status.

The bill increases the authorization for the rural health transition grants program. It helps resident physicians to develop field clinical experience in rural areas, where doctors are desperately needed. Finally, the bill expands demonstration programs for hospitals that provide settings for nurses to do clinical training.

NEED FOR THE BILL

Mr. President, rural America badly needs this legislation.

In my own State of Montana, we have about four hospitals for every 10,000 square miles. That's one-fourth the national average density of hospitals.

The people of Montana cannot afford to lose even one of those hospitals. But on the whole, rural hospitals are much more likely to fail than urban hospitals.

In 1984, the first year of the Medicare prospective payment system, nearly 25 percent of all rural hospitals in America with fewer than 50 beds experienced losses under PPS. All other hospitals as a group enjoyed a 12-percent profit.

By 1986 more than half of these small rural hospitals were losing money, according to the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission.

More and more studies have shown that rural hospitals nationwide are in perilous condition.

Under the leadership of my former colleague from Montana, Senator John Melcher, the Senate Aging Committee published an excellent report last fall on rural health care. That report said that as many as 600 rural hospitals may close in the next few years.

Similarly, the American College of Health Care Executives estimates that 10 percent of the Nation's 7,000 hospitals will be forced to close in the next decade.

When a rural hospital closes, there is seldom another hospital "down the road" for people to use. Especially in Montana.

In Montana, hospitals are spaced far apart. They are very small. And they fight every day for their survival.

Of Montana's 65 hospitals, 51 have fewer than 90 beds. About half have fewer than 30 beds. Two hospitals in Montana have just six beds.

Twenty-four of Montana's 32 hospitals with fewer than 30 beds posted losses from operations in 1987. Twenty of those still lost money after nonoperating funds from local taxes, gifts and endowments, and interest income were added.

Small rural hospitals are continually threatened by difficulties such as the physician shortage, failure to pass licensure inspection, declining utilization and revenue, and Medicare outliers.

Because of their small size, rural hospitals are more sensitive to change in reimbursement, regulation and utilization than their larger counterparts.

The margin of financial safety for most rural hospitals is extremely small. Small rural hospitals are simply not able to take advantage of the "law of large numbers" that is at the heart of PPS. Sharp revenue declines often cannot be offset by the cost saving measures that larger facilities can use.

Mr. President, rural health care is an important issue in Montana. But the viability of rural hospitals is very much a national problem.

Maintaining quality health care in communities separated by vast distances and among sparse populations is a concern in almost every part of the Nation.

Enactment of this legislation will help to make sure that the health care needs of rural Americans are provided for by making Medicare's treatment of rural hospitals fairer.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of the Equity for Rural Hospitals Act of 1989. I commend my colleagues for the hard work they have done on this extremely important legislation.

The bill will go a long way toward ensuring basic fairness for rural hospitals.

I encourage my colleagues to join us in supporting this needed bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the Equity for Rural Hospitals Act of 1989, legislation introduced by Senator BENTSEN and Senator DOLE, which is intended to eliminate many of the existing inequities in the Medicare prospective payment system which affect rural hospitals.

Since the implementation of the Medicare prospective payment system in 1983, the Nation's rural hospitals have experienced an increasingly difficult time in continuing to provide access to quality care in rural areas.

The differential in Medicare payment to rural hospitals has been at the center of the difficulties faced by small rural hospitals in Maine and across the country. Senator BENTSEN'S bill includes a provision which requires the Secretary to design a legislative proposal to eliminate Medicare's current disparity between payment rates for hospitals in rural, large urban, and other urban areas.

While the implementation of such a payment scheme will be difficult in these times of fiscal austerity, it is important that we develop the methodology to eventually achieve this goal.

The Secretary would also be required to recommend a severity adjustment to reflect differences in severity among cases in the same diagnosis-related group. The lack of a severity adjustment has been one of the most serious shortcomings in the prospective payment system.

Other provisions in this bill expand demonstration programs to encourage physicians to do their clinical training in rural areas and provide expanded Medicare payments for training undergraduate nurses. Clearly, the shortage of physicians who are willing to serve in rural hospitals and nurses in all health care settings seriously jeopardize access to quality care for the elderly living in rural areas.

I join Senator BENTSEN as a cosponsor of this bill because I am very concerned about the fiscal viability of our small rural hosptials. In Maine, most of our hospitals are reimbursed at the rural rate. Many of our elderly citizens must travel great distances in inclement weather to receive acute care services in hospitals that are struggling to survive.

We must make sure that all citizens, including those living in rural America, continue to have access to quality care. The legislation we are introducing today will help to achieve that important goal.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senators BENTSEN and DOLE in introducing the Equity for Rural Hospitals Act of 1989. They and their staffs should be commended for developing this important initiative which represents an all important first step toward addressing many of the inequities and difficulties rural communities and their hospitals face in assuring access to needed health care services.

Mr. President, rural hospitals are at the very core of the rural health care system. Like never before, however, many of these hospitals are facing enormous financial pressures, an increasing number without success. Between 1980 and 1987, 161 rural community hospitals were forced to close, while over 500 more are believed to be on the brink of closure. In fact, just last year, 43 out of the recordbreaking 81 community hospitals that closed were rural hospitals. It's my understanding that 3 of those 43 rural hospitals were located in my home State of Arkansas.

As chairman of the Senate Special Committee on Aging, I am deeply concerned about the impact rural hospital closures are having on the elderly. Older Americans make up a large and growing percentage of the rural population and rural hospitals play a particularly vital role in their lives. And for that same reason, Medicare reimbursement policies are of increasing importance to rural hospitals.

Recognizing the importance of the need to develop a constructive Federal rural health care policy, the Aging Committee has been very active in focusing congressional and public attention on this important issue. In fact, in 1988 alone, I had the pleasure of chairing one of the three hearings we held on this issue in Pine Bluff, AR. In addition, at the end of the year, the committee released a substantive report entitled "The Rural Health Care Challenge" that has come to be known in some health policy circles as the rural health care bible.

Our hearings and report repeatedly focused attention on the unfair fact that, for the exact same diagnosis, rural hospitals are reimbursed by Medicare at a significantly lower rate than their urban counterpart. Not surprisingly, rural hospitals are not faring well under this discriminatory reimbursement system. In fact, in fiscal years 1984, 1985, and 1986, about 83 percent of all hospitals that were losing money under Medicare were located in rural areas. Even more startling, over half of those hospitals losing money were rural facilities with less than 50 beds, and 75 percent of them were rural hospitals with less than 100 beds.

Mr. President, the bill being introduced today would correct a number of the serious inequities in Medicare reimbursement policies that are adversely affecting the Nation's rural hospital system. First and foremost, this bill would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to develop a proposal by October 1990 for phasing out over a 4-year period Medicare's rural-urban reimbursement differential. The Secretary's proposal also would include recommendations for improving the special considerations provided to teaching hospitals, rural referral centers, sole community hospitals, disproportionate share hospitals, and outlier cases, as well as a recommended financial adjustment to reflect severity among cases in the same diagnostic-related group.

In addition, under this legislation rural hospitals with 100 beds or less that treat a disproportionately large number of Medicare patients would be provided an additional payment in fiscal years 1990 and 1991. Also, Medicare payments would be provided to sole-community hospitals that more accurately reflected the costs they face and a board established to review applications submitted by rural hospitals located near urban areas for reclassification into those areas.

A number of other provisions aimed at improving the financial health of rural hospitals are included in this legislation. Importantly, increased funding for rural health care transition grants would be authorized and opportunities enhanced for physicians and nurses to gain clinical experience in rural areas.

Mr. President, this legislation represents an important first step toward ensuring that hospital care is available to Americans living in rural areas, and I applaud the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and the Senate minority leader in this effort. The problems confronting the rural health care system and many and, as I know the sponsors of this bill fully understand, more remains to be done in this area. For example, I remain deeply concerned about the severe shortages in rural health care personnel and believe we may want to consider expediting the proposed elimination of the Medicare urban-rural differential.

I look forward to continuing to work with Senator BENTSEN and Senator DOLE, as well as other members of the Finance Committee and the Senate and House Rural Health Caucuses, to resolve these and other pressing concerns facing our Nation's rural health system.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I rise today to cosponsor the Equity for Rural Hospitals Act of 1989, a bill that attempts to remove the urban bias in Medicare's payment system. In cosponsoring this bill, I would like to commend Senators BENTSEN and DOLE for their strong commitment to improving the plight of health care in rural America and ensuring that Medicare lives up to its promise of providing quality health service to all Americans.

The need to provide assistance to rural hospitals is now greater than ever because our Nation's rural hospitals, the core of our health system, are being challenged like never before. The statistics are sobering: since 1980, 161 rural community hospitals across the country have been forced to close their doors, and many more than that—an estimated 600—currently are on the brink of closure.

Of all of the factors that have combined to cause the demise of rural hospitals, Medicare is clearly one of the most significant, and one of the few factors amenable to Federal intervention. The fact that Medicare pays rural hospitals from 12 to 40 percent less per procedure than it pays hospitals in urban areas is largely responsible for the fact that over 80 percent of all hospitals losing money under Medicare in the last several years were located in rural areas.

During a recent rural health care tour that I conducted in South Dakota, I witnessed firsthand the challenges that our rural providers face. As I visited rural hospitals all over the State and met with rural hospital administrators and others involved in health care delivery, the same message was confirmed over and over: inadequate Medicare payments have contributed to a serious decline in hospital revenues and the reduction in access to care for rural residents.

In my home State of South Dakota, 54 of our hospitals are rural, and most of them lost money on Medicare in 1988, with average profit margins for small rural hospitals of negative 5 percent. Closing the Medicare payment gap between urban and rural payments could very well be the key step needed to save these small, rural hospitals from closing their doors to the community. With 16 counties in my State already without a hospital, South Dakota, as well as many other rural States, can ill afford to lose more providers.

This legislation takes an important step toward payment equity by calling for a complete elimination of the urban-rural Medicare differential. While a single national rate is being developed, the bill also calls for interim financial relief for sole community hospitals and the small rural hospitals that are most dependent on Medicare payments. Though these measures cannot guarantee the solvency of all of our rural hospitals, they will help to ensure that payments to rural hospitals reflect the true cost of doing business.

I am also pleased that this bill includes a provision expanding the Rural Health Care Transition Grant Program. This program provides assistance to small, rural hospitals in planning and implementing projects to strengthen their capability to provide quality care to Medicare beneficiaries. This kind of assistance is important given the multitude of pressures that rural hospitals face these days, including shifting demographics, declining hospital admissions, and the steep rise in uncompensated care. Transition grants will help our hospitals learn to adjust their operatiosn in response to the rapidly changing rural health care environment.

Finally, the bill addresses the shortage of physicians and nurses in rural areas through a number of demonstration grants. Any initiative that aides rural hospitals must tackle the problem of shortages, since rural hospitals cannot provide care to their communities without the personnel to deliver the services. I am pleased that this bill attempts to deal with this important problem, though a comprehensive solution to the problem of personnel shortages must be sought in the future.

In sum, this bill is not a proposal that will completely reverse the problems that rural areas face, but it does represent an important step in the direction of reforming the Medicare payment system. Most importantly, this bill highlights the need for rural payment equity and makes the statement that rural Americans should no longer be asked to settle for less in health care than their urban counterparts.

I believe that this legislation deserves support. We must let our rural citizens know that Medicare intends to keep its social compact with senior citizens. I urge my colleagues to assist in winning approval for this measure.

By Mr. DODD (for himself and Mr. LIEBERMAN):

S. 307. A bill to provide for the standardization of advertised yields on savings accounts and investments, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

TRUTH IN SAVINGS AND INVESTMENTS ACT

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, in today's busy world the last thing people need is to be forced to spend hours trying to decide which savings account offers the best return. Yet the banking deregulation of the early 1980's which has greatly increased savings opportunities for consumers has also fostered a broad array of noncomparable terms and conditions. The result is that consumers have to spend too much time trying to determine the best account and, even then, often choose the wrong one.

The legislation I am introducing today, the Truth in Savings and Investments Act, is designated to give consumers the information they need to determine the best account for them quickly. It requires the disclosure of a standardized annual percentage yield, so that the higher advertized figure will always produce a greater return. In addition, it requires the disclosure—in the English language—of key additional cost items, such as minimum balance requirements and penalties for early withdrawal.

This legislation is the successor to S. 1507 from the 100th Congress, whose provisions were incorporated in S. 1886, the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act of 1988, which passed the Senate but was not acted on by the House.

The need for this legislation is clear to anyone who has ever tried to decipher advertisements for savings certificates or for mutual funds. On August 5, 1987, the Consumer Affairs Subcommittee which I chaired conducted hearings on the problem. The subcommittee heard testimony about how consumers are often not given such relevant information as the basis of compounding, the minimum balance required to receive interest, and whether the interest is paid on an average or low balance. The importance of the balance calculation method can be seen from testimony that revealed that the same interest rate can produce returns on the same average balance that vary from $44.93 to $75.30, depending upon whether one uses a low balance method or a day of deposit to day of withdrawal method.

In addition, the subcommittee saw examples of "free accounts" that were not free and accounts that advertised the same rate of interest and the same annual percentage yield, but somehow paid consumers different amounts of interest in dollars and cents.

One peculiarly egregious example of misleading information was the use by some depository institutions of the "investable balance" method, whereby banks pay the disclosed rate of interest on only a portion of the money in the account, usually citing the need to put a certain portion into reserves for the Federal Reserve System. We don't let supermarkets claim they are selling consumers a pound when they are only selling 14 ounces and we shouldn't let depository institutions pay interest on less than the full balance.

One further complication for consumers has been the difficulty in comparing the returns on savings accounts with those on mutual funds, particularly money market mutual funds, which consumers have more and more viewed as competitors for their funds. Problems have arisen because of the lack of comparability—whereas savings accounts guarantee a specific rate of return into the future, mutual funds can only talk about past performance. In addition, up until a year ago there was not a standardized yield definition for most mutual funds.

The intent of the legislation is to clear up all of these problems by establishing standardized methods for calculating the balance to which interest is applied; requiring the disclosure of one standardized yield figure; banning the use of the investable balance method; and requiring the disclosure of other key cost items.

All advertisements would have to disclose the annual percentage yield, the period for which the yield will be in effect, all minimum balance and time requirements, the minimum amount of the initial deposit; include a statement that regular fees and other conditions could reduce the yield; and, if appropriate, state that there is a penalty for early withdrawal. The bill prescibes narrower requirements with respect to advertisements through the broadcast and electronic media.

In addition, the legislation requires depository institutions to maintain and distribute at appropriate intervals more comprehensive schedules of all relevant terms and conditions.

A new provision of the legislation calls for the disclosure of the information necessary for consumers to verify the accuracy of the interest earned. Thus, the periodic statements would have to disclose the average daily balance, the periodic rate of interest and the number of days in the period, just as is done on credit card statements.

Finally, the legislation addresses the relationship between depository institution accounts and mutual fund accounts. Because the Securities and Exchange Commission has recently adopted regulations that require mutual funds to follow the same kind of rules this bill requires banks to, the legislation does not impose any immediate duty on the SEC. However, it does require the SEC to consult annually with the Federal Reserve Board to review the regulations prescribed under this bill and those prescribed by the SEC to make sure that they provide consumers with the ability to effectively compare savings and investments options. At any such time as the SEC determines that its regulations do not provide true comparability, the bill instructs the SEC to modify its regulations to assure that consumers can make effective comparisons.

Mr. President, adoption of this legislation will make it far easier for people in our hectic society to make rational investment decisions rapidly. Similar legislation passed both Houses in the last Congress and has widespread support among the affected parties. I hope we will be able to act quickly in this Congress to arm consumers—including ourselves—with the information necessary to make wise investment decisions expeditiously.●

S. 308. A bill to authorize certain securities for bank holding companies and to authorize additional powers for safe bank holding companies; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

FINANCIAL MODERNIZATION AND SAFE BANK ACT

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Financial Modernization and Safe Bank Act, which is designed to modernize the laws governing financial services while assuring the integrity of Federal deposit insurance.

For almost the entire decade of the 1980's, the Congress has been struggling with these two objectives that often seem to be at odds with one another. On the one hand, the imperative for change seems to come from all directions:

It comes from the inflation of the 1970's that gave rise to the explosion of money market funds and the elimination of deposit interest rate ceilings;

It comes from product innovations such as commercial paper and securitized loans that have deprived banks of some of their most secure and lucrative loans;

It comes from new technology that has made the cost of "informational" business such as banking, insurance, and securities so inexpensive that they are increasingly attracted to each other's businesses;

It comes from "loophole lawyers" who have brought us the "nonbank bank" and the "South Dakota loophole," devices through which nonbanking businesses have been able to circumvent the restrictions that prevented them from getting into the banking business, and through which banks are planning to get into previously prohibited insurance activities;

It comes from the disparity in regulation among states and nations that have wiped out many of the barriers to geographic expansion by banks and blurred or sometimes obliterated the lines between commercial banking and investment banking; and

It comes from decisions from Federal bank regulators that have permitted banks to get into the securities and other businesses.

These events are not reversible.

On the other hand, it is not possible to simply deregulate the financial services industry completely because Federal deposit insurance provides that depositors will be protected from bank failures. Therefore, we have an obligation to the taxpayers to preserve the integrity of that insurance. While many banks and thrifts have gotten into trouble just engaging in the banking business—from overcommitments in lending to lesser developed countries and the agricultural and oil sectors, to outright fraud and mismanagement—some have also misused the new powers granted them through Federal and State laws. We simply cannot afford to let what has happened to the S&L industry happen to the commercial banking industry, nor can we afford to let it reoccur in the S&L industry.

The problem then is how to reconcile the need to modernize our financial laws and the protection of our deposit insurance system. In the last Congress, the Senate adopted S. 1886, the Proxmire Financial Modernization Act. It sought to achieve this delicate balance by granting banks certain new phased-in securities powers while at the same time requiring banks to conduct these new activities out of separate subsidiaries with so-called firewalls among the different subsidiaries to prevent abuses.

I believe the Proxmire bill has much to commend it. In fact, given the realities of today's marketplace, the securities powers authorized by that bill are the minimum that we need to grant to enable banks to compete. Therefore, title I of my bill consists of the securities provisions of the Proxmire bill.

At the same time, it is difficult to draw rational lines between securities powers and other businesses in terms of safety and soundness and in terms of what is taking place in the real world while we wrestle with these problems. I think the realities of the marketplace will force a far broader integration of financial services.

Moreover, the protections built into the Proxmire bill are largely efforts to hedge our bets. We hope banks won't get into trouble in these new areas if we set certain capital standards, require that the securities activities be conducted out of a separate subsidiary and prohibit certain relationships between the securities subsidiary and the bank. However, I'm not sure we can ever have enough regulators to enforce the rules the Proxmire bill set up to try to prevent problems. I remain skeptical that the Proxmire rules would prevent a bank from helping out a troubled affiliate in a time of crisis.

Therefore, I have added an additional title to my bill that seeks to address both of these issues. It is called the Safe Bank Holding Company Act, and it is modeled on the work pioneered by Robert Litan of the Brookings Institution and Profs. Jack Guttentag and Richard Herring of the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School. What it says is if a bank wants to get into any business beyond those permissible today under the Bank Holding Company Act, or those securities activities authorized under title I of this bill, the bank must agree to become a safe bank. A safe bank is one that invests its deposits in highly liquid and highly marketable instruments, such as obligations of the U.S. Government and obligations guaranteed by the U.S. Government. Thus, depositors' money would be very safe—and so would the Federal deposit insurance funds.

Once a bank had agreed to become a safe bank, then it would be free to establish separate subsidiaries to engage in any other business it wished. These subsidiaries would be separately capitalized, with no funds coming from the bank. Further, the bank would not accept deposits from any of its nonbank affiliates nor would it extend credit to any of its nonbank affiliates.

The major advantages to the bank would lie in its ability to diversify its portfolio and to cross-market bank products with the other subsidiaries' products.

The advantages to the Government and the public would also be considerable. Inasmuch as this approach involves a true two-way street—one which would not only permit safe banks into other businesses but would also permit nonbanking businesses to enter the banking business if they agreed to convert the bank to a safe bank—it would permit the maximum amount of competition. It would also permit modernization of our financial services laws with the closest thing possible to a fail-safe device to protect against abuses that could bankrupt the deposit insurance funds.

Mr. President, I have studies numerous proposals to modernize our banking laws and many of them have much to comment them. However, before we permit any significant increase in new bank activities, I believe we must devise the strongest possible provisions to assure protection of depositors and, ultimately, of U.S. taxpayers. At the same time, such protections must not be so restrictive as to deny banks and other businesses the synergistic benefits of integration.

I think the legislation I am offering today strikes the best balance of these objectives of any I have seen to date. However, I don't want to suggest that I have completed my search for the best possible legislation. I will continue to keep an openmind in assessing other proposals and I will be very interested in the reaction to this bill from my colleagues and from all people interested in a strong, safe, and competitive financial services industry.●

By Mr. JOHNSTON (for himself and Mr. McCLURE) (by request):

S. 317. A bill to establish a Commonwealth of Guam, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and natural Resources.

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMONWEALTH OF GUAM

● Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing the Draft Commonwealth Act of Guam at the request of the Delegate from Guam, the Honorable BEN BLAZ. This legislation is identical to the bill, S. 2178, which I introduced in the 100th Congress along with my colleague from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, Senator MCCLURE. At the time of introduction of this legislation last year I made several points which it is appropriate to recall.

This legislation has its origins in plebiscites held in Guam to determine what political relationship the people of Guam desire with the United States. In 1982, Commonwealth status was overwhelmingly selected, with 73 percent of the vote. Following initial meetings between representatives of Guam, then-Delegate Won Pat and Governor Bordallo, and Congressmen MORRIS UDALL and Manuel Lujan of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, Guam established a commission on self-determination which developed this legislation. Its provisions were approved in plebiscites in Guam in 1987.

It is important to be aware of the meaning of the term "Commonwealth," because use of the term may obscure the purpose of the legislation. As an unincorporated territory, the basis of Guam's government is the Organic Act of Guam which was passed by Congress in 1950. At that time, and continuing today, Guam has no voting representation in Congress, however. Thus, Guam has no direct input into the laws that govern much of the island's affairs. For others, "Commonwealth" suggests more State-like treatment than exists for Guam as an unincorporated territory. Such treatment would allow the people of Guam the opportunity to develop and adopt a constitution, and thereby reduce the role of the Federal Government in local affairs.

More importantly, however, this legislation goes beyond establishing a Commonwealth and proposes a set of provisions designed to resolve a set of issues which exist in relations between the Federal Government and Guam. Accordingly, it may be better to think of the legislation as a "Federal Relations" act than as a "Commonwealth" Act.

This bill is very broad in its scope, covering issues such as: the applicability of Federal law, foreign affairs, defense, trade, courts, taxation, immigration, labor, transportation, telecommunications, land, utilities, and financial assistance. Some of the provisions my colleagues may find controversial, as I do. For example, section 202 states:

> Except as otherwise intended by this Act, no Federal law, rules, or regulations passed after the date of this Act shall apply to the Commonwealth of Guam unless mutually consented to by the United States and the Government of the Commonwealth of Guam.

This section goes well beyond the limitations on Federal authority that currently exist in either the States or the territories. I am interested in the rationale for the provision and whether less sweeping language would meet the concerns of Guam.

I strongly support the objectives of this legislation, to review Federal-Guam relations, resolve a number of issues which currently trouble those relations, and provide the people of Guam greater self-government as a commonwealth of the United States. I urge my colleagues in the Senate to support this process of establishing a new relationship between the Federal Government and Guam. The people of Guam, although they are not represented in the Senate, are citizens of the United States and their concerns deserve our careful and sympathetic consideration.

Shortly after I introduced this measure last year, I wrote to the administration requesting their views on the legislation. Just 3 weeks ago, I again requested those views in anticipation of the bill's reintroduction. Unfortunately, the administration still has not provided detailed comments on the Draft Act. Instead, last week the outgoing Assistant Secretary for Territorial and International Affairs, Mrs. Janet McCoy, sent the following report in response to my request for administration views. I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

I appreciate the Assistant Secretary's prompt response to my request. However, the report raises several questions. First, the comments in the letter are very general. I had hoped that after 8 months of review that the administration would be able to provide specific comments, and perhaps make counterproposals in response to specific agency concerns.

Second, the report does not appear to represent the views of the Federal Interagency Task Force on the Guam Commonwealth, other agencies, or OMB. The report states that it presents the "views of the Interior Department." This is unsettling because the process of interagency review and response to the legislation, if it is to be meaningful, must involve all interested agencies and represent an administration consensus. I am unclear as to whether the other Federal agencies, and the task force, support these views of the Department or not. I will be writing to the new administration in an effort to clarify this situation.

Finally, I am also concerned by the Assistant Secretary's description of the proposed plan of action. This plan features "discussions among Federal agencies and between Task Force and Guam representatives." Although there is no mention of it, I hope that there is a place for Congress in these discussions. After all, it is Congress which must next consider this legislation. Congressional staff participation in such discussions would help develop congressional understanding of the positions of Guam and of Federal agencies on the various provisions of the bill.

Obviously, there is a new administration now in office and I urge their commitment to the review and eventual enactment of a Guam Commonwealth Act. This effort is extremely important to Guam. On the other hand, we cannot fail to recognize how important this effort is to the Federal Government. We have an enormous interest in improving relations with Guam and we have a responsibility to respond to the concerns of the people of Guam.

Mr. President, the people of Guam request our consideration of this legislation which represents their aspirations for future relations with the Federal Government. I am pleased to introduce this act in the 101st Congress and I look forward to working with the representatives of Guam during its consideration by Congress. I urge the commitment of my colleagues to this most important effort.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, DC, January 19, 1989.

Hon. J. BENNETT JOHNSTON,
Chairman, Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This responds to your request for an update on the Department of the Interior's coordination of a Federal interagency review of S. 2178 (H.R. 98), a bill "To establish the Commonwealth of Guam, and for other purposes." This report presents the initial views of the Interior Department and a proposed plan of action for a detailed review of the legislation.

The Federal Interagency Task Force on the Guam Commonwealth bill was created and chaired by the Department of the Interior, which has administrative oversight for Federal relations with the Territory of Guam. The Task Force's purpose is to coordinate the detailed reviews of more than two dozen Federal agencies whose responsibilities are affected by the proposed legislation.

We strongly urge the enactment of legislation, acceptable to the Congress and the Administration as well as the people of Guam, to achieve the general goal of Commonwealth status for Guam. Because it is not yet possible to comment definitively on all provisions of this bill, we cannot now offer recommendations for enactment of this legislation. But, as will be explained, we will at the earliest possible date offer to you specific and informed recommendations on all sections of the bill.

At this point, however, we want to make it clear that we agree with the people of Guam that it is both appropriate and timely that they be accorded a new political status, affording them the right of self-government under a constitution they adopt. A Commonwealth of Guam should become a reality.

By our understanding of the term, Commonwealth does not describe or provide for any specific political status or relationship. It has, for example, been applied both to states and territories. When used in connection with areas under U.S. sovereignty that are not states, the term broadly describes an area that is self-governing under a constitution of its own adoption and whose right of self-government will not be unilaterally withdrawn by Congress. All other aspects and/or components of such a Commonwealth status depend on the Federal statute or other agreement establishing that relationship. Commonwealth, however, does not mean Free Association. Commonwealth status does not diminish the full and undivided sovereignty of the United States over the Commonwealth. In particular, Commonwealth status does not diminish the foreign relations and defense powers of the Federal Government or the legislative powers of the Congress, except to the extent that Congress specifically agrees not to exercise them in order to safeguard the institutions of self-government.

Since 1950, when organic legislation for the island was first enacted by the Congress, Guam has been an unincorporated territory, governed pursuant to a Federal Organic Act. That Act has often been amended, perhaps most notably in 1968 when the people of Guam were authorized to elect their chief executive.

In 1976, Federal legislation (90 Stat. 2899) authorized the people of Guam to organize their local government pursuant to a constitution they would draft and adopt. It was anticipated that that constitution would supersede those provisions of the Organic Act relating to local self-government. A constitution, drafted under that authorization, was, however, rejected by Guam voters in a 1979 referendum.

The structure of the government of Guam, therefore, is still based on the Organic Act, in the traditional manner of territories of the United States, except that the governor is elected by the people of Guam and not appointed by the President. We adhere to the principle expressed in the 1976 Federal law that the people of Guam should be permitted to structure their local government through democratic processes and a constitution within the framework of the Constitution of the United States.

The people of Guam consider Commonwealth status to be a more sophisticated and substantial legal regime than status under the existing Organic Act. They conceive Commonwealth status as involving not only a greater measure of self-government, but also as constituting a more dignified status in the American political family. The Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, for example, though under U.S. sovereignty, have powers that Guam does not now have.

Many of the Guam Commonwealth proposals address fundamental and justifiable concerns, reflecting significant social, political and economic undercurrents in the territory. The overall Commonwealth movement represents a broadly based political consensus in Guam. The core idea of that consensus is that the present relationship with the Federal Government should be addressed and enhanced through legislation reflecting the freely expressed desires of Guam's people.

The people of Guam, who are particularly mindful of the Commonwealth status of their neighbors in the Northern Mariana Islands, are anxious to improve their own political status. Compared to the people of Guam, the citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands are relative newcomers to the American political family. The negotiations of free association status for other islands of the former Trust Territory also spurred Guam's guest.

But even without regard to those comparisons, and in absolute terms, it is clear to us that after almost 40 years of Organic Act status, and close to a century of association with the United States, the people of Guam are ready for the benefitis and responsibilities of increased self-government. They contribute in highly significant and commendable ways to the nation's welfare, particularly to national defense. Guam's status should reflect the high degree of loyalty that the territory's U.S. citizens feel for their country and the political maturity that they have achieved.

The Federal Interagency Task Force on the Guam Commonwealth Bill convened in June. Its members have preliminary analyzed the Act, provided initial reviews of the bill's impact on their responsibilities, suggested how some issues could be alternately approached, and developed a plan of procedure for an in-depth review of the many aspects of the legislation.

S. 2178 (H.R. 98) is necessarily a long, complicated and unique piece of legislation, touching upon all major aspects of the relationship between Guam and the Federal Government. Some provisions of the bill seem to us desirable and correct. We adhere to the principle underlying the 1976 legislation that the people of Guam should be vested explicitly with the authority to create their own constitution for the Commonwealth of Guam. We believe it is important that any Commonwealth Act be the subject of a referendum in which all of the qualified voters of Guam would be entitled to participate.

We also agree with the principle that Guam should be authorized to enact its own income tax law, to replace the Federal income tax laws applicable to Guam under the Organic Act. Indeed, in the 1986 Tax Reform Act, Congress provided the procedure to allow such authority, provided administrative safeguards are in place.

Several Task Force members, including Defense, Treasury, United States Trade Representative, Justice and State have expressed significant policy concerns with aspects of the bill. In the view of some of these agencies, certain provisions are not compatible with Commonwealth status. These departments and other Task Force members have therefore asked for revisions of some provisions as well as clarification of the language, history, intent and implications of a number of other provisions. Task Force members have also expressed a need to reconcile some provisions with the framework of the Constitution of the United States and the context of the relationship between the Federal Government and the areas under the sovereignty of the United States that are not states.

While the text of the bill presents problems, there is a clear recognition and realistic understanding in Guam that the specifics of a revised relationship, when enacted, may well vary significantly from the bill as introduced and this perspective is shared by the members of the Task Force.

Moreover, some Task Force members have additional interagency policy coordination responsibilities. For example, Federal trade agencies through the Trade Policy Staff Committee (TPSC) and the Trade Policy Review Group (TPRG) process will need to review the trade sections of the bill to develop the Executive Branch position on that portion of the proposed act.

It is extremely important, therefore, to continue to ensure a responsive and constructive approach to Guam's status proposal to provide the serious interagency consideration, coordination and careful response called for by this strategically sensitive proposal. Thus, we have drawn up a procedural framework for conducting and coordinating the necessary reviews and discussions among Federal agencies and between Task Force and Guam representatives.

The meetings between the Task Force and Guam representatives are not intended to be and will not be political status negotiations. Their purpose is not to negotiate an executive agreement but to enable the Executive Branch to comment intelligently on the Guam Commonwealth Bill and to formulate an overall Administration position which cannot be done without direct contact and dialogue with representatives of Guam. Moreover, these meetings can assist in the legislative process be eliminating misunderstandings, working out problems, achieving consensus, determining areas of agreement, and defining the few issues, if any, on wich a meeting of minds cannot be reached.

We are proposing a general schedule of meetings and study deadlines and suggesting associated working groups within the Task Force to deal with interrelated issues and provisions, under the aegis of the Department of the Interior. Our plan is to bring together, in a series of however many meetings may be necessary, representatives of Guam and pertinent Federal agencies, to permit full discussions and exchanges of information on all subjects and issues raised in S. 2178 (H.R. 98).

Federal agencies will, through that means, be able to learn from Guam's representatives, in detail and with precision, what Guam seeks to achieve by pertinent sections of the bill. Guam's representatives simultaneously, will be able to learn, in detail and with precision, what the concerns of Federal agencies are, in light of the bill's language.

We will undertake, where necessary, to draft alternate language that will meet the objectives and concerns of both entities. Although I do not wish to underestimate the problems involved, we have every expectation that we will succeed in most, and perhaps all, cases.

In any instance in which we are not able to agree with Guam's representatives as to how a problem may be appropriately addressed by Federal legislation, Guam's representatives would, of course, be free to make known their differing views to the Congress—certainly during the hearing process, but at such other times and through such other means as they might choose.

When our meetings are completed, we shall provide Congress with the definitive views of the Executive Branch on the Guam Commonwealth legislation, together with such alternative, proposed legislative language as may be appropriate to implement those views.

We are confident that the recommendations for the enactment of Guam Commonwealth legislation arrived at through this procedure will protect the interest of both Guam and the United States, and be enlightened and fair to the people of Guam.

Sincerely,

JANET J. MCCOY,
Assistant Secretary,
Territorial and International Affairs.●

By Mr. JOHNSTON (for himself, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. BOREN, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. GARN, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. STEVENS, and Mr. WILSON):

S. 318. A bill to facilitate the national distribution and utilization of coal; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

DISTRIBUTION AND UTILIZATION OF COAL

● Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation that would grant the power of Federal eminent domain for the construction of coal slurry pipelines deemed to be in the national interest. Enactment of this bill would facilitate the construction of coal slurry pipelines and provide an important alternate means of transporting domestic coal.

Excessive coal haulage rates result in unnecessarily high electric utility bills for consumers, contribute to the foreign trade deficit, and diminish the competitiveness of our domestic coal industry in the world marketplace. Approximately two-thirds of domestic coal is hauled by rail, and a substantial amount of that coal is captive to one rail carrier.

Unduly high rail rates give a competitive edge to foreign coal-producing nations. Coal imports into the United States are on the rise. The Energy Information Administration [EIA] (Annual Outlook for U.S. Coal 1987, (DOE/EIA-033, May 22, 1987)) projects that our imports of steam coal are expected to rise from 1.3 million tons in 1983, to 5 million tons in 1995, to 7 million tons by the year 2000. According to EIA, most of these imports are projected to come from Colombia and Canada into Florida and west coast States, and have a cost advantage due to low ocean transportation costs relative to United States rail costs.

Coal imports cost us not only business revenues, but jobs. EIA projects tha Colombian coal will, in 1995, displace 2.5 million tons of Kentucky coal, at a cost of 600 miners' jobs, and 0.3 million tons of West Virginia coal. Canadian coal is projected to displace 1.1 million tons of Utah coal, at a cost of 230 miners' jobs, and 1 million tons of Wyoming coal.

Concurrently with these negative developments with respect to coal imports, the United States is suffering losses in terms of the coal export market. The United States has historically been the world's leading coal exporter, but in 1984 lost this position to Australia. By the year 2000, the United States is expected by the EIA to fall to fourth place among exporters of steam coal, with its market share projected to decline also, from 18 percent in 1986, to 12 percent in 2000.

The Energy Information Administration [EIA] (Quarterly Coal Report October-December 1987 (DOE/EIA-0121 (87/4Q) May 1988)) reports that the U.S. coal exports for 1987 totaled 79.6 million short tons, a 6.9-percent-decrease from 1986. The downturn was in large part due to continued price competition from other coal-exporting countries.

A recent report by the National Coal Council confirms that haulage rates are the major factor contributing to this problem, stating that the total cost of transporting export coal is the most significant factor affecting international competitiveness of the U.S. coal industry. Coal slurry pipelines would help to reduce these excessive haulage rates. The Energy Information Administration estimates that by 1995 coal pipeline rates would be anywhere from $12 to $20 per ton less than railroad rates.

My bill would facilitate construction of coal slurry pipelines by granting Federal eminent domain authority for those pipelines found by the Secretary of Energy to be in the national interest. The bill provides, among other things, for: First, small and independent coal producer access to the pipelines; second, the primacy of State water law; third, compliance with environmental control laws; fourth, antitrust review; and fifth protection for historic, wildlife, and conservation areas.

The bill is the same as S. 801, favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources last Congress, with the exception that it does not include an amendment adopted by the committee pertaining to section 2(c) of the Mineral Leasing Act, which currently bans railroads from leasing Federal coal.

Similar legislation to provide Federal eminent domain authority has been considered by the Congress previously. Coal slurry pipeline legislation was approved by the full Senate in 1974. In addition to favorably reporting the bill last Congress, the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee favorably reported coal slurry pipeline legislation in the 97th and 98th Congresses.

Mr. President, the bill I am introducing today would result in substantial savings to consumers, create thousands of new jobs in construction, manufacturing, and service-related industries, and help to increase the competitiveness of U.S. coal. I urge my colleagues to support this measure and to join me as cosponsors of the legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the CONGESSIONAL RECORD, followed by a section-by-section summary of the bill.

There being no ojection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 318

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be referred to as the "Coal Distribution and Utilization Act".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress hereby finds and declares that—

(1) the continuing dependence of the United States on foreign sources for petroleum and petroleum products entails grave national security risks, results in major balance-of-payments deficits, and increases inflation and unemployment in the domestic economy;

(2) the United States possesses extensive coal reserves that must be produced, distributed, and utilized to reduce the Nation's dependence on imported petroleum;

(3) domestic coal reserves cannot be developed and used for fuel unless adequate transportation systems and facilities exist for the efficient and economic distribution of large quantities of coal across great distances to markets in interstate and foreign commerce at competitive prices;

(4) the Nation's coal distribution system must include interstate coal pipeline distribution system that will assist the Nation in the development and efficient utilization of coal resources;

(5) the construction of interstate coal pipeline distribution system to distribute domestic coal will be facilitated by granting the power of eminent domain to certain interstate coal pipeline distribution systems;

(6) the construction of interstate coal pipeline distribution systems is a public use that justifies granting the Federal power of eminent domain to those systems for which a determination of national interest has been made pursuant to this Act;

(7) the water resources of the States are necessary for the development of other resources within those States, and State water laws or terms and conditions of permits and authorizations for the appropriation, use, and diversion of water that restrict, limit, or condition the export of water in interstate coal pipeline distribution systems are reasonable and permissible means for the protection of the resources and the public interests of States;

(8) State water law and interstate compacts are carefully balanced and structured systems for the allocation of water;

(9) the national interest is best served by developing interstate coal pipeline distribution systems pursuant to those State water laws, interstate compacts, and laws governing the interstate allocation of water, including, notwithstanding any adverse impact such law may have on interstate commerce, laws relating to or prohibiting the export or use of water within or outside the State granting or denying such export or use; and

(10) the need for a national coal distribution system is subservient to the national interest in the primacy of State water law, interstate compacts, and laws governing the interstate allocation of water.

(b) The purpose of this Act is to facilitate the development of interstate coal pipeline distribution systems by granting the Federal power of eminent domain to those interstate coal pipeline distribution systems that are determined to be in the national interest: Provided, That such development is subject to State water law, interstate compacts, and laws governing the interstate allocation of water.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this Act the term—

(1) "coal" means any of the recognized classifications of coal, including anthracite, bituminous, semibituminous, subbituminous, and lignite;

(2) "interstate coal pipeline distribution system" means any pipeline system the economic purpose of which is the distribution of coal in a liquid or solid state—

(A) from one or more points outside a State to one or more points within a State or between two or more points within a State through another State, or

(B) from one or more points within Alaska to one or more points in a foreign country. Such a pipeline system shall be deemed to be in interstate or foreign commerce if coal that enters the pipeline system is delivered for commercial use in a State other than Alaska, in a territory of the United States, or in a foreign country. An interstate coal pipeline distribution system includes line pipe, valves, pumping stations, water supply pipelines, and such dewatering facilities as are necessary. Such systems shall not include rail, port, highway, or other ancillary coal-gathering or coal-storage facilities.

(3) "private lands"means any interest in any land other than interests—

(A) owned by the United States or agency thereof or owned by any State or any political subdivision thereof;

(B) held in trust by the United States for an Indian or Indian tribe or owned by an Indian or Indian tribe subject to a restraint against alienation imposed by the United States; or

(C) owned by a regional or village corporation established under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement act, as amended, if such land was transferred to such corporation pursuant to said Act;

(4) "right-of-way" means such interest in private lands, excluding any interest in water, as may be necessary for construction, operation, and maintenance of an interstate coal pipeline distribution system;

(5) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Energy or his successor;

(6) "State" means a State of the United States and the District of Columbia; and

(7)(A) "State water law" includes but is not limited to all substantive and procedural State constitutional provisions, statutory law, judicial decisions, administrative regulations, and administrative decisions authorized by the State which apply to water; and

(B) in the case of any State water law which might be argued to be invalid as an improper burden, interference or regulation of interstate commerce, such State water law shall not be deemed to be invalid for that reason insofar as such law applies to the export or use of water within or outside the State granting or denying the export or use of water for any interstate coal pipeline distribution system. State water law includes both existing law and that new law properly enacted or created in the future.

EMINENT DOMAIN AUTHORITY

SEC. 4. (a) AUTHORITY TO MAKE NATIONAL INTEREST DETERMINATION.—(1) Upon application of any person proposing to construct an interstate coal pipeline distribution system, who has filed and secured approval of a water permit or acquired other approriate authorization to control, reserve, appropriate, purchase, transfer, use, export, divert, dedicate or claim water under State water law as provided in section 5, or who proposes to construct any interstate pipeline distribution system using a transport medium other than water, the Secretary shall determine whether the construction of such system is in the national interest.

(2) The determination of the Secretary under paragraph (1) shall be based on the record as a whole, taking into consideration each of the criteria set forth in subsection (b).

(b) FINDINGS.—In making a determination under subsection (a) the Secretary shall make findings concerning the extent to which the system—

(1) would help meet national needs for coal distribution and utilization considering, among other matters, alternative routes, or means of distributing coal;

(2) would enhance competition and provide new market outlets and opportunities for coal producers, including small and independent producers;

(3) would contribute to the national security by encouraging the displacement of imported petroleum, petroleum products, and coal with domestic coal;

(4) would result in economic benefits including—

(A) reduced coal transportation costs;

(B) reduced wholesale and retail electric rates; and

(C) enhanced reliability of supplies of both coal and electric energy; and

(5) would affect the environment, compared to the environmental impacts of alternatives, including—

(A) railroad transportation;

(B) alternative pipeline routes; and

(C) coal utilization facilities, including electric generating plants at coal mine sites and coal gasification plants.

(c) SMALL AND INDEPENDENT COAL PRODUCER ACCESS.—(1) For purposes of protecting small and independent coal producers, the Secretary shall require, as a condition of his determination under subsection (a), that the applicant, prior to application, shall offer to make available to such producers the lesser of—

(A) 10 per centum of the total pipeline capacity of the proposed interstate coal pipeline distribution system; or

(B) that portion of the total capacity necessary to satisfy the total interstate coal pipeline distribution system transportation demand of all such small and independent producers located in the geographic region (as determined by the Secretary) served by such pipeline;

under the same terms and conditions as other contracting entities.

(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term "small and independent coal purducer" means a coal producer, or a broker or cooperative that represents individual coal producers—

(A) who produced two hundred thousand tons or less of coal during the calendar year preceding the calendar year in which the application is filed, and

(B) are not affiliated with any other company. For purposes of this subparagraph, a coal producer shall be treated as affiliated with another company if such company controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with such coal producer. The term "control" shall have the same meaning provided by section 10102 of title 49, United States Code.

(b) PROCEDURES.—(1) Any decision under subsection (a) shall be made after notice and opportunity for presentation of written data, views, or arguments in accordance with section 553 of title 5 of the United States Code. If the Secretary, in his discretion, decides to hold hearings, the Secretary shall expedite such hearings and proceedings, and shall schedule all hearings, proposed findings and conclusions, exceptions and any recommended decisions so that the Secretary's final decision under this section shall be issued and completed within eighteen months from the date of receipt of a complete application, except that the Secretary may, for good cause, extend such eighteen-month period for additional periods of not more than ninety days.

(2) Within thirty days after receipt of an application for a determination under this section, the Secretary shall determine whether the application contains all of the information required for its consideration whereupon he shall, within seven days, publish notice of receipt of the application in the Federal Register. The Secretary shall further notify the Governor of each State in which the interstate coal pipeline distribution system will be located. Each notification shall identify the lands over which the interstate coal pipeline distribution system is to be constructed or operated and the water source to be used. If the Secretary determines that all of the required information is not in the application, he shall immediately notify the applicant of all the deficiencies in the application and provide a reasonable period of time for such applicant to provide additional information.

(3) Each applicant for such a determination shall reimburse the Secretary for administrative and other costs incurred by the Secretary in processing the application in such manner as the Secretary shall, by rule, prescribe.

(e) ANTITRUST REVIEW.—(1) Not later than ten days after any application for a determination under this section is received by the Secretary, the Secretary shall notify the Attorney General of the filing of such application and shall provide the Attorney General with a copy of such application and such other information as the Attorney General may request. The Attorney General shall conduct an antitrust review to determine the likely effects upon competition of approval of such application, and not later than one hundred and twenty days after the date of receipt of such notification shall advise the Secretary of the results of such review, including, but not limited to, findings, and recommendations concerning such terms and conditions as the Attorney General deems necessary to protect and promote competition. No application may be determined to be in the national interest under this section if the Attorney General advises the Secretary in writing that, on the basis of such review, approval of such application is not consistent with the antitrust laws.

(2) For the purpose of paragraph (1), the term—

(A) "antitrust laws" has the meaning such term has under section 1 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 12); and

(B) "antitrust review" has the meaning the term "antitrust investigation" has under section 2 of the Antitrust Civil Process Act (15 U.S.C. 1311).

(f) EMINENT DOMAIN AUTHORITY.—(1) Any person proposing to build an interstate coal pipeline distribution system, the construction of which has been determined by the Secretary to be in the national interest, may, after making good faith efforts to acquire such rights-of-way by negotiations between such person and private landowners, acquire rights-of-way over, under, upon, or through private lands by exercise of the power of eminent domain in the United States district court for the district in which such lands are located or in the appropriate court of the State in which such lands are located. In any action or proceeding to acquire rights-of-way under this section, such action or proceeding shall conform to the laws, practices, and procedures relating to the general eminent domain law of the State where the property is situated, except that in the case of any such State law, practice, or procedure, the effect of which would prohibit any acquisition under this section, or which discriminates against interstate coal pipeline distribution systems, such State law, practice, or procedure shall not be applicable.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be construed to permit any person to acquire any water rights through the exercise of the power of eminent domain granted under this Act.

(3) No interstate coal pipeline distribution system constructed pursuant to the authorities of this section shall be considered to be a Federal project for purposes of the application for or assignment of water rights.

(4) Unless there is no feasible and prudent alternative to the acquisition of a right-of-way and reasonable planning is made to minimize harm resulting from the acquisition, no such right-of-way may be acquired through exercise of the power of eminent domain under this Act if such right-of-way is over, under, upon, or through—

(A) lands of National, State, or local historic significance as determined by the Federal, State, or local officials having jurisdiction thereof; or

(B) lands held by a qualified organization as defined in section 170(h)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 primarily for wildlife refuge, sanctuary, recreational or natural resource conservation purposes.

(g) ALTERNATIVE ROUTES.—(1) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prohibit the applicant from amending his application to request a right-of-way over any alternative route.

(2) The Secretary may require the relocation of any right-of-way sought pursuant to this Act upon a showing that—

(A) such is necessary to enable the United States to realize fully the value of its mineral interest;

(B) such alternative route is available; and

(C) such relocation would not result in unreasonable expense.

(h) PAYMENT FOR FEDERAL COAL.—(1) Each application for a determination of national interest filed pursuant to subsection (a) shall list each instance where the proposed right-of-way crosses lands wherein the United States maintains a mineral interest regarding coal (hereinafter referred to as "Federal coal"). Not later than ten days after any such application is received by the Secretary, the Secretary shall notify the Secretary of the Interior of the filing of such application and shall provide the Secretary of the Interior with a copy of such application and such other information as the Secretary of the Interior may request.

(2)(A) The Secretary of the Interior shall evaluate the effects of approval of such application upon the ability of the United States to realize the value of such mineral interest as a result of approval of the application.

(B) The Secretary of the Interior shall—

(i) establish terms and conditions necessary to minimize the impact of such right-of-way on the establishment of logical mining units; and

(ii) determine the extent to which alternative routes are available which would minimize the impact of granting the right-of-way on the ability of the Federal Government to realize the value of Federal coal.

(C) The Secretary of the Interior shall establish the fair market value of the Federal coal precluded from being recovered as a result of the proposed right-of-way. The Secretary of the Interior shall also establish the amount of reduction of the fair market value of Federal coal which will be more costly to recover as a result of the proposed right-of-way.

(3) The Secretary shall thereafter establish such terms and conditions requiring the applicant to pay the United States the amount established by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to subparagraph (C).

(i) RULES AND REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall promulgate such rules and regulations as are necessary for the expeditious exercise of the authority granted in this section.

(j) ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENT.—In implementing this section, the Secretary shall be subject to the provisions of section 210 of Public Law 90-537, as amended (43 U.S.C. 1511).

PRIMACY OF STATE WATER LAW

SEC. 5 (a) No person, legal entity, or governmental entity (including the United States, a State or subdivision thereof), their agents, permittees, licensees, or transferees, or any interstate coal pipeline distribution system, shall control, reserve, appropriate, purchase, transfer, use, divert, dedicate, dispose of, distribute, acquire, exercise, export or claim water, or any right or interest therein, for export or use within or outside the State granting or denying the export or use of water in an interstate coal pipeline distribution system, unless such control, reservation, appropriation, purchase, transfer, use, diversion, dedication, disposal, distribution, acquisition, exercise, export or claim takes place pursuant to and in compliance with the State water law of that State. Such State water law shall be enforced even though enforcement would result in the failure to build an interstate coal pipeline distribution system, and even though it would result in uneven and disparate effects on interstate commerce.

(b) In full recognition of its powers under Article I, section 8, of the United States Constitution, Congress expressly delegates to the States the power to regulate the use or export of water in interstate coal pipeline distribution systems, through State water laws, notwithstanding any adverse impact such delegation may have on interstate commerce or on any interstate coal pipeline distribution system. This delegation expressly includes but is not limited to provisions of State water law which provide for the establishment or exercise of terms or conditions (including terms or conditions terminating use or relating to or prohibiting the export of water) on permits or authorizations for, interests in, or rights to control, reservation, appropriation, purchase, transfer, use, diversion, dedication, disposal, distribution, acquisition, exercise, export or claim of water for the export or use in any interstate coal pipeline distribution system.

(c) Nothing in this Act shall—

(1) impair the validity of or preempt any provision of State water law, or of any interstate compact governing water;

(2) alter the rights of any State to its apportioned share of the waters of any body of surface or groundwater, whether determined by past or future interstate compacts, or by past or future legislative or final judicial allocations;

(3) preempt or modify any State or Federal law or interstate compact dealing with water quality or disposal;

(4) confer upon any non-Federal entity the ability to exercise any Federal right to the waters of any stream or to any ground water resources; or

(5) affect water rights of any Indian or Indian tribe which were established by the setting aside of a reservation by treaty, executive order, agreement or Act of the Congress.

(d) No waters to which a Federal right can be asserted shall be used or exported in any interstate coal pipeline distribution system, unless authorized pursuant to and subject to State water law in the same manner as provided for in subsection (a).

APPLICATION OF STATE AND LOCAL LAW

SEC. 6. (a) Nothing in this Act shall impair the validity of or in any way preempt the applicability of a State water law to an interstate coal pipeline distribution system even if such applicability discriminates against or would have the effect of prohibiting the location, construction, operation, or maintenance of such pipeline.

(b) Nothing in this Act shall impair the validity of or preempt any State or local law, regulation, or rule of law pertaining to the location, construction, operation, or maintenance of an interstate coal pipeline distribution system except where such State or local law, regulation, or rule of law discriminates against interstate coal pipeline distribution systems.

UNDERGROUND CONSTRUCTION

SEC. 7. All coal pipelines granted Federal powers of eminent domain, pursuant to the provisions of this Act, for rights-of-way and extensions thereof shall, to the maximum extent practicable, consistent with environmental protection, safety, and good engineering and technological practices, be located underground, and the person holding such right of Federal eminent domain shall replace sufficient topsoil on disturbed areas so that a vegetative cover, comprised of native species where practicable, can be reestablished at least equal in extent of cover as that which sustained the natural vegetation in the area.

CONTINUING JURISDICTION OF STATE PUBLIC UTILITY COMMISSIONS

SEC. 8. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to require any forms of automatic passthrough of, or preempt the ratemaking authority of any State utility regulatory agency or the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission with respect to costs related to construction, operation, and maintenance of any interstate coal pipeline distribution system, whether or not such costs have been provided for by contract between a utility and the interstate coal pipeline distribution system operator.

APPLICABILITY OF ENVIRONMENTAL CONTROL LAWS

SEC. 9. Any interstate coal pipeline distribution system authorized under this Act shall be subject to the requirements of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, as amended (33 U.S.C. 466 et seq.), and any other applicable State and Federal environmental control laws.

WATER DISCHARGE REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 10. With respect to any proposed pipeline distribution system using water as the transport medium, prior to the issuance of any findings pursuant to section 4 of this Act, the Secretary shall notify the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency of his consideration of the application for a determination under subsection (4)(a). The Secretary and the person applying for such determination shall provide such information as the Administrator shall require to conduct a review of the ability of the proposed interstate coal pipeline distribution system to comply with Federal water discharge requirements. The Administrator shall have one hundred and twenty days from the date of receipt of such notification to conduct such review and to advise the Secretary with respect thereto. The Secretary shall not issue any findings pursuant to section 4 unless he has received a report from the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency advising that, in the judgment of the Administrator, it can reasonably be expected that the water discharge can meet the requirements of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act.

ACCESS TO COAL PIPELINE TRANSPORTATION CONTRACTS

SEC. 11. (a)(1) By failing a contract between a prospective shipper and a pipeline carrier with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Commission), within ten business days of signing said contract, any person operating or proposing to operate an interstate coal pipeline distribution system may enter into contracts with one or more shippers of coal to provide transportation under specified rates, terms, and conditions but may not unreasonably discriminate by refusing to enter into similar contracts under similar rates, terms, and conditions with other shippers who are seeking service from the same origin areas to the same terminus areas and are ready, fit, willing, and able to enter into such contracts in a contemporaneous period. The term "ready, fit, willing, and able" as used in this section includes, but is not limited to, financial fitness. Such contract filing shall include all rates, terms, and conditions of said contract.

(2) Service under a contract executed pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection is deemed to be a separate and distinct class of service. Persons operating interstate coal pipeline distribution systems shall be obligated to perform only those duties specified by the terms and conditions of any such contract in connection with the services provided under such contract. Service under such contracts shall not be interrupted for the purpose of prorating or allocating to other shippers the pipeline capacity committed to service under such contracts.

(b)(1) Any person operating or proposing to operate an interstate coal pipeline distribution system who files contracts under this section for the transportation of a volume of coal which is less than the volume of coal that would totally obligate the capacity of the pipeline shall, in the sixty-day period beginning on the date of the filing of such contract, enter into contracts with shippers who are ready, fit, willing, and able to enter into such contracts under rates, terms, and conditions similar to the rates, terms, and conditions contained in the contract that has been so filed. That person shall enter into such similar contracts in the chronological order in which binding written offers to enter into such similar contracts are submitted to such person. The obligation imposed by this subsection shall remain in effect—

(A) until the capacity of the pipeline is totally committed for providing transportation under contracts approved under this section, or

(B) until the end of the sixty-day period, whichever occurs first.

(2) Not later than the thirtieth day following the end of such sixty-day period, a shipper of coal may file a complaint with the Commission on the grounds that the person operating the interstate coal pipeline distribution system is violating this subsection.

(3) If, following a notice and an opportunity for a hearing, but not later than the thirtieth day following the filing of a complaint in accordance with paragraph (2) of this subsection, the Commission finds that the person is violating this subsection and has, with respect to the complaining shipper, an obligation under this subsection to enter into a contract, the Commission shall order that person to provide the service specified in the offer under such rates, terms, and conditions contained in the contract that is filed with the Commission under paragraph (1) of this subsection. In addition, if the Commission finds that a person is violating this subsection by entering into contracts with shippers of coal pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection in an order other than the order in which binding offers are submitted, the Commission shall establish the proper order of such for approval under subsection (c) of this section.

(4) The Commission may not approve, under this section, any contract for the transportation of coal by pipeline—

(A) if approval of such contract will result in the total tonnage of coal obligated to be transported by the pipeline in any period under contracts approved under this section exceeding the maximum capacity of the pipeline in such period; or

(B) if the provision of coal transportation services under such contract would result in a destructive competitive practice.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1 sets forth the short title.

Section 2 sets forth the findings and purpose of the bill which is to facilitate the development of interstate coal pipeline distribution systems by granting the Federal power of eminent domain to those systems that are determined to be in the national interest. Any such development shall be subject to State water law, interstate compacts, and laws governing the interstate allocation of water.

Section 3 sets forth the definitions.

Section 4 sets forth procedures for granting and acquiring the Federal power of eminent domain. Subsection (a) requires the Secretary of Energy to determine whether the construction of the proposed interstate coal pipeline system would be in the national interest. Prior to a determination, the applicant must file and secure approval of any necessary water permit or other necessary authorization relating to water. The intent of the remaining provisions of the section is self-explanatory.

Section 4(b) requires the Secretary of Energy to make findings on five specified criteria as a basis for determining whether the pipeline is in the national interest. The criteria include meeting national needs for coal distribution and utilization, competition, national security, economic benefits, and the environment.

Section 4(c) sets aside a portion of the capacity of the pipeline for small and independent producers, defined as those who produce 200,000 tons of coal or less, and are not affiliated with other companies.

Section 4(d) provides for procedures and time limitations on proceedings required for the Secretary to make a national interest determination.

Section 4(e) requires the Attorney General to conduct an antitrust review to determine the likely effects upon competition of approval of the application for an interstate coal pipeline system. No application may be determined to be in the national interest if the application is not consistent with the antitrust laws.

Section 4(f) authorizes the use of Federal eminent domain power to those persons whose applications for constructing an interstate coal pipeline system have been determined to be in the national interest. Nothing in the section is to be construed to permit any person to acquire any water right through the exercise of the power of eminent domain granted under the Act. This provision imposes certain limitations on rights-of-way that may be acquired by exercising the power of eminent domain The remaining provisions of the section are self-explanatory.

Section 4(g) permits the applicant to amend its application to request a right-of-way over any alternative route. The Secretary may also require the relocation of any right-of-way under certain circumstances.

Section 4(h) requires the Secretary of the Interior to evaluate the effects of a proposed interstate coal pipeline system upon the ability of the United States to recover the value of certain affected mineral interests. The Secretary shall require the applicant to pay the fair market value of coal precluded from being recovered and the reduction in fair market value of coal which will be more difficult to recover as a result of the proposed right-of-way.

Section 4(i) requires the Secretary of Energy to promulgate rules and regulations necessary to exercise the authority provided for in this section.

Section 4(j) is self-explanatory.

Section 5(a) expressly prohibits any person, legal entity or governmental entity (including the United States and States or local governmental bodies) from controlling, reserving, appropriating, purchasing, transferring, using, diverting, dedicating, disposing of, distributing, acquiring, exercising, exporting or claiming water or any right or interest therein, for export or use within our outside the State granting or denying such export or use in an interstate coal pipeline distribution system, unless such export or use take place pursuant to and in compliance with the State water law of such State. State water law is to be enforced even if it means that an interstate coal pipeline distribution system could not be constructed, and even if it results in uneven and disparate effects on interstate commerce.

Section 5(b) is a clear and express statement of the intent and policy of Congress, acting in recognition of and pursuant to its Commerce Clause powers, to delegate to the State the power to regulate the export or use of water in any coal slurry pipeline distribution system, through State water laws, in a manner which might otherwise not be permissible. This delegation expressly includes, but is not limited to, the provisions of State water law which provide for the establishment or exercise of terms or conditions on permits or authorizations for, interests in, or rights to control, reservation, appropriation, purchase, transfer, use, diversion, dedication, disposal, distribution, acquisition, exercise, export or claim of water for the export or use in any interstate coal pipeline distribution system, notwithstanding any adverse impact such delegation may have on interstate commerce or any interstate coal pipeline distribution system.

Section 5(c) provides that this Act shall not impair the validity of or preempt any provision of State water law or of an interstate compact governing water, alter any State's share of surface or ground water as determined by past or future interstate compacts, legislative action or judicial decisions, preempt any State or Federal law or interstate compact dealing with water quality or disposal, confer upon any non-Federal entity the ability to exercise any Federal right to waters of any stream or to any ground water, or affect water rights of any Indian or Indian tribe, as set forth.

Section 5(d) prohibits any interstate coal pipeline from using water to which a Federal right can be asserted, unless such use is authorized pursuant to State water law.

Section 6(a) provides that nothing in this measure shall impair the validity of or preempt in any way the applicability of State water law to interstate coal pipeline distribution systems even if such law prohibits or discriminates against the location, construction, operation or maintenance of such pipelines.

Section 6(b) provides that State and local laws and regulations are not preempted by S. 801, unless such laws discriminate against interstate coal pipeline distribution systems.

Section 7 requires underground construction, to the maximum extent practicable, of interstate coal pipeline systems. This section also requires the replacement of topsoil in disturbed areas.

Section 8 provides that nothing in this measure requires any forms of automatic passthrough if, or preempts the ratemaking authority of any State utility regulatory agency or the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission with respect to costs associated with the interstate coal pipeline system.

Section 9 provides that interstate coal pipeline systems authorized by this bill are subject to the requirements of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, as amended, and other applicable State and Federal environmental control laws.

Section 10 requires, with respect to any proposed coal pipeline distribution system using water as the transport medium, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to conduct a review of the ability of any interstate coal pipeline system to comply with Federal water discharge requirements. The Secretary shall not make findings pursuant to section 4 unless the Administrator reasonably expects that the water discharge from the proposed system can meet the requirements of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act.

Section 11(a) provides that any person who proposes to operate an interstate coal pipeline system, and files with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission a contract between a prospective shipper and a pipeline carrier within ten business days of signing the contract, may enter into contracts with one or more shippers of coal to provide transportation under specified rates, terms and conditions, but may not unreasonably discriminate against other shippers.

Section 11(b) provides that in cases where the pipeline operator files a contract under this section for the transportation of a volume of coal which is less than the total pipeline capacity the operator shall enter into subsequent contracts with shippers in the chronological order in which written offers are submitted, provided the shipper is "ready, fit, willing, and able". This section also provides a shipper with the right to file a complaint with the Commission if access to the pipeline is unfairly denied by the pipeline operator. This provision further provides that the Commission may not approve a contract if it would result in a transportation obligation that exceeds the maximum capacity of the pipeline, or if it would result in a destructive competitive practice.●

S. 319. A bill to effect the exchange of lands to the U.S. Forest Service and the Salt Lake City Corp. within the State of Utah and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

THE SALT LAKE CITY WATERSHED IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1989

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today to introduce legislation with my colleague from Utah, Senator HATCH.

This bill is entitled the Salt Lake City Watershed Improvement Act of 1989. Essentially, it is a land exchange between the U.S. Forest Service and the city of Salt Lake which, if adopted by the Congress, will promote more efficient management and protection of the city's watersheds on the north and east benches of the Wasatch Range. The areas affected by the exchange are Ensign Peak through City Creek and Red Butte over to Parley's Canyon.

The legislation would transfer 8,950 acres of national forest land to the city and 8,935 acres of Salt Lake City land to the Forest Service.

The bill, as written will maintain the Utah State antidegradation policy, and the congressional act of 1914 which prohibits mining after that date. Management of pre-1914 claims will remain under Federal jurisdiction.

The protection of the city's water supply has been one of my primary concerns since the late 1960's when I was Salt Lake City's water commissioner. This particular bill, like earlier efforts to prevent development in Little Cottonwood Canyon, will keep Salt Lake City's water among the purest in the Nation.

From a management standpoint, Senator HATCH and I believe both the Forest Service and the city will enjoy a much easier time of providing stewardship over these lands.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee and the full Senate will act promptly on this measure.●

By Mr. DURENBERGER (for himself, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. WILSON, and Mr. SANFORD):

S. 320. A bill to provide that certain individuals with physical or mental impairments are allowed to continue medicare coverage at their own expense; to the Committee on Finance.

DISABLED AMERICANS WORK INCENTIVE ACT OF 1989

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I am honored to come before you today to introduce the Disabled Americans Work Incentive Act of 1989. I first want to express my great admiration and gratitude to Deborah McKeithan without whom this bill would not exist. Her courage, dedication, and perseverance has taught us about the valuable contributions that disabled Americans can make in our society if given the same chances that everyone else have.

The Disabled Americans Work Incentive Act will remove the disincentives in the Medicare law which act as a barrier for those disabled individuals who attempt to go back to work and find that they cannot get health insurance or are defined as "uninsurable" by their employers and do not qualify for their employers health care benefit plan.

Under current law, disabled individuals can work for a 2-year trial period and still remain eligible for Medicare. However, after that period, he or she faces a choice: Quit work and go back on disability insurance or continue to work but without health insurance coverage. For an individual suffering from a chronic disability, health insurance is essential. Thus, there really is no choice.

This bill would allow disabled individuals to continue their coverage under Medicare after the 2-year limit by paying a reasonable premium. The cost for the premium for part A of Medicare would be equal to the current premium for voluntary enrolled elderly beneficiaries. The part B premium would be equal to four times the premium for enrollees covered under current law. Current law is 25 percent, four times is self financed. Total premiums would not exceed 8 percent of ones income.

The Report of the Disability Advisory Council indicates that "The availability of employer health insurance benefits and other employee benefits is a significant factor in promoting job retention and job application by people with physical or mental impairments." The Council also found that two-thirds of all Americans with disabilities between the ages of 16 and 64 are not working. Of these who are not working, another two-thirds said they would like to work. If current law unchanged, we will not fully benefits from the work of Clint Schultz, a young quadraplegic in Minnesota who has a masters degree in rehabilitation counseling. Clint would like to be employed full-time, working for the rights of the handicapped at the State level in Minnesota, but the risk of going uninsured would be so devastating that full-time employment is out of the question. Mr. President, we cannot afford to waste the contributions and talent that people like Deborah McKeithan and Clint Schultz can make to our work force simply because current programs act as disincentives to those who want to work.

There are obvious financial and social benefits to society when disabled people work. More and more we are able to see the benefits of integration as people with disabilities are able to learn from and develop relationships with nonhandicapped individuals and have greater opportunities to exercise choice in their lives. Outlays for SSDI benefits are also reduced as individuals leave the SSDI rolls and gain self-sufficiency and independence.

I urge all of my colleagues to join me in securing passage of this important legislation. Mr. President, I request that the full text of the legislation be included as part of the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 320

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 1. PERMITTING CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS WITH PHYSICAL OR MENTAL IMPAIRMENTS TO CONTINUE MEDICARE COVERAGE AT THEIR OWN EXPENSE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part A of title XVIII of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"CONTINUED HOSPITAL INSURANCE BENEFITS FOR UNINSURED INDIVIDUALS WITH PHYSICAL OR MENTAL IMPAIRMENTS

"SEC. 1819A. (a) Every individual who—

"(1) has not attained the age of 65,

"(2) was entitled to benefits under this part under section 226(b), but such entitlement was terminated because the individual engaged in substantial gainful activity,

"(3) is determined, on an annual basis, to continue to have the physical or mental impairment upon which the benefits described in section 226(b)(2) were based,

"(4) has been entitled to or enrolled for benefits under this part for each month (other than a month in which the individual is enrolled in a group health plan described in section 1862(b)(3)(A)(iv) by reason of the individual's or the individual's spouse's current employment) since the first month in which the individual was entitled to benefits under this part, and

"(5) is not otherwise entitled to benefits under this part, shall be entitled to enroll in the insurance program established by this part.

"(b) An individual may enroll under this section only in such manner and form as may be prescribed in regulations, and only during an enrollment period prescribed in or under this section.

"(c)(1) An individual's initial enrollment period shall begin on the first day of the third month before the month in which the individual first satisfies the requirements of subsection (a) and shall end 7 months later.

"(2) In any case where the Secretary finds that an individual's enrollment or nonenrollment under this section is unintentional, inadvertent, or erroneous and is the result of the error, misrepresentation, or inaction of an officer, employee, or agent of the Federal Government, or its instrumentalities, the Secretary may take such action (including the designation for such individual of a special initial or subsequent enrollment period, with a coverage period determined on the basis thereof and with appropriate adjustments of premiums) as may be necessary to correct or eliminate the effects of such error, misrepresentation, or inaction.

"(3)(A) In the case of an individual who—

"(i) at the time the individual first satisfies subsection (a) is enrolled in a group health plan described in section 1862(b)(3)(A)(iv) by reason of the individual's (or the individual's spouse's) current employment, and

"(ii) has not elected to enroll under this section during the individual's initial enrollment period, there shall be a special enrollment period described in subparagraph (C).

"(B) In the case of an individual who—

"(i) has enrolled in the program under this part during the individual's initial enrollment period or is described in subparagraph (A)(i),

"(ii) has enrolled in this program during any subsequent special enrollment period under this paragraph during which the individual was not enrolled in a group health plan described in section 1862(b)(3)(A)(iv) by reason of the individual's (or individual's spouse's) current employment, and

"(iii) has not terminated enrollment under this section at any time at which the individual is not enrolled in such a group health plan by reason of the individual's (or individual's spouse's) current employment, there shall be a special enrollment period described in subparagraph (C).

"(C) The special enrollment period referred to in subparagraphs (A) and (B) is the period beginning with the first day of the first month in which the individual is no longer enrolled in a group health plan described in section 1862(b)(3)(A)(iv) by reason of current employment and ending 7 months later.

"(d)(1) The period during which an individual is entitled to benefits under this part by reason of this section (in this section referred to the individual's 'coverage period') shall begin on whichever of the following is the latest:

"(A) In the case of an individual who enrolls pursuant to subsection (c)(1)—

"(i) before the month in which the individual first satisfies subsection (a), the first day of such month,

"(ii) in the month in which the individual first satisfies subsection (a), the first day of the month following the month in which the individual so enrolls,

"(iii) in the month following the month in which the individual first satisfies subsection (a), the first day of the second month following the month in which the individual so enrolls, or

"(iv) more than one month following the month in which the individual first satisfies subsection (a), the first day of the third month following the month in which the individual so enrolls; or

"(B) In the case of an individual who enrolls during a special enrollment period pursuant to subsection (c)(3)—

"(i) in the first month of the special enrollment period, on the first day of such month, or

"(ii) in a month after the individual's first month of the special enrollment period, the first day of the month following the month in which the individual so enrolls.

"(2) An individual's coverage period shall continue until the individual's enrollment has been terminated—

"(A) at the close of the month following the month in which the individual files notice that the individual no longer wishes to participate in the insurance program established by this part,

"(B) at the end of a grace period (described in the third sentence of section 1838(b)) for nonpayment of premiums, or

"(C) as of the close of the last month for which the individual meets the requirements of subsection (a) for enrollment under this section.

"(3) No payments may be made under this part with respect to expenses of an individual enrolled under this section unless such expenses were incurred by the individual during a period which, with respect to the individual, is a coverage period.

"(e)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the monthly premium of each individual under this section is the monthly premium determined under section 1818(d).

"(2)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), in the case of an individual with respect to whom the monthly premium under this subsection (and, if applicable, the monthly premium under section 1839(g)) exceeds 8 percent of 1/12th of the adjusted gross income of the individual (as defined by the Secretary), the Secretary shall provide for a proportional reduction in the amount of each such monthly premium so that the sum of such monthly premium does not exceed 8 percent of 1/12th of such adjusted gross income.

"(B) In no case shall a monthly premium be reduced under subparagraph (A) so it is less than 25 percent of the monthly premium otherwise determined.

"(f) Payment of the monthly premiums on behalf of any individual who meets the conditions of subsection (a) may be made by any public or private agency or organization under a contract or other arrangement entered into between it and the Secretary if the Secretary determines that payment of such premiums under such contract or arrangement is administratively feasible.

"(g) Amounts paid to the Secretary for coverage under this section shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund.".

(b) BUY-IN TO PART B COVERAGE.—

(1) Section 1837 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395p) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(j) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the enrollment periods for an individual who is eligible to enroll for benefits under this part only because of enrollment for benefits under section 1819A are the enrollment periods provided under that section.".

(2) Section 1838 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395q) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f) Notwithstanding subsection (a), in the case of an individual who is eligible to enroll for benefits under this part only because of enrollment for benefits under section 1819A, the coverage period shall be the coverage period described in that section.".

(3) Section 1839 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395r) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(g) In the case of an individual who is eligible to enroll for benefits under this part only because of enrollment for benefits under section 1819A, notwithstanding any other provision of this section, but subject to section 1819A(e)(2), the monthly premium is 4 times the monthly premium established under subsection (e) or (b) (as the case may be) for that month.".

(c) BENEFITS SECONDARY TO OTHER EMPLOYER BENEFITS.—Section 1862(b)(3)(A)(iii) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395y(b)(3)(A)(iii)) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "Such provisions also shall apply to an individual during any period in which the individual is eligible for benefits under this title only because of an enrollment under section 1819A.".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply in months beginning after the end of the 60-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act with respect to individuals whose entitlement to benefits under part A of title XVIII of the Social Security Act by virtue of section 226(b) of such Act is terminated after the end of such period.●

BUY INDIAN ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1989

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today the Buy Indian Act Amendments of 1989.

The advantages of promoting Indian economic development through the use of Government purchasing powers was first recognized as early as 1908, when the Buy Indian Act was first adopted. The program was designed to allow the Secretary of the Interior to grant preference to Indians in the purchase of goods and services with funds appropriated for the benefit of Indians. Although the act was well-intentioned, there were ambiguities as to when and where it applied and a record of inconsistency in its implementations.

The Indian Affairs Committee held oversight hearings on the Buy Indian Act and other Government preference programs during the 100th Congress. On the basis of this record it was clear that the law needed to be updated, expanded in its applications and congressional directions given to insure that maximum benefits are obtained while addressing the problems of abuse. The opportunity for abuse, which has occurred primarily in the form of a proliferation of fronts, or non-Indians using Indian owned businesses to obtain Federal contracts, has been under investigation by the Special Committee on Investigations of the Select Committee on Indian Affairs. I anticipate that the special committee will provide extensive documentation of the problems and that we will be able to respond to their findings through this legislation.

The legislation I am introducing today clarifies and strengthens the current Buy Indian Act. It restates current law as it appears in section 47 of title 25 of the United States Code. The bill also recodifies and enhances the Indian preference in employment and training provisions that now appear as section 7(b) of the Indian Self-Determination Act. In doing so, it clarifies the definition of eligible Indian businesses and recognizes and strengthens the ability of tribes to enforce their own preference laws as the most effective means of policing abuses. It is also important to note that the recent Supreme Court decision regarding the legality of States to offer minority contracting would not in any way impact the buy Indian preference, which is protected through the trust relationship between the Federal Government and Indian nations.

This bill is based on proposals formulated by the Council of Tribal Employment Rights Organizations and the National Indian Contractors Association. I commend these two organizations for their initiative in endeavoring to correct the abuses to the act.●

● Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I am joining Chairman INOUYE today in sponsoring legislation to revise the Buy Indian Act. The Select Committee on Indian Affairs conducted numerous hearings on Indian economic development during the 100th Congress. In addition, during this decade, both President Reagan and Secretary Hodel commissioned and received several official recommendations and reports detailing the need for changes in Federal law and policy to enhance the opportunities for the development of reservation economies.

The so-called Buy Indian Act is a vague, one-sentence statute which was originally enacted in an appropriations bill in 1908. In 1986, Secretary Hodel's Task Force on Indian Economic Development found that there was "a lack of central BIA guidance in implementing the Buy Indian Act, and that BIA administration of the act in the field sometimes produceed arbitrary and unfair results." The task force recommended numerous changes in the Buy Indian Act to clarify its scope and to increase opportunities for Indian owned business enterprises. The bill which we are introducing today incorporates these recommendations as well as those received by tribal representatives during the 100th Congress.

In addition, this bill is aimed at eliminating the problem of fronts in buy Indian contracting. Fronts are characterized by non-Indians utilizing Indian owned businesses to obtain Federal contracts. The Special Committee on Investigations has been examining this problem and will soon begin taking testimony which will highlight the need for corrective legislation. It is my hope and expectation that the full Committee on Indian Affairs will defer final consideration of the bill we are introducing today until such time as the special committee has completed its investigation of possible abuses of the current Buy Indian Act. The findings and recommendations of the special committee may very well lead to further refinements in the Buy Indian Act to ensure that it truly operates for the benefit of Indian people. In the interim, I am hopeful that the bill which we are introducing today will provide Indian tribes with an opportunity to focus on and participate in our efforts to provide a workable statutory basis for the administration of procurement activities involving Indian owned businesses.●

S.J. Res. 36. Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to repeal the 22d amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPEAL OF TWENTY-SECOND AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. REID. Mr. President, former President Ronald Reagan recently called on Congress to repeal the 22d amendment.

I agree: President Reagan was right. The 22d amendment, which limits Presidents to two terms, is undemocratic, unnecessary, and unfair.

It tells the people of this country that they cannot elect a President to a third term—in other words, that it would be a mistake to do three times what they had already done two times before.

Senators can serve more than two terms. Members of Congress have no limits on how long they serve. Supreme Court Justices are appointed for life. Why do we force upon the President and the voters a restriction that we have never chosen for ourselves or other Federal officials?

In 1957, Senator Richard L. Neuberger of Oregon introduced before this body a resolution to restore to the American people the right to reelect a President to more than two terms. Senator Neuberger summed it up well when he said:

> The idea of imposing a constitutional limit of two terms on the Presidency was conceived primarily by political opponents of the only President in our history who, in a supreme national crisis, was elected to more than two terms.

Today, I am introducing a resolution to return to the people the right to elect the President of their choice. I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort to restore democracy in America.

S.J. Res. 37. Joint resolution designating the week beginning May 14, 1989, as "National Osteoporosis Prevention Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL OSTEOPOROSIS PREVENTION WEEK

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which would designate the week of May 14-20, 1989, as National Osteoporosis Prevention Week 1989. I am joined in this by Senators CHAFEE, DOLE, BENTSEN, CONRAD, DURENBERGER, HOLLINGS, GARN, INOUYE, MCCLURE, MACK, PRESSLER, WARNER, WILSON, LUGAR, HUMPHREY, HEINZ, STEVENS, NICKLES, THURMOND, JEFFORDS, KASSEBAUM, BURNS, DOMENICI, DANFORTH, HELMS, BOSCHWITZ, COCHRAN, COATS, MATSUNAGA, SHELBY, MOYNIHAN, PRYOR, GLENN, NUNN, BRADLEY, SIMON, BURDICK, LEVIN, SARBANES, SANFORD, PELL, GORE, GRAHAM, REID, ROCKEFELLER, WIRTH, FOWLER, EXON, BREAUX, DIXON, LIEBERMAN, MIKULSKI, METZENBAUM, ROBB, REIGLE, CRANSTON, SIMPSON, GORTON, and LEAHY.

This is the fifth year I have had the honor of introducing legislation to call attention to the problem of osteoporosis, one of America's major public health problems.

Osteoporosis is a condition in which bone tissue becomes progressively thinner as a result of calcium loss which accompanies the aging process. This bone degeneration is commonly associated with low calcium levels and estrogen loss. Although it can affect men as well, it primarily affects older women. Most at risk are thin, caucasian women, who tend to lose bone mass at twice the rate of older men.

Osteroporosis is a fairly common condition. It affects about 25 million Americans, mainly post-menopausal women and older people.

This condition is a major contributing factor in most bone fractures in the elderly. The National Osteoporosis Foundation estimates 1.3 million fractures a year are directly attributable to osteoporosis. This cost America over $10 billion in 1988 and, as the population ages, the cost is expected to increase.

Bone fractures in the elderly, particularly the type of hip fractures associated with osteoporosis, heal slowly. When an elderly person suffers a hip fracture they seldom recover fully. It often means an end to their independence. A hip fracture often leads to institutionalization and is associated with higher rates of mortality among those who suffer them. It is estimated that more than 50,000 older women die each year from complications of hip fracture—a number higher than the number who die annually from breast cancer.

Although there is no known treatment for osteoporosis, many scientists believe that it can be prevented. Studies show that as many as 80 percent of bone fractures resulting from osteoporosis could have been avoided with increased intake of calcium and estrogen. Fifty percent could have been prevented with increased calcium alone.

In this sense, osteoporosis is not just a concern of the elderly. The time to act to prevent osteoporosis is in youth. Because calcium loss is an inevitable part of the aging process, the more bone mass a person accumulates while still young the more protected they are from deformity and fracture when they are old. Therefore, prevention efforts should be directed especially at young women, not only because they are at the highest risk of developing it, but also because of their roles as mothers in instilling good nutrition habits in their children. It is entirely appropriate that the theme of this year's prevention week is "Build a Stronger Future."

I must emphasize that, because osteoporosis probably can be prevented, educational efforts, such as this resolution, can be particularly helpful in reducing the eventual incidence of this condition. Education is one of the most powerful weapons we have against this. Media campaigns and educational efforts of the event's cosponsoring organizations have reached over 10 million Americans in previous years. I ask unanimous consent that the groups and organizations joining the National Osteoporosis Foundation in this effort be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. Res. 38. Joint resolution to designate February 11, 1990, as "World Marriage Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WORLD MARRIAGE DAY

● Mr. BOND. Mr. President, marriage is truly the mortar in the foundation of American life. Although the changing times and tides of our society have taken their toll on the institution of marriage, its basis in trust, commitment, and most importantly love, ensure that this institution will remain a pillar of our civilization. There are more married couples today than ever in the history of the United States. The latest statistics show that 54.6 million married couples reside in America. The institution of marriage has been recognized as a stabilizing influence on society and has had a meaningful impact on lives of individuals. While many Americans have been discouraged over the past two decades as the marital values of lifelong commitment and growth seem to have eroded, today I share with you a spark of optimism; the divorce rates which rose through the sixties and seventies have begun to stabilize in the eighties.

In order to commemorate the strenthening role that marriage has played in America, Senator DANFORTH and I are cosponsoring this resolution to designate February 11, 1989, as "World Marriage Day." Many of us can attest to the virtues of marriage: companionship, fulfillment, and support. Marriage is one of the most important decisions that any individual makes, and its vow is one of the most sacred. I encourage my colleagues to support this resolution honoring married couples striving for a meaningful fulfilling union.●

By Mr. BRADLEY (for himself and Mr. DURENBERGER):

S.J. Res. 39. Joint resolution to designate April 6, 1989, as "National Student Athlete Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL STUDENT ATHLETE DAY

● Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise today with my colleague from Minnesota, Mr. DURENBERGER, to introduce a resolution designating April 6, 1989, as "National Student Athlete Day."

Mr. President, this day will focus attention on the positive role that sports can have on the physical and mental development of young people. Within the proper framework of a school program, sports can build confidence, cooperation, integrity, and maturity. These qualities are necessary for our future leaders.

In spite of all the positive aspects of sports, over emphasis on sports can cause serious harm to young people, even those who pursue sports professionally. The single-minded devotion to athletics among our Nation's schools and colleges too often leads to exploitation and abuse of the student athlete. Only 1 in 10,000 high school athletes who dream of a career in professional sports ever realize that aspiration, while those who do can expect a professional sports career of less than 4 years. Too many young people sacrifice academic achievement to the dream of professional athletics. And all too frequently schools are willing accomplices—demonstrating no interest in students' academic progress and keeping students eligible even when their real academic achievement levels do not warrant it. Students must realize that education is a lifelong asset, and schools have to remember that their primary responsibility is education.

Last year, 44 States proclaimed April 6 as Student Athlete Day. With the help of a broadened observance of National Student Athlete Day, educators will be able to promote the role of sports within education to stress the need for a balance between academics and athletics. This effort will direct young people away from the idea that sports can be a substitute for education. The programs planned include professional athletes, who have returned to college to complete their degree, speaking to students about the importance of education. Since athletes are role models for many young people, the day will stress the positive role sports can play in development of personal character. Athletes will also speak frankly about the dangers of alcohol and drug abuse that threaten our society.

In supporting this important effort we, the U.S. Senate will join with coaches, parents, and educators throughout the Nation to encourage the pursuit of excellence in both academics and athletics.

On behalf of Senator DURENBERGER and myself I ask unanimous consent that the attached resolution be placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 39

Whereas, the student-athlete represents a role model worthy of emulation by America's youth;

Whereas, the past athletic successes of many of America's business, governmental and educational leaders dispell the myth that successful athletes are one-dimensional;

Whereas, such worthy values and behaviors as perseverance, teamwork, self-descipline and commitment to a goal are fostered and promoted by both academic and athletic pursuits;

Whereas, participation in athletics, together with education, provides opportunities to develop valuable social and leadership skills and to gain an appreciation of ethnic and racial groups different from one's own;

Whereas, in spite of all the positive aspects of sport, overemphasis on sport at the expense of education can cause serious harm to an athlete's future;

Whereas, the pursuit of victory in athletics among our nation's schools and colleges too often leads to exploitation and abuse of the student-athlete:

Whereas, less than 1 in 100 high school athletes ever play Division I college athletics;

Whereas, while college athletes in general graduate at the same rate as other students, less than 30 percent of scholarship athletes in revenue producing sports ever graduate;

Whereas, only 1 in 10,000 high school athletes who dream of a career in professional sports ever realize that aspiration, while those who do can expend a professional-sports career of less than 4 years;

Whereas, thousands of America's youth sacrifice academic achievement to the dream of professional athletics;

Whereas, the practice of keeping athletes eligible for participation on a team, even at the high school level, must be abandoned for a policy of ensuring a meaningful education and degree;

Whereas, coaches, parents and educators of student-athletes must express high expectations for academic performance as well as for athletic performance; and

Whereas, there is a need in this Nation to reemphasize the "student" in the term "student-athlete": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That April 6, 1989, is designated as "National Student-Athlete Day" and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe that day with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.●

S.J. Res. 40. Joint resolution to authorize the President to proclaim the last Friday of April 1989 as "National Arbor Day;" to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL ARBOR DAY

● Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, in 1970, 1972, and again last year, Congress legislated and the President proclaimed the last Friday in April as "National Arbor Day." Today, I am introducing a joint resolution which will once again recognize this important day. I am pleased that 50 of my colleagues have joined me in sponsoring this legislation.

Trees are one of our Nation's most important natural resources. They provide the raw materials for our basic industries, stabilize our environment, and add natural grace to our surroundings. The establishment of a National Arbor Day reminds all our citizens of the vital presence of trees, whether in urban areas or in distant wilderness.

Man's impact on the environment and on the future of our planet is increasingly evident. The importance of trees as a natural resource should compel us to act promptly on the problem of forest decline. Scientists have observed declines, serious damage, and death of a number of species of trees in large areas of Europe and the United States. Damage to forests has ranged from decline in growth of several species of pine in southern New Jersey to widespread damage to the ponderosa pine in southern California.

Because we are concerned about damage to our forests and our trees and because we need to acknowledge the contribution that trees make to our health and well-being, I urge the Congress to designate April 28, 1989, as "National Arbor Day." I encourage my colleagues to join us in this effort. I ask unanimous consent to have the joint resolution printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. SPECTER:

S.J. Res. 41. Joint Resolution to designate April 1989 as "Fair Housing Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FAIR HOUSING MONTH

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, today. I am introducing a joint resolution to designate April 1989 as "Fair Housing Month." April 1989 will mark the 21st anniversary of the Congress' historic passage of title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, which is commonly referred to as the Fair Housing Act.

This resolution is similar to resolutions I introduced in the 99th and 100th Congresses.

The Fair Housing Act was passed at a time of great turmoil in our Nation. We had just experienced the shock of the assassination of Martin Luther King and the ensuing violent expressions of frustration and outrage in our cities. Congress responded to this turmoil by passing landmark legislation, which announced a national policy of nondiscrimination in housing. That policy lives on today.

Although the act represented an important step in the Federal Government's efforts to prohibit and end discrimination in housing, debate grew about whether the act's provisions need strengthening and how best to strengthen them.

In 1988, two decades later, Congress enacted the Fair Housing Amendments Act, which Senator KENNEDY and I introduced. This bill represented the first significant reform governing discrimination in housing since 1968, and was endorsed by President Reagan and Vice President Bush. The Federal Government now has authority to file suit in an individual housing discrimination case, and families with children and the handicapped now are protected.

The resolution I am introducing today, in commemorating the historic passage of the Fair Housing Act, reaffirms our commitment to a national policy of fair housing for all Americans.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 41

Whereas the year 1989 marks the 21st anniversary of the passage of title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, commonly referred to as the "Federal Fair Housing Act", declaring a national policy to provide fair housing throughout the United States;

Whereas Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968 was amended by the "Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988" to provide stronger enforcement and a broader protected class;

Whereas the Federal Fair Housing Act prohibits discrimination in housing on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, familial status, or handicap;

Whereas fairness is the foundation of our way of life and reflects the best of our traditional American values;

Whereas invidious discriminatory housing practices undermine the strength and vitality of America and the American people; and

Whereas in this 21st year since the passage of the Fair Housing Act, all Americans must work to continue to improve the Fair Housing Act by strengthening enforcement provisions, by extending the protections of the Act to all our citizens, by assuring there are no victims of discriminatory housing practices, and by making the ideal of fair housing a reality: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation designating April 1989, as "Fair Housing Month" and to invite the Governors of the several States, the chief officials of local governments, and the people of the United States to observe the month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

By Mr. PACKWOOD (for himself and Mr. WIRTH):

S.J. Res. 42. Joint resolution to designate March 16, 1989, as "Freedom of Information Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION DAY

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a joint resolution which authorizes the President to proclaim March 16, 1989, as "National Freedom of Information Day."

March 16 marks the anniversary of James Madison's birthday. Mr. Madison, our fourth President and father of the Bill of Rights, is the American most responsible for many of the constitutional freedoms we enjoy today, in particular, freedom of speech and the press.

James Madison is considered the architect of our Bill of Rights, yet his contribution to our democratic society is all too often overlooked. Mr. Madison understood the importance of free speech and a free press to a democratic government. He knew intuitively that if the American people had access to information about their Government, that Government would be more responsive to their desires. His vision of a society where everyone could openly express their thoughts has helped preserve the other freedoms guaranteed by the Constitution.

Thanks to the efforts of Mr. Madison and others like him, Americans can speak their convictions without fear of censure. A National Freedom of Information Day will remind the American people and the rest of the world that our freedom of expression plays a vital role in both shaping our country and preserving our liberties.

By proclaiming Madison's birthday as "National Freedom of Information Day" we will reaffirm the significance we attach to our most precious liberties. I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring Madison and the principles for which he stood.●

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to join as an original cosponsor of the resolution introduced by my colleagues from Oregon, Mr. PACKWOOD, to designate March 16, 1989, as "National Freedom of Information Day."

In 1919, Woodrow Wilson, perhaps somewhat tongue in cheek, sang the praises of the free exchange of ideas by saying:

I have always been among those who believed that the greatest freedom of speech was the greatest safety, because if a man is a fool, the best thing to do is to encourage him to advertise the fact by speaking. It cannot be so easily discovered if you allow him to remain silent and look wise, but if you let him speak, the secret is out and the world knows that he is a fool.

While President Wilson knew one of the benefits provided by James Madison's inclusion of the freedoms of speech and the press in the Bill of Rights, newspaper publisher William Randolph Hearst viewed the value of the free exchange of ideas with more gravity:

When free discussion is denied, hardening of the arteries of democracy has set in, free institutions are but a lifeless form, and the death of the republic is at hand.

As our country was being formed, Mr. Madison envisioned a new society led by a government open and accesible to the people that it served. He wanted Americans to enjoy what he called a "peculiar" freedom to scrutinize their government. This freedom could only be exercised when the people had access to information about what their Government was doing—access to the truth. The ability to readily obtain and disseminate information is what Mr. Madison secured for us through the Bill of Rights. Freedom of information would ensure that the U.S. Government remain forever by and for the people, as the Constitution states. Our citizens, empowered with information, can hold officials accountable for their actions and make electoral decisions based on honest and open debate. James Madison recognized that a government, faced with an informed society and an active press, must be responsible to its citizens.

As our Government grew, it collected more information about its citizens. Congress then saw the need to pass the Freedom of Information Act to ensure that individuals could have access to the information the Government gathers about them. By enacting the Freedom of Information Act, we declared that Government should work for our citizens, and not against them. Americans have a right to know what records the Government maintains on them, and, with rare exception, a right to obtain those records.

In some societies, the notion of asking questions and receiving an honest answer or holding government officials up to public scrutiny was considered radical, almost unthinkable. As citizens of the United States, we often condemn the lack of these freedoms in other societies.

Yet today many Americans take these freedoms for granted. We sometimes forget that the freedom of information and the opportunity to openly exchange ideas from a foundation for most of our other constitutional freedoms. That is why I believe a "National Freedom of Information Day" in 1989 would serve as a reminder to Americans of the vital roles these liberties have played in shaping this country.●

S.J. Res. 43. A joint resolution designating April 9, 1989, as "National Former Prisoners of War Recognition Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR RECOGNITION DAY

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, today, on behalf of the Senator from Pennsylvania, Senator HEINZ, and myself, legislation designating April 9, 1989, as "National Former Prisoners of War Recognition Day" has been introduced. The 9th of April is an appropriate day to recall America's former prisoners of war since, on that day, in 1942, Bataan fell and thousands of American soldiers were taken prisoner by enemy troops in the Philippines. What followed was the grim, forced march that led to the death of many of those captured. The survivors faced such brutality in prisoner-of-war camps that most were left with permanent disabilities.

There are an estimated 80,000 former prisoners of war in the United States from World War II and other conflicts. These men and women who were captured and imprisoned overseas while serving in our military are owed our respect and our recognition. They have given more than most Americans will ever be called on to give for their country. Through their courage and their sacrifice they have taught us about patriotism, about perseverance, about character.

I hope you will join me, Senator HEINZ, and the 60 Members of this body who have already cosponsored this important resolution. By honoring the American patriots who suffered the hardships of prisoners of war, we acknowledge our debt to them and to the ideals they fought for.●

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise to sponsor, along with my colleague, Senator BOB GRAHAM of Florida, legislation to designate April 9, 1989, as "National Former Prisoner of War Recognition Day." This effort, identical to one undertaken in the last Congress, serves to underscore the importance of the individuals known as POW's and the sacrifices they endured in the cause of freedom.

In his farewell address, former President Ronald Reagan warned Americans against ignorance of their history and their heritage. Mr. President, the experiences of former prisoners of war is an especially vital part of that lesson, and serves as an object lesson on the meaning of self-sacrifice.

Thus, it is fitting to designate April 9 as a day to remember. It is the anniversary of the fall of Bataan—a name synonymous with suffering endured in captivity and a symbol of man's cruelty to other men. We must never forget those who perished or the individuals who still suffer from the horrors of deprivation and torture. It is for this reason that Senator GRAHAM and I led the effort here in the Senate during the last Congress to secure benefits for former POW's for disabilities they continue to suffer from.

Mr. President, I am heartened by the support for this measure by my colleagues here in the Senate. I ask that those who seek to recognize these valorous POW's to join us as cosponsors of this legislation. Americans should be aware of the special sacrifices made for them through a national day of recognition.●

By Mr. THURMOND:

S.J. Res. 44. Joint resolution designating the week of April 9, 1989, as "Crime Victims Week;" to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CRIME VICTIMS WEEK

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President. I am pleased to introduce today legislation which would designate the week of April 9-15, 1989, as "Crime Victims Week."

It is a sad legacy that over the past few weeks, nearly 35 million Americans were victimized annually by criminal acts; 6 million individuals per year are raped, robbed, beaten, or murdered. The impact of crime is devastating to innocent victims and their families. In addition to the physical injuries and the financial losses, the victim is further scarred with the emotional loss of one's sense of dignity, security, and trust in other human beings. It is disturbing that the likelihood of becoming a victim of violent crime is now greater than that of being injured in an automobile accident.

Further compounding the pain and anguish victims must endure has been an historical insensitivity to their plight. The criminal justice system has oftentimes ignored the rights of victims before making crucial decisions regarding their cases or failed to notify them that a defendant had been released on bail. While the system offered legal representation and other forms of aid to the accused, it offered minimal assistance to the victim in recovering from the tremendous burden resulting from victimization.

Six years ago, the President's Task Force on Victims of Crime presented an agenda to correct these injustices and restore balance to the criminal justice system. At the Department of Justice, an Office for Victims of Crime was established within the Office of Justice Programs for the purpose of helping States implement the task force's recommendations. The Federal Government began awarding fines collected from convicted Federal offenders to the States to aid victims of crime. In addition, the National Victims Resource Center within the Office for Victims of Crime was established to provide information on victim assistance programs and laws. Largely as a result of these efforts, community programs for victims have grown in number and now every State has a designated agency responsible for victim services.

Much progress is being made to help the victims adjust, but much more needs to be done. Through the continued efforts of State and local governments and private organizations and concerned citizens, the trauma suffered by the innocent victims of crime will be eased.

I urge my colleagues to support this measure and to join me in focusing America's attention on the plight of crime victims.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the resolution be printed at the end of my remarks.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 44

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

Whereas millions of Americans are victims of crime each year;

Whereas many of those crime victims are traumatized further by the physical, psychological, and financial burdens resulting from their victimizations;

Whereas the sensitivity of our Nation's criminal justice system must be improved when working with crime victims and their families;

Whereas much progress has been made to correct these injustices by implementing in the Federal, State, local, and private sectors the recommendations of the President's Task Force on Victims of Crime; and

Whereas the continuation of these efforts must be encouraged to ensure the restoration of balance to our Nation's criminal justice system and the fair and compassionate treatment of crime victims and their families: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of April 9, 1989, is designated as "Crime Victims Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate programs, ceremonies and activities.

S.J. Res. 45. Joint resolution designating May 1989, as "Older Americans Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

OLDER AMERICANS MONTH

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, as chairman of the Special Committee on Aging, I am introducing today a joint resolution to designate the month of May as "Older Americans Month." I am pleased to be joined by Senator HEINZ, the ranking member of the Aging Committee, as well as other members of the committee including Senators GLENN, BRADLEY, BURDICK, JOHNSTON, SHELBY, REID, GRAHAM, KOHL, PRESSLER, GRASSLEY, WILSON, and WARNER. Recognition of May as "Older Americans Month" is a longstanding tradition of the Congress, going back to 1963.

"Older Americans Month" pays tribute to the immense contributions—both past and present—of our Nation's elderly. Older Americans are an ongoing source of vitality, creativity, productivity, and inspiration for us all. Recognizing the wealth of resources that we have in our senior citizens is but one purpose of "Older Americans Month."

It also gives us a chance to rededicate ourselves to solving the problems of housing, economic security, and health care that face so many older Americans. In the 100th Congress, we worked together to formulate a catastrophic health care bill that will assist thousands of older Americans. With that notable achievement behind us, we face many more challenges in improving the quality of life of the elderly—better pension benefits, safe and affordable housing, and improved access to a range of health care services, including home and community-based long-term care. Commemorating "Older Americans Month" gives us an opportunity to demonstrate our commitment to these issues.

I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring our Nation's senior citizens by supporting this resolution to designate May as "Older Americans Month."

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, it is a pleasure to join with my colleague Senator PRYOR, the new chairman of the Senate Aging Committee, in introducing a joint resolution designating May as "Older Americans Month."

Every year we designate the month on May to stop and recognize the unique contribution, tremendous resource, and growing challenge presented to the Nation by Americans who have celebrated their 65th birthday. One out of eight of us, 28 million in all, have passed that remarkable milestone. They are a group that, in actuality, is not a group at all but rather a collection of individuals of all shapes, sizes, and types; some rich, some poor; some living alone, some with spouses and families; some in rural areas and some in urban; but all having attained the unique perspective gained from over 6½ decades of experience, insight, and accomplishment.

I want to thank Senator PRYOR and my other colleagues for sponsoring this triubte to the contributions of older Americans and the challenge which we as a nation must face to improve the quality of life in an aging society.

As we look to the future, we see the growing role that older Americans will play in America's future—as workers, as leaders, as grandparents, as caregivers, and as the cared for. Older Americans as a group are living longer and growing older. In fact, one-fourth of those who were age 65 in 1980 could expect to survive to at least age 90. While many older Americans will continue as productive members of society, others may require increasing amounts of care as they grow older. We must ensure that all older Americans have the jobs, adequate housing, and necessary medical care and adequate retirement income they have earned and that they justly deserve.

So, Mr. President, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this resolution and urge the Congress to act quickly to designate May as "Older Americans Month."

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 10—SENSE OF CONGRESS WITH RESPECT TO REDUCTIONS IN THE MEDICARE PROGRAMS

Mr. SIMON (for himself, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. REID, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. BINGAMAN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. PELL, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. KERRY, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. WILSON, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. WARNER, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. FORD, Mr. COHEN, and Mr. KENNEDY) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

S. CON. RES. 10

Whereas Medicare is an integral part of our nation's Social Security System;

Whereas Medicare provides needed health insurance coverage for 33 million of our nation's most vulnerable elderly and disabled citizens;

Whereas the Medicare Hospital Insurance Trust Fund is expected to produce an annual net surplus for the Medicare Part A program through 1998;

Whereas Medicare has been the target of budget reductions for each year since fiscal year 1982;

Whereas the General Accounting Office (GAO) recently estimated in the fiscal years 1981-1986 Medicare payments to hospitals had been reduced by $17.3 billion and there have been additional substantial cuts in Medicare Part A expenditures Included in the Omibus Budget Reconciliation Acts for fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989;

Whereas the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission in its March 1, 1988 testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee stated that in 1988 it is likely that the average PPS margin will fall below zero; and

Whereas further budget reductions threaten the financial viability of the delivery systems serving Medicare beneficiaries: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring),

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This concurrent resolution may be cited as the "Protect Medicare 90 Concurrent Resolution".

SEC. 2. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING MEDICARE PAYMENTS TO HOSPITALS.

It is the sense of Congress that Medicare payments to hospitals for fiscal year 1990 should not be reduced below the levels provided in current law for such fiscal year so that the medicare program can continue to meet the necessary costs of assuring continuing access to high quality health care services for the 33,000,000 elderly and disabled beneficiaries participating in the Medicare program.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise today to submit a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of Congress regarding Medicare budget cuts. The resolution simply states that Medicare payments to hospitals for fiscal year 1990 should not be reduced below the levels provided in current law.

I am joined in this effort by 30 of my colleagues in the Senate and approximately 150 House Members in the companion legislation.

We are all appreciative of the difficult decisions that must be made in the coming months with regard to the budget. It is my sense that the Medicare hospital insurance trust fund has already contributed substantially to our deficit reduction efforts. Since 1982 we have reduced Medicare hospital spending $53 billion below project levels. We cannot continue to target the program for substantial cuts without accepting the consequences of those decisions.

Increases in Medicare payments to hospitals have not kept pace with the increases in what hospitals must pay for goods and services. And the gap is widening. I have met with administrators of some of the hospitals suffering. They have done as must as they can to cut costs. They have cut salaries, including their own, and they are struggling for survival.

All categories of hospitals are losing money under Medicare. Even without further Medicare cuts in fiscal year 1990, more than one-fourth of all hospitals next year will lose more than 25 percent under Medicare. It is happening in the inner city of Chicago to hospitals like St. Anne's and Provident. It is happening in rural areas where there's just not another hospital around the corner. And when those hospitals close, the doctors often relocate. One of the consequences of these cuts is that we are averaging one hospital closing every 5 days.

Increasing hospital closures signal diminished access to quality medical care for our poor and elderly, especially in the inner city and rural areas.

Every American family understands the grim reality that if the cost of food, shelter, and clothing exceeds the family's income, bankruptcy and foreclosure are just around the corner. It is just common sense that hospitals cannot keep their doors open when they continue to lose money.

Is this the intent of recent budget cuts? If we were to go about the business of closing hospitals, would we choose Cairo, St. Anne's, Provident and Utlaut Memorial? It is my sense that we would not. That is not to say that we do not have a problem with excess bed capacity. Healthcare delivery is changing and it is my sense that the hospitals are critically aware of that and are trying to make the changes necessary to increase facility utilization. However, excess bed capacity cannot be used as an argument to legitimize these drastic cuts, nor to justify the indiscriminate closings.

There are a lot of questions about the impact of these cuts as well as about the actual savings that are achieved by the reimbursement method.

I don't think we know that these cuts are saving us money in the long run. Are these smart savings? I've asked the GAO to take a look at this whole question of rural and urban reimbursement. Is it saving us or costing us? If we save a few dollars by paying a lower rate and that community loses a hospital, we've lost jobs, health insurance and access to care. People in that town drive further for care and may well end up in a metropolitan area where we will pay the higher rate.

It is the poor and least fortunate among us who are picking up tab here. I am not aware of rich, suburban hospitals with low Medicare and Medicaid patient mixes that are having troubles.

During the next year several reports concerning access to health care and particularly rural health care will be sent to Congress. One year from now we will be in a much better position to gauge the impact of these budget cuts. I suggest we wait until we have the answers to some of these questions before we consider slashing the Medicare budget once again.

Mr. President, I am pleased to be joined in this effort by the distinguished Senator from Kansas, Mrs. KASSEBAUM and the Senator from Minnesota who has been a leader in this area. I thank them for their assistance and support.

I ask unanimous consent that certain articles be inserted in the RECORD.

TWO STATE HOSPITALS CLOSED

CHICAGO.—A large innercity hospital and a tiny rural one Tuesday joined the growing number of community hospitals acrosss the nation forced to close their doors because they can't make ends meet.

St. Anne's Hospital which has 437 beds, is the 10th community hospital in Chicago to shut down since 1986, officials said. It will close its doors within a few weeks after 85 years of service to the West Side, said spokeswoman Candace Huslebus-Fong.

White Hall Hospital, an acute-care facility with 30 beds in southwestern Illinois, is the sixth small rural hospital to shut down in the state since 1986, said Kenneth Robbins, president of the Illinois Hospital Association.

"The fact that both of them were forced to close was no coincidence at all, but the result of conscious decisions of federal and state governments to underfund the Medicare and Medicaid programs that pay for health care for the elderly and the poor." Robbins said.

In 1987, a record 79 community hospitals shut down across the nation and five of them were in Illinois, said Jan Shulman, a spokeswoman for the American Hospital Association.

In Illinois, "the blame lies with a General Assembly that is unwilling to adequately fund the program (Medicaid) and with a nation that is unwilling to come to grips with the need to design a way to provide adequate health care for those who can not pay for their own care," Robbins said.

HOSPITAL TO CLOSE

CHICAGO.—One of the area's largest innercity medical centers announced Tuesday it is closing because it cannot pay its bills. St. Anne's Hospital which has 437 beds on the city's West Side, is the 10th community hospital in Chicago to close in the last three years, officials said.

ST. ANNE'S HOSPTIAL TO CLOSE

St. Anne's Hospital will be shuttered as early as next month, the 10th ailing hospital here to close in the past four years, unless outraged area lawmakers can perform some miracles of their own.

Officials of Ancilla Systems Inc., which runs St. Anne's and seven other Midwest hospitals, confirmed the closing at a Tuesday news conference, attributing the shutdown to slow Medicaid reimbursement and insurmountable financial losses.

The 435-bed hospital has provided medical care on the city's West Side for 85 years. The facility will immediately downgrade its emergency room to a standby facility, will cease all medical and surgical procedures and is making arrangements to discharge or transfer all of its patients.

St. Anne's becomes the 10th Chicago hospital to close since 1984 and the third in the city this year. The announcement was followed by political calls to save the facility.

State Sen. Richard Newhouse, D-Chicago, said he will ask Gov. James R. Thompson to come up with a plan to save the inner-city hospital, while state Rep. Robert LeFlore

Jr., D-Chicago, pledged to seek an increase in Medicaid and Medicare funding in the Illinois Legislature. Even Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., the leader of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee mourned the closing.

"This hospital has provided critical service to the West Side community for more than 85 years," Rostenkowski said in a news release. "It is beyond unfortunate that the current climate of health-care financing drives hosptials such as these—good hospitals dedicated to serving those unable to pay—into insolvency."

St. Anne's officials said the facility has collapsed under the burden of $1.7 million in debt owed it by the Illinois Medicaid program.

Founded as a Roman Catholic hospital in 1903, St Anne's was served by the Sisters of the Congregation of Poor Handmaids of Jesus Christ, who assisted doctors and nurses in ministering to patients' spritual needs.

Cardinal Joseph Bernardin issued a statement calling the closing a great loss to the community.

"I also express personal regret that the reason the sisters decided to close was the inability of the hospital to remain financially viable because reimbursement for services to the poor is inadequate to cover costs," Bernardin said.

Medicare and Medicaid have drastically reduced state and federal commitments, while there has been a large increase in indigent patients, said Alethea Caldwell, president of Ancilla Systems. Following a round of staff layoffs last spring, St. Anne's was operating with only 115 of its beds filled.

WHITE HALL HOSPITAL TO CLOSE THIS WEEK

White Hall Hospital will discontinue providing medical service after Sept. 2 in a move which will cost approximately 52 employees their jobs, the hospital's Board of Directors announced last week.

The announcement said the hospital corporation will not be disbanded, but that the facility will no longer offer acute care or emergency services. The move follows revelations in recent months of crippling debts accumulated by the hospital, attributed to declining patient loads and reduced reimbursements from the state and federal government for treatment provided indigent persons.

Closure of the hospital will mean readjustments for the Greene County Ambulance Service, because the hospital maintained a 24-hour radio dispatch service for ambulance calls. Persons requesting ambulance services called a number which rang at the hospital, and dispatch personnel relayed the call by radio to volunteer EMT crews in the nearest community with an ambulance vehicle.

With the hospital to close, both the White Hall Police Dept. and the Roodhouse Police Dept. reportedly volunteered to move the raido dispatch equipment to their headquarters, and serve as the new relay point for ambulance calls. Also volunteering the use of his office to assist on a temporary basis with the radio dispatch function was White Hall physician, Dr. Abbas Assar, and a similar offer to handle dispatching on a temporary emergency basis was extended by Passavant Hospital in Jacksonville.

However, the Ambulance Committee of the Greene County Board was reported this week to be considering asking Boyd Memorial Hospital in Carrollton to take over the radio dispatch role. Ironically, Boyd Memorial declined to serve in that capacity when the county Ambulance Service was formed several years ago.

Officials said action on the matter is anticipated at the next meeting of the County Board Sept. 14.

Hospital administrator Glenn Klein characterized closure of White Hall Hospital without disbanding its corporate structure as an attempt by the Board of Directors to send a message to the community.

"We are keeping the corporation alive in order to give the town a chance to respond," he said. "We will also stop increasing our indebtedness and make an effort to get receivables collected."

At a series of public meetings in recent months conducted on the hospital crisis, officials revealed the hospital to be about $1 million in debt and losing almost $3,000 a day. Later, a citizen planning committee was named to chart the future of health care in the north-county area, and that group continues to meet.

According to Klein, federal and state licenses will be kept intact in case the community planning committee decides to start rural health clinic.

"I believe the community has concluded that the town doesn't need a 30-bed hospital," he said. "The rural health clinic is the obvious way to go. With almost full funding from Medicare and Medicaid, the clinic should do well if they decide to have one here."

Klein blamed state and federal government policies for forcing closure of the hospital.

"The government is phasing out small hospitals by added controls, only partial funding, and regulations," he said. "We're here today only because of our staff and the quality of their services.

"We cut costs from almost $6,000 a day to only about $2,000," Klein said. "The staff has sacrificed greatly and we have almost no full-time employees."

ST. ANNE'S ENDS 85 YEARS OF SERVICE

Four hundred and thirty-seven bed St. Anne's Hospital located on the city's west side, after 85 years of serving all who entered her doors, has announced plans to discontinue its acute care operations. The hospital has petitioned the Illinois Health Facilities Planning Board for permission to, in effect, transfer certain key services to St. Elizabeth's Hospital, its nearby affiliate.

Both hospitals are members of Ancilla Systems, a multi-hospital company sponsored by the Poor Handmaids of Jesus Christ (PHJC) religious congregation, whose commitment, for more than 100 years, has been to alleviate sickness with special sensitivity to the poor. Ancilla Systems, in addition to its inner city presence in Chicago, operates hospitals in East St. Louis, Illinois, and Gary and East Chicago, Indiana, among other sites.

Sr. Kathleen Quinn, Provincial of the Poor Handmaids of Jesus Christ, said, "We began examining our mission to the inner city and how to continue serving the poor and powerless back in 1984. At that time, we recognized that we would not be able to continue our mission in Chicago without making changes in our approach to health care delivery. Since that time, reimbursement structures have continued to decline, as both Medicare and Medicaid have drastically reduced state and federal commitments to providing for the health care needs of the public, including the community residents using St. Anne's services. Philanthropic efforts have overlooked the needs of the residents, and the Cook County Commissioners continue to push for a new hospital, rather than contract with community-based providers for the in-patient needs of the county health care recipients."

Alethea Caldwell, president and CEO of Ancilla Systems, said "The closure has significant economic impact on the community and the employees of St. Anne's. It is also a symptom of the lack of a national health care policy in, and the solution to, the under funded access to health care for the poor."

Sr. Judian Breitenbach, PHJC, Chairperson of the Ancilla Systems Board, stated, "We will continue to focus our efforts to serve the west side; first, through various services at the St. Anne's Professional Office Building and secondly; through our continued presence at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, approximately four miles east of St. Anne's." She added, "Our commitment to enhance Catholic health care in the areas we serve will continue as we look for partners to help us meet the health needs of the community formerly served by St. Anne's.

"While we continue to provide those outpatient services we can identify as necessary, we must focus our very scarce resources, both financial and otherwise, on strengthening St. Elizabeth's Hospital, seeking other health care partnerships, and solidifying our future role in health delivery in Chicago," Caldwell further stated.

The hospital will immediately downgrade its emergency department to stand-by and cease all hospital medical/surgical admissions. The hospital and its medical staff are making arrangements for the appropriate discharge and transfer of its remaining medical and surgical patients.

HOSPITALS FACE FINANCIAL STRESS AND CLOSINGS

A 437-bed Chicago Hospital and a 30-bed facility in south central Illinois closed their doors forever in September, bringing to 14 the number of Illinois hospitals that have shuttered in the past two years.

St. Anne's Hospital, Chicago, and White Hall Hospital, White Hall, both served large numbers of poor patients.

They are the latest victims of a combination of financial problems stemming from Medicaid reimbursements that don't keep pace with the costs of providing care for poor patients.

However, the real problem with these closings is the areas in which the hospitals were located. Of the 14 hospitals that have closed since 1986, most fell victim to financial problems because of Medicaid. And they are the hospitals that the state of Illinois most needs.

St. Anne's is located in an area of Chicago the federal government has said is already medically underserved.

The same was true for nine other Chicago hospitals that have closed since 1986.

Patients who once went to White Hall Hospital now will have to travel more than 15 miles to reach the next closest facility.

The financial stress that contributed to the closing of these institutions is unparalleled in recent history.

Illinois hospitals today are beset with Medicare cut backs; a half-billion-dollar burden of indigent care; spiraling liability premiums plus related costs; and a regulatory climate, that squeezes hospital resources, which should be spend on patients.

At St. Anne's, 42 percent of the patients were Mediaid recipients. At White Hall, 35 percent of the patients served were on Medicaid. According to federal law passed in December 1987, disproportionate share payments are to be made to hospitals that are dependent on Medicaid for their financial existence.

The Illinois Department of Public Aid has not paid a nickel of the estimated $15 million needed to keep disproportionate share hospitals, such as St. Anne's and White Hall, solvent.

Illinois' $15 million disproportionate share allowance was to take effect July 15, 1988.

GLOOMY MOOD MATCHES DAY AT HANNIBAL HOSPITAL

(By Cherry Brieser)

HANNIBAL, MO.—Hospital employees filed into the former St. Elizabeth's Hospital chapel Thursday for the sad, but not unexpected announcement that a sixth round of staff reductions were being made at the Hannibal Regional Health Care Center.

Cathy Crane, a 29-year-old LPN, attended the 2 p.m. meeting after receiving a phone call at her home that morning, informing her she'd been cut back to five days of work every two weeks.

"They're cutting our hours back so we can't afford to live," said Crane, who worked three years at Levering Hospital before that facility and St. Elizabeth's merged to become Hannibal Regional.

Employees munched half-heartedly on cookies and sipped coffee, their spirits as melancholy as the overcast, dreary autumn weather.

At a press conference the same day, administrator Robert Mabry said the cuts were the final staff changes expected to result from the merging of the two facilities. About 25 employees were laid off and the hours of 35 others were reduced.

This week's cuts were based on seniority and job classification, saving $750,000 to $800,000 a year.

If hospital patients census increases, part-time staff will be called to work extra hours and laid off people rehired when vacancies occur, administrators say.

This week's layoffs and five previous ones were prompted by a drop in patients and growing hospital deficits. The 150-bed St. Elizabeth's currently averages about 85-90 patients daily.

At Levering Hospital, six blocks away, preparations are underway to find new housing for elderly patients in the 24-bed Omni Care Unit before the hospital closes Dec. 21.

"It's a real difficult time," said Jessie Wilson, interim director of nursing. In charge of the nursing program at Hannibal-La Grange College, Wilson was brought in earlier this month as a consultant to help hospital staff through the transition period.

Wilson met privately with three employees at Levering Hospital Thursday morning and informed them of the layoffs.

"We've been talking to employees all along," Wilson said. "They knew it was coming. They can get on with their lives now."

Reaction varied from anger to requests to be rehired later, Wilson said.

Employees are going through loss, shock, anger and depression, Wilson said. Morale is low "even for employees not affected," Wilson said. The health care center now employs about 375 people.

The merging of the two Hannibal hospitals was necessary for the survival of a health care system in the community, Wilson said.

But she acknowledges the problems of building a cohesiveness between two different hospital staffs. "Each hospital has its own personality and philosphy. It's like splitting up two families."

"We now have to have a time for healing," Wilson said.

DOMINO EFFECT IS SEEN IN CLOSING OF HOSPITALS

(By Jean Latz Griffin)

The spate of hospital closings in inner-city neighborhoods is likely to have a domino effect in which poor patients forced out of each shuttered hospital will turn to the remaining hospitals and overwhelm the financial resources of those facilities, health-care experts predict.

Already 10 Chicago hospitals have closed their doors since 1986, including a West Side hospital that Tuesday formally announced the end of an 85-year tradition of service.

All those hospitals were in low-income neighborhoods and had large numbers of patients dependent on the state's underfunded and chronically late Medicaid program and the federal government's low-paying Medicare program.

If the trend continues, health experts say, Chicago could be stripped of its network of community hospitals, where emergency rooms provide treatment for victims of accidents and violence as well as routine care for families who often have no private physicians.

"What we are seeing is a gradual erosion of our nation's medical infrastructure," said William Cox, vice president of government services for the St. Louis-based Catholic Health Association.

Cox and other national and state health-care leaders—as well as local and state politicians—came to the lobby of St. Anne's Hospital, 4950 W. Thomas St., on Tuesday to talk about what its closing meant in relationship to health care in Chicago.

St. Anne's will phase out its operations over the next two weeks.

Three major culprits were cited by health officials and politicians in the demise of community hospitals in Chicago:

The state Medicaid system that pays hospitals too little and too late for their care of the poor.

The federal Medicare system that pretends health care for the elderly costs less than it does. The federal programs pay a set rate for treatment across the country, often shortchanging high-cost areas like Chicago.

The Cook County Board, whose members continue to talk about a new $1.2 billion hospital, ignoring the many small, private hospitals that could be included in a comprehensive network of health care to replace the physically decrepit Cook County Hospital.

"How many more hospitals are going to close?" asked State Sen. Miguel del Valle (D., Chicago). "Are we waiting to hit rock bottom? In some of my communities, we've hit it. It is amazing that all of this is going on at a time when we have a County Board that is thinking of building a new hospital."

Kenneth Robbins, president of the Illinois Hospital Association, predicts that at least "a half a dozen" more hospitals in Chicago "are in imminent danger" of closing because of increased financial pressures. He said two or three are likely to close in the next six months.

Robbins declined to name the hospitals, but he said they were among the 23 hospitals in Chicago that have more than 25 percent of their patients dependent on Medicaid and Medicare. That is considered the upper limit for a financially viable hospital, Robbins said.

The closing of St. Anne's and the nine other Chicago hospitals has made the existence of the remaining facilities even more precarious.

"When one hospital closes, others must take their patients in," Robbins said. "When many of those patients are Medicaid patients, and Illinois continues to fail to pay for their care, that exacerbates an already dangerous situation. You have a domino effect."

Nearly 80 percent of poor patients in the Chicago area are treated at private hospitals. The unreimbursed cost to those hospitals of their care is currently $300 million, according to the Metropolitan Chicago Health-care Council.

Many of the hospitals that have closed are in good physical shape. That has prompted several Chicago politicians to call on the Cook County Board to contract with such hospitals for services rather than build a new Cook County Hospital.

HOSPITAL WOES: COOK COUNTY NEEDS A LOT MORE THAN BAND-AIDS FOR THIS

(By Greg Hinz)

About this time last year, the papers were filled with stories about how taxpayers were about to be socked for hundreds of millions of dollars to build a new County Hospital.

Lately, the story has been the closing of one inner-city hospital after another, from Cuneo in Uptown in July to St. Anne's on the West Side two weeks ago.

What happened in between? The apparent answer is, not much, beyond one grand game of political chicken. Much of Chicago appears headed toward Third World standards when it comes to the quality of medical care. And though it's the South and West Side poor who will suffer most as a result, it's us taxpayers up here who eventually will end up with the very weighty bill.

What's to be done? The answer rests with some folks named George Dunne, Richard M. Daly, James Thompson, George Bush and Michael Dukakis.

The story begins with County Hospital, the hulking, aged West Side behemoth that everyone, including thrifty County Board President Dunne, concedes has to be replaced.

Even Dunne seemed jolted when a county consultant a year ago said it might take $500 million to replace "County" with a new facility of up to 900 beds. A lot of folks immediately asked if it wouldn't be cheaper to instead work out something with the financially failing Provident Hospital, and build a much smaller county unit.

Ever since, Dunne's county government has been eyeball-to-eyeball with the Federal unit that owns the now-defunct Provident facility.

"Dunne wants to get it for free, but the feds might sell to anybody who makes an offer," explains Mary McDonald, the Lincolnwood Republican who heads the County Board's hospital subcommittee. "Nothing will happen until that gets cleared up."

When and how that "clear up" will occur might be a good question for Gov. Thompson to put to his good friend Bush, the vice president and GOP presidential nominee. It also might be interesting to hear Dukakis' thoughts on whether the feds can help out strapped county taxpayers.

If no one has blinked at the Provident staredown, nothing at all has happened on an alternate idea, to establish a network of small, dispersed county health clinics rather than building one new white elephant.

That plan comes from Quentin Young, former medical chief at County and not one of Dunne's favorite people.

Young says such a network, particularly, if it includes contracts with other, failing South and West Side hospitals, could save money while providing better care. Dunne, rightfully cautious about the cost, has replied that the county might not have the legal authority to do that, even though it already has three clinics in Englewood and other areas.

Young has won some backing from County Commissioner Chuck Bernardini, the Lincoln Parker who tries to be both fiscally prudent and socially aware. In February, he introduced a resolution to study the idea. But Dunne promptly shunted it to State's Attorney Daley.

It now has been seven months since Daley was asked to give his legal opinion of the idea—and there's no indication when Richie will say anything. "Some legal questions are much more complicated than others," says Daley spokesman Terry Levin.

Indeed.

Meanwhile, the financial pinch is tightening for the declining number of Chicago hospitals that will accept the poor and Medicaid patients.

According to McDonald, County is getting more and more difficult, expensive cases, such as premature infants who need $100,000 or more each in treatment. And the patient load at County's Fantus Clinic is up 13 percent, to about 1,700 people a day, in just the past year, McDonald says.

Ten Chicago hospitals have closed since 1985. The major reason is that the state has been slow and cheap in its Medicaid reimbursements, forcing private hospital after private hospital into bankruptcy.

The only way out is for either the state to pay more to private hospitals, or for County to accept everyone as the hospital of last resort. Or for the poor to go without treatment.

But Dunne political ally Mike Madigan, the speaker of the Illinois House, has fought the state tax hike that might permit the first. The county's ability to pay for the second is restricted by property-tax realities. That leaves the third.

According to Young, it's not uncommon now for people to go to County with a serious but non-emergency condition and be given an appointment nine months in the future. And that doesn't include what McDonald says will be a huge number of new AIDS cases among poor minorities in the next few years.

So County crumbles, private hospitals fail, everybody studies and watches.

With all due respect to the hard-working County staff and to Dunne, who has to hustle to find the money to pay them, here's a little advice: If you're poor, better not get sick.

ST. ANNE'S HOSPITAL CLOSING ITS DOORS

(By Floyd Kalber, Coanchor)

As expected, St. Anne's Hospital on Chicago's West Side announced today that it is closing its doors. The eighty-five-year-old hospital says it simply cannot pay its bills. Well, that's because it's not getting paid for treating Medicare and Medicaid patients from the State of Illinois. The state alone owes St. Anne's over a million dollars.

William Cox (Catholic Hospital Association): We bear witness this morning to the abject failure of public policy leaders in this country, in this state, to adequately grapple with the problem of funding health-care services for the poor and the elderly.

Kalber: Last April, the hospital, St. Anne's, laid off sixty percent of its staff. Since then it has only used a hundred and fifteen of its four hundred beds. The hospital is going to close in two to three weeks, the tenth hospital to close down in Chicago in just the last three years.

LONG CAREER AT WHITE HALL

In 1961, Roberta Blake was a graduate nurse just starting at White Hall Hospital. Little did she know that 27 years later, as director of nursing, she would see the hospital close.

"Sad is the best word to describe how I feel," she said. "It's the passing of an era. The only times I've been off work over those years is when I had my children."

Blake said that years ago, the hospital building was a house.

"The emergency room was upstairs, and there was a large stairway leading to it with a banister. Sometimes when the doctors came in, they'd bring their children, and they would slide down that banister. I can remember delivering babies without the use of fetal monitors and other modern equipment. We did the best we could, and it usually turned out OK."

Blake's association with the hospital began in 1958, when she was a senior at White Hall High School.

"Three boys in our class, Marc Drake, Harry McCracken and Robert Scheir, were killed in a car wreck that year. They were driving to Winchester to get their tuexdos for the prom and were hit by a train.

"They were all brought here to the hospital. Our class had only 52 graduates, but at our 30th reunion this year, 38 showed up. We feel we were close over the years because of the tragedy."

Blake said she will rest for a few months before taking another job.

ST. ANNE'S EXPECTED TO JOIN LIST OF SHUTTERED HOSPITALS

(By Jean Latz Griffin)

St. Anne's Hospital on the West Side is expected to announce on Tuesday that it is closing its doors after 85 years of service, making it the 10th community hospital in Chicago to close within the last three years.

Most of the shuttered hospitals have been in poor, inner-city neighborhoods.

"Yes, it is closing," said Ald. Danny Davis (29th), a member of the hospital's board of directors.

"It is most unfortunate, but sometimes you have no choice; you can't get blood out of a turnip," said Davis, whose ward is adjacent to the hospital and whose constituents rely heavily on it for care. "I was not at the board meeting when the vote was taken, but I would have voted to close it."

St. Anne's 4949 W. Division St., like the nine other Chicago hospitals that have closed since 1985, has suffered financially from late and in adequate federal reimbursement for the services they provided to poor patients.

Hospitals hit the hardest are those that have so few patients with private medical insurance that they cannot ride out the underpayment and slow payment from state and federal Medicaid programs.

The Illinois Medicaid program owes St. Anne's $1.7 million, according to Ancilla Systems Inc., which owns the hospital.

About 40 percent of the hospital's patients rely on Medicaid or Medicare to pay their bills, according to a statement made by hospital president Philip Karst in April, when St. Anne's laid off 60 employees to meet expenses. The hospital has been using only 115 of its 437 beds.

Ancilla spokeswoman Candace Hulsebus-Fong declined to confirm or deny Davis' statement that the hospital would close.

"All the information will come out at our press conference Tuesday morning," she said. "But it's tough to make it on our Medicaid load."

The closing is part of a national trend.

Last year, a record 79 of the nation's 5,800 hospitals closed, and half of those were in inner-city neighborhoods. In Illinois, 80 percent of the state's Medicaid patients seek care in 20 percent of the state's 238 hospitals, nearly all in Chicago and East St. Louis, according to national and state hospital groups.

Davis and State Rep. Robert LeFlore Jr. (D., Chicago) will hold a news conference on Tuesday to talk about the closing.

"It is unjust to the community, especially the indigent," LeFlore said. "I don't think County Hospital will be able to absorb all the poor people. St. Anne's closing will put an extra burden on County."

The 10 hospital closings have not depleted the Chicago metropolitan area of hospital beds. In 1987, the hospital occupancy rate was 62 percent, slightly below the national average of 64 percent.

But the location of the closed hospitals has drained health care and jobs from people who can least afford to lose either: poor black and Hispanic families, often mothers alone with children. Those families often use hospital emergency rooms for routine care because they have no family doctors.

Eight hospital closings through May resulted in the loss of more than 3,000 jobs, according to the Illinois Hospital Association.

Mary Thompson Hospital on the West Side closed in April with a debt of $5 million after 123 years of service to the poor. In the last two years, three hospitals closed within a 2-mile radius in an impoverished area on the South Side. Englewood closed in February, Provident went bankrupt in 1987 and Woodlawn closed in 1986.

On the Near North Side, Henrotin and Chicago Center have closed. Frank Cuneo Memorial Hospital in Uptown closed in July. An outpatient clinic is still there. On the Near Northwest Side, Walther Memorial and Booth Memorial hospitals have closed.

Four rural hospitals have closed in Illinios in the last two years.

"We do not have a comprehensive health plan for the city where resources are strategically placed to meet the needs of our citizens," Davis said. "Without such a plan, institutions just kind of hang out there on their own."

Davis said the county should find a way to get more of the tax money earmarked for the poor into local, community hospitals rather than funneling so much into Cook County Hospital.

"The sisters at St. Anne's have done an outstanding job and have put forth every effort to keep the institution alive and meet the medical needs of the community, especially the poor," Davis said. "Unfortunately the health policies of our state and county mitigate against places like St. Anne's remaining alive and viable."

Davis said that the board of directors has struggled for months to find another solution to the deepening financial crisis of the hospital.

ST. ANNE'S CLOSING HITS LIKE DEATH IN THE FAMILY

(By Tracey Robinson)

The announcement Tuesday of the closing of the 85-year-old St. Anne's Hospital on the West Side spread through the hallways like news of a death in the family.

"This was like a funeral," said Kathy Hayden, a nurse at St. Anne's for 13 years. "So many people are going to lose touch. It was the loyalty of the workers to St. Anne's that kept us together."

Stunned and teary-eyed, some 400 St. Anne's employees exchanged hugs, phone numbers and addresses after learning that the doors will close within weeks because of heavy financial losses.

Many nurses and physicians shared fond memories of the years spent helping patients in the West Side community. Most patients will be transferred to neighboring West Suburban, Loretto or Cook County hospitals, officials said.

"So many people are going to fall between the cracks," said Betty Hall, a nurse at the hospital for almost 40 years. "We tried to stay open as long as we could."

Saving the 437-bed hospital was a lost cause without additional Medicaid funding, officials said Tuesday. The hospital is owed about $1.7 million in Medicaid reimbursements by the state.

Ald. Danny K. Davis (29th) called for a partnership between the Cook County Board and small private hosptials to help struggling facilities keep their doors open.

But the lack of Medicaid funding was not the only source of the hospital's problems, said Edward Duffy, state Public Aid Department director. The hospital, with an average of 97 patients daily, no longer could fill its beds.

"Hospitals like St. Anne's are the steel mills of the hospital industry," Duffy said. "People don't use hospitals like they used to. I could have tripled my rates (reimbursements) but that would not have kept that hospital open."

Death of the financially ailing hospital at 4950 W. Thomas seemed imminent for months. But many employees and residents said they were hurt and angry because they were the last to hear news of the closing, given at a morning press conference.

"Everybody assumed that things were coming downhill fast," said nurse Kathleen Greco, who has worked there 11 years. "But the administration would not confirm anything until the last moment. I thought things could have been handled better. We deserved that much."

For many St. Anne employees, it was the only job they knew. When the hospital hit hard times, the staff took pay cuts, worked double shifts and frequently volunteered its skills to keep the facility afloat.

"We stayed on despite fewer and fewer raises," Greco said. "We were loyal." She recalled the time during the 1970s when all of the hospital beds stayed full. "Doctors and nurses flocked here because it was a good place to work," she said.

Another St. Anne's nurse, Mary Ellen DeJesus, a 13-year veteran of the hospital, said the hospital was the most likely place she would see her relatives. "My entire family worked here," she said. "Most of them were born here."

LATEST HOSPITALS TO CLOSE CONTINUE NATIONAL TREND

A quiet trend made news Tuesday with the twin closings of a large hospital in Chicago and a tiny hospital in White Hall, Ill.

The Chicago hospital, St. Anne's, becomes the largest private facility to close in five years. It was 85 years old and had 437 beds.

In White Hall, a tiny town in the southwestern section of the state, it was the 30-bed acute care center.

Seventy-nine community hospitals closed last year. If federal hospitals and special service clinics are included, the figure jumps to 96.

"There has been a gradual but persistent erosion in our national health care system," said William Cox, vice president of the Catholic Health Association.

The effect has been felt in cities and rural communities across the nation. Community hospital closings have crept up every year since 1983, and in the past three years, 240 hospitals have closed.

ST. ANNE'S HOSPITAL WORKERS THROW A WAKE FOR VANISHING JOBS

(By Constanza Montana)

Nurses, secretaries and a security guard from St. Anne's Hospital on the West Side returned to their old watering hole Sunday to say goodbye to their jobs and to each other.

"This is a rest-in-peace party for St. Anne's," said nurse Mary Ellen Ginie as she and about 40 other employees from the hospital gathered in the back garden of the Still Chicago tavern, 5960 W. Grang Ave., to bury their employment woes and eulogize their friendship.

Ginie has worked as a nurse at St. Anne's, 4950 W. Thomas St., for 18 years and is looking for a new job since the hospital's recent announcement that it will close its doors after 85 years of service. "I'm history now, but I'm still taking it pretty bad," she said. "My son was born there. I was born there. My father died there."

When St. Anne's phases out its service, it will join nine other hospitals in Chicago's low-income neighborhoods that have been forced to shut down since 1986 because of tardy and miserly Medicaid payments and a federal Medicare system that shortchanges high-cost areas like Chicago, according to health officials.

Joyce Webster, 39, a secretary at St. Anne's for 15 years, lost her job last Monday. "When it first happened, I felt real upset," she said, while sipping a beer. "I cried every day. I wasn't angry about the job . . . but about the people that I worked with. Some of them, I'll probably never see again."

Webster said she would prefer to work at a hospital again, but will look for employment at a fast-food restaurant if it becomes necessary. "I'll work two jobs to make ends meet before I go on public aid," she said.

Last Wednesday was Terri Yak's last day at St. Anne's. But the eight-year veteran nurse said she is getting accustomed to layoffs. Yak wears a charm around her gold necklace that says "#1 nurse." Her colleagues gave it to her about three years ago, the second time she was laid off from St. Anne's, she said.

"I've been laid off twice and I've come back each time," Yak said "Strike three and you're out. But there's no coming back this time."

Although Yak has worked at other hospitals and now works in the emergency room at Loretto Hospital, 645 S. Central Ave., St. Anne's will always hold a special place in her heart. Not only were her two children born there, but she will miss her colleagues as well as the patients.

At St. Anne's "you have a good time working," Yak said. "You work your rear-end off, but you just don't care because you're with your friends and you're always learning something new," she said.

Yak and other nurses reminisced about their former patients while eating pretzels and peanuts at the picnic tables. "Sheila, the asthmatic, she's been coming in for years," Yak said. "She came back the other day and she was just sobbing my shoulders off" when she heard about the closing, Yak said.

Faye Harvell, 56, has worked as a surgical nurse for 28 years at St. Anne's. She thought she would retire from there, she said. Sept. 2 was her last day there. "I'm in shock and I don't know why I'm not kicking and screaming," she said.

Now Harvell must find work elsewhere because "my husband is retired and he's on a fixed income," she said.

Ron Richardson, 35, is still working as a security guard at St. Anne's while it phases out its psychiatric and emergency units. At the gathering Sunday, he wore a gray tombstone T-shirt that said "I survivied St. Anne's Hospital, R.I.P. 1903-1988."

ST. ANNE'S CLOSING TO IMPACT HOSPITALS

(By Dan Obermaier)

Oak Park Hospital will get more obstetrics patients and West Suburban Medical Center will see a slight increase in emergency room patients following closure of St. Anne's Hospital on the West Side, officials predict.

But the feared "domino effect"—in which poor patients and the medical funding crisis ripple out to strain and fold other community hospitals—probably won't have a severe impact here, say executives at the local medical institutions.

Citing financial pressures due in part to lacking Medicaid and Medicare funds, St. Anne's announced last week it will phase out operations this month after serving the area for 85 years. Most doctors on the closing hospital's staff are expected to join St. Elizabeth's Hospital, to the east of St. Anne's on the west side and bring their patients with them.

But in addition to patients admitted by staff physicians, St. Anne's also served large numbers of poor who sought emergency room care in lieu of costly doctor's office visits. These patient's are expected to scatter to Loretto Hospital, Cook County Hospital and Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago and in lesser numbers to suburban hospitals.

"I suppose suburban hospitals will get a portion of them," said Candy Fong, vice-president of St. Anne's parent company.

West Suburban will probably receive one or two additional emergency-room patients a day as a result of St. Anne's demise, estimated Kim Matson-O'Malley, planning and marketing vice-president.

"There isn't too much service area overlap between us and them," she said. "We aren't expecting that much of an impact."

Matson-O'Malley acknowledged fears among Chicago hospitals that closings could snowball, with poor patients radiating out to other hospitals and draining their financial resources. But she does not expect the additional patients at West Suburban to create a financial drain.

In poorer areas, when one of these hospitals closes, it passes on the problem to other nearby community hospitals," she said. "When we first heard about (St. Anne's), we reacted. But when we looked at the actual information as to where the patients come from, we were relieved to see there's not much overlap.

Among factors that lessen the impact of St. Anne's closing, she said, is the relatively small number of patients the hospital has served recently as it has geared down. The hospital reported that of its 437 beds, only 114 were operational, and when the closing announcement came Aug. 30, only 79 patients were there.

At Oak Park Hospital, the obstetrics unit will feel the most impact of St. Anne's closing, said President Willis Fry. Six former St. Anne's staff members—three obstetricians and three family practitioners who perform deliveries—have been granted emergency admitting privileges at Oak Park and are seeking permanent privileges, he said.

St. Elizabeth's Hospital is supposed to pick up St. Anne's staff but doesn't have an obstetrics unit, Fry notes. Physicians at St. Anne;'s have to find another place for deliveries, he said, and some are choosing Oak Park Hospital because it belongs to some of the same HMOs as St. Anne's.

The shift could prove a boon for the obstetrics unit, which the hospital plans to downscale because it lacks patients. "Right now, it's way too big," Fry said. "We have 30 beds and 15 would probably serve us adequately."

Fry said he has "no idea" how many new patients the unit—or the hospital as a whole—will admit because of St. Anne's closing. But he notes that St. Anne's delivered more than 700 babies a year. "That's a lot of babies."

But "as far as I'm concerned, 15 beds will still be adequate, even with this influx," he said.

Fry said he could not predict the financial implications, if any, of St. Anne's demise. "It depends on how many (additional Medicaid) patients we get," he said.

That is a very definite concern be it obstetrics or anything. If you suddenly get a large influx of Medicaid patients, that could be a real concern," he said.

CHICAGO HOSPITAL CLOSES; CITY'S 10TH IN THREE YEARS

Chicago's St. Anne's Hospital last week closed its acute-care services as a first step toward full closure, making it the 10th hospital to be shuttered in the city since 1985.

The hospital, which is owned by Ancilla Systems Inc., Elk Grove Village, IL., Sept. 1 also downgraded its emergency services to standby.

Ancilla officials are seeking state approval to transfer St. Anne's psychiatric services to another of its Chicago hospitals.

The date of complete closure of the 437-bed hospital will depend on the state's decision concerning the psychiatric-services transfer and how quickly St. Annes 96 current patients can be transferred to other facilities, an Ancilla official said.

Alethea Caldwell, Ancilla's president and CEO, said the major factors that forced the facility's closure were competition, the hospital's high overhead costs, and underpayment and delayed payments from Medicaid.

Medicaid patients accounted for more than 50 percent of the average census of St. Anne's, which had previously closed all but 115 of its beds, according to Caldwell.

"The system could afford to pick up some of the [hospital's financial losses] as a part of our mission, but we couldn't absorb all of it," Caldwell said, although she declined to reveal St. Anne's or Ancilla's latest financial results.

Caldwell said Ancilla plans to maintain an outpatient facility to continue to serve St. Anne's patients.

CHICAGO'S 10 METRO CLOSURES HIGHLIGHT URBAN-HOSPITAL FRAGILITY

Chicago's St. Anne's Hospital soon will boast a new addition to its facade—a sign that reads "Closed."

Such sobering signs have become an all-too-familiar sight in the Windy City. When the 85-year-old Roman Catholic institution closes this month, St. Anne's will become the fourth Chicago hospital to close this year and the 10th since 1985.

"It is unjust to the community, especially the indigent," said one state lawmaker.

There's a common denominator in the closures: inadequate payments for care provided for a high number of Medicaid and Medicare patients, according to hospital officials.

And heatlh care experts say the denominator is so common that Chicago—and the rest of the country—will see an increasing number of hospitals fold, with no type or size of hospital being immune.

"The system is going to somehow 'skinny down,'" said Raymond J. Cisneros, national director of health care services in the Boston office of Touche Ross & Co.

"The big problem is we don't have a national plan, so the hospitals that do close may not be the ones that should close," he said, noting that the nation's struggling urban hospitals provide the greatest amount of care to the medically indigent.

St. Anne's, for example, received payment for more than 50 percent of its patients through the state's underfunded Medicaid program; Medicare patients comprised an addititional 25 percent.

In Illinois, that means St. Anne's received only 72 cents on the dollar for services provided to Medicaid patients and only 89 cents on the dollar for Medicare patients, according to figures provided by the Naperville, IL-based Illinois Hospital Association (IHA).

"We not only have a low-pay problem in Illinois, we have a slow-pay problem and a no-pay problem," said Roger A. Quick, the IHA's executive vice president and chief operating officer.

"Hospitals here, at one point, waited up to 100 days to receive payment for care they had provided," he added. "And between April 26 and the new fiscal year July 1, the state completely exhausted its Medicaid appropriation and stopped paying."

That was enough to drive a number of troubled hospitals, including St. Anne's, over the edge. Medicaid alone owed St. Anne's more than $1.7 million.

Underpayment by the federal Mediccare also exacerbates problems for struggling urban hospitals such as St. Anne's, experts say.

Between 40 percent and 50 percent of all U.S. hospitals currently lose money treating Medicare patients, according to AHA President Carol M. McCarthy.

The high number of hospital closures "is clearly a sign of today's economic instability," she said.

A study to be released this month by the St. Louis, MO-based Catholic Health Association (CHA), for example, found that about 70 percent of the nation's Roman Catholic hospitals will post negative Medicare operating margins in fiscal 1989.

Such margins will average −6.8 percent, and more than one-fifth of those hospitals will post Medicare operating margins of −20 percent, according to William J. Cox, the CHA's vice president of government services.

Because of reimbursement problems Cox and the IHA's Quick predict that the closure of a hospital—such as St. Anne's—that serves a high number of Medicaid and Medicare patients could create a "dominio effect" on neighboring facilities.

"Those patients have to go somewhere," Quick said. "The next hospital suddenly may find itself with a higher percentage of public-pay patients, and then it will be under the same conditions that forced the first hospital to close."

Whether the domino theory holds true, the number of hospital closures in both inner-city and rural areas will continue to climb for at least several more years, according to Ross Mullner, director of the Center for Health Services Research at the University of Illinois' School of Public Health, Chicago.

That's saying a lot; 79 hospitals closed in 1987, bringing the total of closed U.S. hospitals since 1980 to 363.

Besides increased closure, Mullner also expects the average bed size of shuttered hospitals to grow.

In 1987, for example, the average size of an urban hospital that closed was 86 beds, and closed rural facilities averaged 61 beds. In contrast, St. Anne's had 437 licensed beds.

"We're eating away at larger hospitals," Mullner said.

Hospitals with more than 150 beds that close have several common features, according to Steven C. Renn, vice president of Health Care Investment Analysts, Baltimore.

These larger hospitals generally show steady declines in occupancy, often in excess of 10 percent a year; tally more than 20 percent—and often 40 percent—of total admissions as Medicaid patients; and collect less than 70 cents on each dollar they charge for care.

"Unlike what you see in other industries, these hospitals don't suddenly tank it; they crumble and deteriorate for a number of years," Renn said.

However, Jefferey C. Goldsmith, president of Health Futures Inc., Bannockburn, IL, still sees a lot of excess capacity in the U.S. hospital system.

"I think we're still in the early stages of consolidation," he said. "And Chicago is just an example of what we'll see all over the country."

POLITICAL HYPOCRISY IN AID

The Washington Letter on page 11 of this issue highlights a problem that's serious in more ways than one. As the column points out, hospitals, caught in the trap of cuts in Medicare and Medicaid reimbursement, are closing all over the country.

In Chicago alone, 10 community hospitals, all in low income neighborhoods, have closed since 1986. And across the country 240 have closed since 1985 and another 680 are expected to close in the next five years.

But not mentioned in the column is the hypocrisy involving the nation and especially our own State of Illinois.

Just this year our state suddenly told Illinois hospitals, pharmacies and others involved in the Medicaid program of state payment for the qualifying poor that they would have to wait some extra months for payment of their bills.

For some smaller hospitals and certain pharmacies this was an impossible burden. Some of the druggists simply had to refuse to accept the Medicaid patients' prescriptions.

But an even bigger problem, it seems to me, was the fiction obvious in the reason the state gave for the move.

The state did not say it had no money. It said it must preserve its reputation for credit by not draining more cash from its bank accounts.

But who's kidding whom? While the excuse sounds good, it is hypocrisy to suggest that cash on hand has any meaning when it is achieved by not paying one's bills. And that hypocrisy is doubled when not paying the state's own bills means that another innocent party, the hospital or the pharmacy, falls heir to the state's bad credit record.

Adding insult to the injury is the fact that the state already has been paying the hospitals only half of what it costs for the Medicaid patient, if the hospital can hang on long enough to wait for the check.

The spokesperson for the most recently closed Chicago hospital said Medicaid had been accounting for 40 percent of the hospital's revenues—and Medicare for another 20 percent.

William Cox, a vice president of the American Hospital Association points out that cuts in medical reimbursement have been for Congress a "politically painless" way to balance a budget. To stop the camouflage, he says, hospitals must speak up as did the elderly to stop the same kind of game with Social Security.

Society, through its government, has an obligation to make health care available to the poor. But it should shoulder that obligation honestly and not only pretend to do so.

End of an Era—White Hall Fearful Over Loss of Hospital

(By Ralph Helenthal)

White Hall Hospital officially closes today, but the effects of the closing are already starting to ripple through the community.

Wednesday the hospital closed the emergency room at 1 p.m. An hour later, Kristy Caskey, 10, was hit by a car while riding her bicycle.

"I wanted to send her to our hospital," said mother Judy Caskey, who worked in the Hospital pharmacy until it closed this week, "but I was told the emergency room was already closed. It really upset me.".

Kristy was taken to Boyd Memorial Hospital in Carrollton, 10 miles away. The girl's injuries were not severe, and she was not admitted to the hospital.

"What will we do when an accident is serious?" Caskey asked. "Kristy's was fairly minor. We need something here where injuries can be treated."

According to Administrator Glenn Klein, the emergency room was closed "because we ran out of supplies. We had thought the room might be open through Thursday, but that became impossible. Additionally, some equipment went back, so we had to shut down the laboratory, X-ray and pharmacy areas."

Last week, the hospital's board of directors announced the hospital's closing because of mounting debts of almost $1 million. A planning committee is deliberating the future of health care in the area.

"I've been getting a lot of phone calls asking me why I didn't save the hospital," Klein said. "I don't know what else we could have done under the circumstances. We cut costs to the bone and still lost it. This community had only one fundraiser in the last 10 years, and that won't keep a hospital open very long."

According to Roberta Blake, director of nursing, the closing could not have come at a worse time.

"Friday, Dr. Ludwig Dech will be marking 30 years in the community. I hate to see the hospital close on that anniversary. If we had known earlier, maybe we could have set the date at another time."

According to Caskey, old myths in the community are beginning to die.

"Folks used to say that our hospital was just a band-aid station. They're finding out now how much we'll miss it."

Clinic Urged by Neighbors of St. Anne's

(By Lillian Williams)

Neighbors of the shuttered St. Anne's Hospital Thursday called for the establishment of a medical clinic at the site to restore both health services and jobs.

The 437-bed hospital closed last Thursday due to financial woes, caused particularly by slow Medicaid reimbursements from the state.

"Our community didn't know about the closing until we saw it on the news," said Jacqueline Reed, coordinator of a committee to save the hospital.

"We at least need a medical clinic at the hospital and an emergency room," Reed said Thursday after a rally in front of the hospital, 4949 W. Division.

Reed and other residents have formed a committee to seek financial backing to restore some services at St. Anne's. They met with Cook County Board President George W. Dunne earlier this week, but came away with little hope that county government would assist them, Reed said.

"Dunne said he didn't want to give false hopes, and he didn't foresee an affiliation between our group and the County Board," Reed said. "But we'll . . . pursue our goals."

Ald. Danny K. Davis (29th) said the hospital closing further erodes the economic base of the Austin community. "We need jobs," Davis said at the rally.

The closing also means residents are left without an emergency room facility, no cancer-testing clinics and 600 fewer jobs, Reed said.

"Our community feels stepped on," Reed said.

Hospital Industry Ill

(By Jeff Paine)

The role of hospitals in providing health care is changing, and the driving force behind the change is increasing cost.

For years, the cost of health care has increased faster than the general rate of inflation: more than 10 percent, compared to about 4 percent. In 1986, Americans spent about $458 billion on health care. While final figures for 1987 are not yet in, the amount is projected at more than $500 billion. This year the amount is expected to increase to about $550 billion. Roughly a third of that is for hospital care and hospital-related expenses.

Health care now constitutes 10.8 percent of the gross national product, the amount the consuming public spends for goods and services each year.

"Five years ago you could pretty much describe the hospital industry as healthy. Maybe with a head cold, but pretty healthy," said Chuck Von Vorst, president of the Carle Foundation Hospital in Urbana.

"Today, there are definite signs of disease in the industry," he added. "There is no question that there are hospitals closing that shouldn't be closing. If we keep losing needed hospitals, we are going to find that access health care is being denied to a great many people."

Local health care will be denied to the poor, the elderly and the rural because while Illinois has an excess of about 15,000 hospital beds, the places that are losing their hospitals are places that generally do not have extra beds: specifically, rural communities and inner cities.

Of the 14 Illinois hospitals that have closed their doors since the beginning of 1986, five have been located in rural areas and nine have been located in urban areas.

The Illinois Hospital Association recently estimated that another 25 hospitals in the state are in immediate danger of financial collapse. The Illinois Health Care Cost Containment Council, a government agency created two years ago to monitor health care costs, plans to release a similar study later this year.

All hospitals have been suffering from the same problems: low occupancy, a shortage of physicians, trained nursing and support staff, rising malpractice insurance rates, high costs for new diagnostic and treatment equipment, a shift to outpatient services and delays and reductions in Medicare and Medicaid payments.

"It's not just one or two things that determine the financial viability of a hospital," said IHCCCC spokesman Penny Kendall. "There are a lot of factors, from indebtedness to payroll to reimbursement to utilization. Hospitals are in business to generate money to keep their doors open. The problem is how to make enough money to keep the doors open."

One way is to cut costs. Another is to raise rates, and in the past that is how hospitals kept up with increases in their own expenses. When Medicare, the government's health insurance system, was founded in 1966, it paid on a "cost-plus" formula, allowing each hospital to be reimbursed for its own expenses, plus a slim profit margin.

But in 1983, that formula was abandoned in favor or a "flat fee" formula based on Diagnostic Related Groups, "DRGs" group similar illnesses together. For a given DRG illness, a hospital or physician would receive a set amount from Medicare, regardless of what it cost to treat the illness.

In theory, the limit would force hospitals and physicians to control costs and reduce unnecessary care in order to make a profit.

"The problem is that health costs continue to rise," said Jeanne Corrigan, spokesman for the Illinois Hospital Association. "The problem has been growing and getting worse. The government policy, or rather the lack of policy, has been determined for the last five years by budget constraints. If the government has the money, it will pay. If it doesn't, it will pay less.

"That really hurts those health care programs and those hospitals that depend heavily on Medicare and Medicaid payments," she said.

While Medicare and Medicaid patients nationally make up about 40 percent of hospital caseload. Medicare and the state's Medicaid patients may make up 75 percent of the patient of hospital caseload, Medicare and the state's Medicaid patient may make up 75 percent of the patient mix at some Illinois hospitals.

The elderly and the poor make up the majority of Medicare and Medicaid patients, and are often concentrated in rural areas and inner cities. For example, roughly 70 percent of the patient mix at Paris Community Hospital is Medicare or Medicaid, while less than 50 percent fit that description at Sarah Bush Lincoln Health Center in Mattoon.

"While Medicare is supposed to pay 100 percent of the DRG, because of budget limits it's been about 85 to 89 percent," Corrigan said. "With the state's Medicaid payments, it's even worse; about 72 percent. Hospitals that treat large numbers of elderly or poor people can't help but have money problems."

This year, the state's Medicaid program ran out of funds in late April. Next spring, the system is expected to run out of funds again. Losing those funds would be enough to push several more hospitals and nursing homes "over the edge," Corrigan said.

Because hospitals depend so heavily on Medicare and Medicaid, they cannot pass along all of the loss to other health care consumers and purchasers.

AUDITORS: MERCER HOSPITAL IN SERIOUS FINANCIAL TROUBLE

(By Mirl Ascarell)

ALEDO.—The Mercer County Hospital is in serious financial trouble, and there is "substantial doubt about the hospital's ability to continue in existence," according to an audit report.

"I would like to emphasize that the hospital is in serious financial trouble," James Tillotson, a partner in the Davenport auditing firm of McGladrey and Pullen, told the board, on Tuesday. "Drastic action needs to be taken to begin to turn things around."

OPERATING DEFICIT

According to the audit report, the hospital incurred an operating loss of $884,232 in fiscal 1988, up $213,826 from the previous year.

Even after the non-operating revenue was factored in, the red ink stayed on the books with a net loss, for 1988, of $581,882, up $159,329 from the previous year, according to the report.

The loss came despite an increased subsidy of $114,538 from the Mercer County Board, which agreed to pay the hospital's share of its employee retirement benefits and to increase the hospital's tax levy from $10,000 to $50,000.

Total assets for 1988 equaled $1,163,763, the report said.

Noting the last two years "have been very hard on the hospital," Mr. Tillotson said the first thing hospital officials must do "is to hire a very good and competent administrator."

On this suggestion, the facility already has taken action, by hiring Bruce Peterson, currently assistant administrator at Jane Lamb Health Center, Clinton, Iowa. Since Phillip Forslund left the post, in September, to take another job, the Aledo facility has been without a permanent administrator. Personnel Director Nancy Brown has been serving as acting administrator.

Mr. Peterson is scheduled to begin working at the Mercer hospital on Jan. 3.

AFFILIATE

Addressing the staffing problems the hospital has been experiencing, the audit report noted the facility "has experienced turnover in key administrative and financial positions and seems to be having some difficulties in recruiting qualified personnel to fill the vacated positions."

The auditing firm recommended the hospital's "management should consider the benefits of an affiliation with a major Quad-City hospital." Mr. Tillotson explained this does not mean the Mercer facility should merge with another hospital. The suggestion only refers to a sharing of staff recruiting information and personnel.

"Such an affiliation could help to improve the recruiting efforts as well as take some of the operational pressure off the current employees," the report said.

The audit report also noted six other areas needing attention:

"As of June 30, 1988, the hospital had approximately $900,000 invested in certificates of deposit issued by financial institutions in the state of Texas. In addition, approximately $800,000 of these investments have original maturities in excess of five years."

Given the financial instability of some financial institutions and their susceptibility to failure caused by interest rate fluctuations or downturns in local economies, the auditors recommend Mercer hospital management evaluate the institutions it invests with closely before renewing existing certificates or purchasing new ones.

"Higher interest rates tend to correspond to higher risk associations," the report said.

It also questioned the advisability of having such a large portion of invested funds tied up in long-term certificates. Should the hospital need to use the money, it would be forced to pay a substantial early withdrawal penalty.

The report also noted "Even though the principal is insured, if a financial institution fails, the lost interest will make a substantial difference in the ultimate yield of the investment."

"The aging of the hospital's accounts receivable has continued to deteriorate in the last year."

Between June 30, 1986, and June 30, 1988, the number of days revenue is tied up in patient receivables has increased from 38 to 54, meaning the hospital loses the interest it could have earned if it had invested the money.

The report also noted bad debt expense increases as older accounts become increasingly difficult to collect.

The auditors recommend hospital management review the billing system, collection policies and write-off procedures in use in the business office as well as the hospital's entire cash management policies and systems. An eye should be given to accelerating billing and collection procedures, improving deposit procedures, monitoring accounts receivable and cash balances, planning cash flow, tracking disbursements and reviewing check-clearing procedures utilized by banks.

"The development of formal cash management policies and systems could help to generate additional funds for the hospital," the report said.

Increasing competition between hospitals, declining occupancy rates and pressures from third-party payors make it imperative the hospital continue to review and update its present strategic plan and goal, which were established last year.

Doing so will "position the hospital in a manner which will allow it to react quickly to its continuously changing environment," the report said.

"Currently, the hospital is not maintaining adequate documentation of the Medicare bad debts for deductibles and coinsurance, in order for them to qualify for Medicare reimbursement."

The auditors recommend such recordkeeping begin.

In light of the operating deficit the auditors recommend the hospital conduct an operations diagnosis of the facility's major departments, evaluating the performance of each on employee productivity, financial management, quality control, materials management, organization and supervision, human resource management, management of information and communication, and workplace and physical layout.

"The results of such a study should help to improve the operational and financial performance of the hospital," the report said.

Between June 30, 1987, and June 30, 1988, "there was a significant increase in third-party contractual adjustment expense." Third party contracts include Medicare, Medicaid and HMO/PPO.

The report said approximately 34 percent of the facility's patient revenue comes from Medicare. This means, if the hospital is to increase revenue by raising rates, it must do so in areas which are not heavily affected by third-party contracts.

"Rate increases are very sophisticated management decisions that should consider reimbursement systems, cost of providing the service and local competitive prices," the report said.

The hospital's ability to continue in existence is dependent upon its ability to achieve profitable operations and to restructure its existing debt agreements," the auditors concluded.

DISCLOSE SITUATION

Mr. Tilotson advised the board, "It is in your best interest to disclose the situation that the hospital is in, so you still have time to turn this situation around."

Among those who need to be informed of the hospital's financial problems are the lending institutions that have loaned money to the hospital, he said.

Mercer County Hospital's financial problems are not unique. More than a fifth of the nation's 2,700 rural hospitals are projected to close by 1990, according to a recent study headed by Roth Muttner of the University of Illinois at Chicago.

In general, administrators at rural hospitals cite declining rural populations and the federal government's Medicare reimbursement program. Under the terms of the program, rural hospitals receive a smaller reimbursement from the federal government for the services they perform for Medicare patients than do their urban counterparts.

U.S. ASKS APPROVAL TO AUCTION OFF BANKRUPT PROVIDENT HOSPITAL

(By William Recktenwald)

The U.S. attorney's office has asked a federal judge to allow the government to auction off the now-closed Provident Hospital.

In a foreclosure motion filed Wednesday before U.S. District Judge Marvin Aspen, the government, on behalf of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, asked that the South Side hospital building and its equipment be sold, said Assistant U.S. Atty. John Brennan.

A. U.S. bankruptcy judge rejected efforts by the New Provident Community Hospital Association on Aug. 8 to take control of and reopen the hospital at 500 E. 51st St., Brennan said.

HUD is owed about $12 million by the hospital and has the first lien on the property in the bankruptcy, Brennan said. That debt grew out of a HUD guarantee of the mortgage when the 98-year-old Provident group constructed its new hospital in the early 1980s, Brennan said.

A sale, if approved by Aspen, could occur within three or four months, Brennan said.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services also is owed about $13 million by the hospital but is not a party to the foreclosure motion, Brennan said.

Provident's total debts are about $42 million, Brennan said.

If the property is auctioned, Brennan said that HUD could start the bidding process for as much as $12 million by using its debt rather than coming up with cash.

"The whole point of going to foreclosure is to cut your losses," Brennan said.

The facility and equipment probably will be sold as one package by the U.S. marshal's service in an open auction, Brennan said.

The hospital closed last year after a yearlong effort by its board to raise enough funds to stave off creditors.

The New Provident group's proposal for reopening the facility had relied on $6 million in city funds that fell through because the group had no assets to use as collateral.

Federal Bankruptcy Judge Robert Ginsberg had characterized their plan as "little more than a dream."

It is possible that Cook County could bid for the hospital to help augment its aging and out-of-date County Hospital structure on the West Side.

Some members of the Cook County Board have discussed opening a Cook County Hospital branch there so that South Side residents would not have to travel as far and wait as long at County Hospital, where patients are accepted regardless of their ability to pay.

If Aspen approves the auction of the facility and its equipment, the U.S. marshal's service, which will handle the actual sale, must give 30 days' notice, Brennan said.

RESEARCHERS REPORT 600 RURAL HOSPITALS MAY BE FORCED TO CLOSE

URBANA, IL.—As many as 600 of the nation's 2,700 rural hospitals may soon be forced to close because they cannot adapt economic fluctuations or keep pace with technological advances, a researcher said Wednesday.

Ross Mullner, director of the University of Illinois Center for Health Services Research, said failure of rural hospitals will send ripple effects through their communities in both health and economic terms.

"In many rural areas already hard-hit by economic fluctuations, the loss of jobs and out-migration, the closing of a hospital represents the loss of a vital component of the local economy," Mullner said. "That loss can be devastating."

The study showed rural hospitals are more likely to close if they cannot adapt to changes in the local economy caused by increased farm debt, declining land values and lack of outside employment opportunities; variations in the health care marketplace; and the advancement of health care technologies.

"A hospital must have the necessary personnel, resources, access to capital markets, and overall competitiveness to invest in new professionals and provide services demanded by an increasingly knowledgeable and cost-conscious population."

Aggravating the problem, he added, has been a Medicare pricing system that pays a lower fixed amount for certain diagnoses and procedures to rural hospitals than to their urban counterparts.

"This lower payment is due to the incorrect perception that rural hospitals have lower labor costs and less expensive case mixes," he said. "In truth, labor costs and patient mixes in rural hospitals in many cases are very similar to those in urban hospitals."

Mullner said a rural hospital that must be closed will have a far greater effect on its community than a closure in a city.

"'Without hospital facilities, health care professionals have less incentive to remain in a (rural) area, thereby reducing the availability of health care even further. In addition, many rural hospitals are major sources of employment and income, often second only to the educational system," he said.

Some relief may be possible for rural hospitals through their own action. Mullner said many rural hospitals could be designated as Sole Community Hospitals, a federal classification based on isolation from other hospitals that allows for economic adjustments.

"Studies have found that many hospitals who deserve this designation do not apply," he said, "possibly because their administrators are reluctant to deal with federal bureaucracy or because they don't know about the designation and what it entails.

WHITE HALL HOSPITAL CORP. PLANNING TO FILE FOR BANKRUPTCY

(By Ralph Helenthal)

The White Hall Hospital corporation will file for Chapter 7 bankruptcy in federal court.

Board Chairman Robert Moulton said Thursday that assets—including the building—will be sold. Moulton said he does know the method of sale that will be used.

The hospital recently closed laying off 52 employees. Reasons given for the closing included a debt of almost $1 million and a declining patient population. Administrator Glenn Klein said the hospital was losing almost $3,000 a day.

"One of our board members said at the meeting, 'For something new to begin, something old must go,' " Moulton said.

About 80 area residents attended a meeting of the health-care planning committee Thursday night. The committee was created in the wake of the hospital's closing to determine health care options in the county.

Chairman Jim Ballard said a fund-raiser or other moneymaking activities would be necessary if the group decides to purchase the hospital building.

The committee has been considering the rural health care system, Ballard said. Under the system, the town would have emergency services and X-ray facilities. It is funded almost fully by both Medicare and Medicaid.

Ballard said other options also are being studied.

"We will need to raise money," Ballard said. "If we cannot come up with a solution to the health care problem, the money will be refunded."

The planning committee has been petitioning the Greene County Board to join the Passavant Area Hospital Emergency Medical Services System. Emergency medical technician and paramedic training would be included in the program.

Greene County Board member James "Deak" Guis told the crowd the board was "very concerned about the emergency medical services program at Passavant. We are studying the program and asking questions. I expect the board to make a commitment soon."

CLOSING OF ST. ANNES'S HOSPITAL

RON MAGERS, coanchor: It is now official: After eighty-five years of service on the west side of Chicago, St. Anne's Hospital is shutting its doors. Channel Five's Phil Walters has more on why this latest surrender signals an inner city health care crisis.

PHIL WALTERS reporting: Ron, there were thirty-eight thousand patients a year being treated at St. Anne's. And now they have to go somewhere else. The doors are closing.

Sister KATHLEEN QUINN (Poor Hand Maids of Christ): After much prayer and thought and concern, approval has been given to close the acute care operations of St. Anne's Hospital.

WALTERS: Today it is St. Anne's. What hospital tomorrow?

KEN ROBBINS: (Illinois Hospital Association): I think you have at least another two or three that could go with . . .

WALTERS: St. Anne's joins nine other inner city Chicago hospitals closed in just three years—six thousand five hundred jobs gone in all, two hundred million dollars in lost wages.

EARL BIRD (Health Care Council): These hospitals all had one thing in common: They treated large numbers of the poor and the elderly.

WALTERS: And when these hospitals fold, the patients take the problems of inadequate Medicaid payments to new hospitals.

ROBBINS: You have now exasperated an already dangerous problem in the hospital that is receiving these new patients.

UNIDENTIFIED REPORTER'S VOICE: A domino effect?

ROBBINS: Yes, absolutely.

WILLIAM COX (Catholic Health Association): The long and short of it is that the demand for health care services is up. The government is willing to pay less for those services, and that's a formula for disaster, as we've seen today.

WHAT OTHERS SAY—RURAL HOSPITALS ARE THREATENED

URBANA.—As many as 600 of this nation's 2,700 rural hospitals may be forced to close in the near future, creating widespread impacts on their communities in both health and economic terms.

"A hospital is not an isolated institution," noted Ross Mullner, associate professor and director of the Center for Health Services Research, School of Public Health Services Research, School of Public Health, University of Illinois at Chicago.

Along with David G. Whiteis, a research associate at the school, Mullner recently completed a study in closing rural hospitals.

The research was supported by the University of Illinois Institute of Government and Public Affairs and published in the Policy Forum, a publication partially supported by the University of Illinois Cooperative Extension Service.

"If rural hospitals are to survive, private initiatives must be supported by a public policy that enables hospitals to adapt to a changing and increasingly competitive marketplace;" Mullner.

"Initiatives must buttress the competitive strength of the rural, hospital system and maintain needed health care in rural communities. Only through public-private partnerships can the goals of hospital vitality and excellent community health in rural areas are realized."

The challenges now posed to the survival of rural community hospitals are a "matter of grave concern," he added.

"Without hospital facilities, health care professionals have less incentive to remain in an area, thereby reducing the availability of health care even further," he noted.

"In addition, many rural hospitals are major sources of employment and income, often second only to the educational system."

The study defines rural community hospitals as all community hospitals outside metropolitan areas. Community hospitals are those which are not federally-owned, in which the average patient stay is 30 or fewer days, and whose facilities and services are open to the public. They may be privately-owned, for-profit institutions; privately-owned, not-for-profit institutions; or owned and managed by a state or local government.

"For both urban and rural community hospitals, the rate of closure has risen steadily throughout the 1980s," Mullner said. "During the first half of the decade, urban closures exceeded rural ones but in 1986, rural closures outpaced urban ones for the first time. The next year, the closures were evenly divided between the two but the overall number was 30 percent greater than the average number earlier in the decade."

The study determined that rural hospitals are more likely to close if they are less able to adapt to fluctuations in the economy, to keep us with the health care technology and trends in the healthcare marketplace, and to meet the changing needs and demands of patients.

"A hospital must have the necessary personnel, resources, access to capital markets, and overall competitiveness to invest in new technology," he said. "It also must be able to attract skilled professionals and provide services demanded by an increasingly knowledgeable and cost-conscious population."

"To attract sufficient patients, a hospital must offer a service mix appropriate to community needs and reasonably priced. To remain competitive, the service mix must also be profitable."

Aggravating the condition of rural hospitals, he believes, has been a Medicare pricing system that pays a lower fixed amount for certain diagnoses and procedures than for the same ones in urban hospitals.

Without some type of action, the trend seems clearly set. More rural hospitals are destined to close.

"In many rural areas already hard-hit by economic fluctuations, the loss of jobs, and out-migration, the closing of a hospital represents the loss of a vital component of the local economy," Mullner said.

"That loss can be devastating."

UI-C Study Suggests Solutions to Rural Health Care Crisis

(By Ed Bannon)

Unless policies are adopted that contribute to the survival of hospitals in rural areas, these communities could suffer snowballing effects, according to a study by an administrator at the University's Chicago campus.

Often economies in rural areas are hit twice. A hospital closes and then industry and health care organizations are less attracted to build in those areas, according to the study done by Ross Mullner, director of the Chicago campus' Center for Health Services Research and School of Public Health, with David Whiteis, a research associate at the school.

The great distance to a hospital also makes preventive health care less convenient, the study said.

But preventive health care is now more important to farmers because farming has become the occupation with the highest fatality rate, said Lee Wagner, student net coordinator for Prairie Fire, a public-interest group located in Des Moines, Iowa.

Central Illinois rural communities are feeling the effects of the poor rural health industry.

"The economy (in Paxton) is not nearly as good as when the community had the hospital," said Lou Petterchak, organizer for the Champaign County Health Care Consumers. Economic troubles forced the Paxton Community Hospital to close in September of 1987.

Nationwide, 164 rural hosptials have been forced to shut down since 1980, and as many as 600 more closings are projected by 1990, according to the study.

The study analyzes the causes of the rise in rural hospital closures and suggests possible solutions.

The Federal Prospective Pricing System—the office that determines the amount of money the government will reimburse a hospital for different diagnoses of Medicare patients—allocates less money to rural hospitals than to urban hospitals, the study said.

In fact, in some cases the level of reimbursement is only 40 percent that of urban hospitals, Mullner said.

False perceptions that rural hospitals have lower labor costs and less expensive case mixes are some reason for the lower reimbursement rates, the study said.

"The amount should be the same if nothing else," Wagner said.

Some rural hospitals could obtain Sole Community Hospital designations because of their isolation from other medical facilities, which would make them eligible for higher Medicare reimbursements, Mullner said.

But the study also found that many hospitals do not seek out the designation, possibly because they are not fully aware of the program or because they are unwilling to deal with federal red tape.

Self help, though, is not the only solution to the problem, according to the study.

The study recommends that Illinois create an Office of Rural Health to implement state policies toward rural health centers, the study said.

"Expansion and diversification would be encouraged (by the office) while delivering needed services to communities," the study said.

The proposed office could also finance the purchase of advanced medical technology, which is sorely needed, according to the study.

"A smaller patient source makes expensive modern equipment hard for rural hospitals to get," Wagner said.

The study also suggests that research be done to determine whether a swing-bed program would benefit faltering rural hospitals or further strengthen well-established hospitals.

The program increases the efficiency of a hospital, allowing use for both short-term and long-term stays, Mullner said. Otherwise, the hospital has to allocate beds for each use, increasing the amount of vacant beds.

Besides Medicare problems and the high cost of modern equipment, an increase in out-patient procedures has hurt hospitals, according to health care sources.

"Many of the procedures that used to take a few days are now out-patient procedures. Hospitals are becoming clinics," Petterchak said.

However, hospitals could make up this loss by raising charges for these procedures, according to Mullner.

Small Town Copes With Loss of Hospital

White Hall.—In this tranquil farm town, folks are accustomed to life without a movie house. Now, they'll have to cope without a more precious commodity—a hospital.

White Hall Hospital, a Main Street fixture for nearly eight decades, is out of business. A "gone fishing" sign is tacked above the entrance.

"Everybody's scared to death," said businessman Jim Ballard. "What if a kid is run over? Or someone has a heart attack? You're pretty much left alone. It's a great loss."

"It's like you're losing your identity," said Dr. Ludwig Dech, a silver-haired physician who was on White Hall's staff 30 years. "Who in the medical community is going to locate where you don't have a hospital?"

White Hall has joined the growing list of farm towns that have struggled throughout this decade, losing people, businesses and, finally, a life-and-death resource: the hospital.

"The question is not whether hospitals will close, but which ones are going to close, who's going to make the decision . . . and what's going to be left," said Robert Van Hook, executive director of the National Rural Health Association.

The number of rural hospital closings has jumped from seven in 1983 to 40 in 1987, Van Hook said. Forty percent of last year's closings, he said, were in Texas, Arkansas and Louisiana.

From 1981 to 1986, admissions to rural community hospitals fell 24 percent—from 8.4 million to 6.4 million, the American Hospital Association says.

In 1986, the group reports, occupancy averaged 55 percent; it was less than 40 percent among hospitals in Texas and those with fewer than 50 beds.

"The whole system is going into shock," said Glenn Klein, a consultant hired this year as White Hall's administrator. "There's not enough money in the system to cover the people."

He should know. White Hall Hospital averaged 40 percent occupancy and lost almost $500,000 last year. It provided $911,000 in care for which it wasn't reimbursed.

What's ailing America's rural hospitals is similar to what's crippling urban ones: declining demand and money. But in small towns, the major obstacle seems to be Medicare, which serves the elderly, a large chunk of rural hospital patients.

Under federal rules, rural hospitals receive less per Medicare patient than urban ones. The rural-urban difference is, on average, 36-37 percent, Van Hook said.

Medicare pays by diagnosis, so a city hospital treating a stroke victim would receive $4,055, while a rural hospital would receive $2,990, said Tim Size, executive director of the Rural Wisconsin Hospital Cooperative.

The dual scale, established in 1983, assumes treatment costs are lower in small-town hospitals. Although rural hospitals are somewhat cheaper, Van Hook acknowledged, the difference shrivels as cases become more complex and the patient load drops.

"Being underpaid each of the last six years, it's taken its toll," Van Hook said. "You can't buy new equipment. You can't raise nurses' salaries. You can't make the improvements."

The White Hall area, like many that have witnessed the steady exodus of their young people, has a large elderly population. Almost one in five Greene county residents is 65 or older; nearly 10 percent of all county residents receive public aid.

Those factors helped sink the 30-bed hospital. Last year, 85 percent of hospital patients were Medicare or Medicaid recipients or indigent, Klein said.

"When your reimbursement is primarily Medicare and Medicaid, you have a rope around your neck," Klein said, explaining that White Hall last year received 49 cents for every dollar of services provided.

Already, the loss of rural hospitals has people worried about treatment delays.

"When you have to have to go 50-60-70 miles, things get very difficult if you're about to deliver a baby. . . . If you're bleeding or if something's wrong . . . you don't need a hour or two-hour ride," Van Hook said.

And when a small town loses its hospital, it also loses doctors and nurses and struggles to replace them, hampered by having less money to offer and fewer amenities. "We don't have opera every Saturday night," Van Hook said. "We often don't have theater. Many times we don't even have McDonalds."

To combat their financial problems, rural hospitals are deversifying. Some in Iowa are offering adult day care or turning cafeterias into catering services.

For the 3,000 residents of White Hall, there wasn't time to diversify.

"We did not realize the need to change until it was too late," Klein said, noting that local hospitals have been losing patients for years to regional hospitals with more services and specialists.

Still, the hospital didn't give up easily.

In the late 1970s, it remodeled to meet government standards. A few years ago, it recruited three doctors, Klein said, reopened an obstetrics unit at their request and purchased a building three miles away in Roodhouse for a clinic.

"We guaranteed them a good living," Klein said. "We helped them in recruiting their patients. . . . People thought this would be something they could use to build and expand on."

But the doctors notified the hospital board in December they had decided to stop delivering babies. "It was almost a stab in the back," Klein said.

Two of the doctors still have hours at the Roodhouse clinic. The remaining doctors working full-time in White Hall said it would be too stressful to handle deliveries alone and be on call 24 hours a day.

Even then, the hospital kept trying. It cut staff. It reduced inventory. It failed.

"This not only affects us emotionally and sentimentally," said Bob Moulton, hospital board president. "It also affects us economically. We lost a payroll of $864,000."

That will hurt Main Street. But the impact could go well beyond.

The town no longer has a medical center to stabilize emergency patients. The nearest hospital is 10 miles away, but the ambulances making the trip are staffed by county medical technicians, untrained in such critical tasks as inserting intravenous tubes.

"Ten miles without primary care services are darn dangerous miles," Klein said. The nearest trauma center is 27 miles distant, and Klein said its 40-minute ride is potentially fatal for an accident or heart attack victim.

When White Hall closed in early September and filed Chapter 7 bankruptcy, Klein said, many couldn't believe it.

"The community, for many years, had a wait-and-see attitude. The community could have saved the hospital and kept it open," he said, but "there was no point in doing that. We didn't have the patients."

CAIRO, ILL., LOSES EMERGENCY CARE; RESIDENTS SCARED

(By Lillian Williams)

Cairo is a sleepy Mississippi River town on the verge of medical disaster, and the townsfolk say they're scared to death.

"If I had a heart problem, I'd have to depend upon the good Lord to help me," said Donald Ames, 62, businessman and life-long Cairo resident.

The trouble is that Cairo, once a booming Downstate railroad town, has lost its only hospital emergency room.

The emergency room closed on Aug. 8 after a state subsidy ran out. Residents have no place to turn.

Even the town's one hospital, St. Mary's, boarded its doors two years ago. There are no private ambulance carriers, and Cairo shares the only public ambulance with other towns of Alexander County.

Residents lucky enough to catch the ambulance are forced to ride at least 35 miles to the nearest hospitals in Paducah, Ky., or Cape Girardeau, Mo.

"It's devastating to our community," said Angela Greenwell, president of the Chamber of Commerce. "It's almost a scandal to think people will be deprived of emergency medical services."

Already, several near-misses in medical care have occurred, said Sarah Jane Clarke, director of a Cairo community action agency.

"One lady needed the ambulance, but the ambulance was in another county helping with an emergency there," Clarke said. "She was suffering from kidney failure. It took two to three hours for a helicopter in Missouri to get her to a hospital.

"A gentleman had a heart attack. . . . It took two hours before he was reached by trained medical personnel."

Surprisingly some Cairo residents take the blame for the crisis. "We sat on our fannies and let this happen," said Clarke, mother of five and a life-long Cairo resident.

Clarke and others say Cairo residents were aware of a deadline when the state no longer would support the emergency room. They were also aware that the state had urged them to find a solution during the last 18 months.

"Everybody takes the attitude of 'let George do it,' " Clarke said.

Al Grant, a top state health official, said the state's funding lapsed on June 30 and that an agreement with Cairo officials called for them to work out alternatives.

"Now Cairo is faced with the situation that many communities have faced for years—and some forever—that don't have a hospital," said Grant, assistant to the director of the Illinois Department of Public Health.

At a town meeting on Monday, residents were expected to debate a proposal for a private firm to reopen the hospital.

It's the first step in reviving a community also plagued by 20 percent unemployment and an average household income of $9,569, well below the national norm.

"We've fallen on our knees, but we have not fallen to our face," said Greenwell, predicting better times for the town.

MED CENTER CLOSED IN CAIRO

CAIRO, IL.—An emergency medical care center serving two economically depressed counties in deep Southern Illinois closed its doors at 8 a.m. Monday because expected state funds were not provided, officials said.

Fred Bernstein, executive director of Community Health and Emergency Services Inc., which operated the center, said the board decided on July 28 to close the center after learning the state had not budgeted the needed $375,000 to operate the center for the fiscal year that started July 1.

The center had been providing emergency room service for 19 months through more than $650,000 in funding provided by the state since the Southern Medical Center in Cairo closed because of red ink in December 1986.

CHES met with the staff of Gov. James R. Thompson last week, hoping for the release of some discretionary funds to tide the center over, but none was allotted, Bernstein said.

"The bottom line is that with the failure to approve a tax increase, the soft or discretionary money has dried up," said Bernstein.

AN AUTOPSY ON ST. ANNE'S MIGHT SAVE OTHER HOSPITALS

Once again another Chicago area hospital with a proud past has closed its doors, depriving its mostly poor clientele of access to convenient medical care. This time it is St. Anne's probably the largest private hospital yet in the country to go out of existence.

There is no need to mince words. It is a tragedy. It is a tragedy for the people it served. It is a tragedy for the people it employed. It is a tragedy, we believe, that could have been averted. And it is a tragedy that, with prompt and proper attention to the problem, does not have to occur again.

A post-mortem will not do any good for St. Anne's, but it could help focus attention on the fatal combination of ailments that finally felled this 85-year-old, 437-bed West Side institution, and perhaps help save some others that are flundering.

Two other Chicago-area hospitals preceded St. Anne's to this fate this year alone. Six more had passed into history since 1985. And at least half a dozen others are believed to be in a terminal state, with some unlikely to survive beyond 1988.

As at other inner-city hospitals, most of the patients at St. Anne's were dependent on government to pay for their treatment and the government paid neither fully nor promptly.

At the federal level, the Medicare system underpays by about 7 to 10 percent because of a formula that even with some adjustments pays at general the same rate all across the country—as if costs everywhere were the same. This cheats high-cost areas like Chicago.

At the state level, Medicaid pays only 73 percent, and pays it late because of its own budgetary problems. St. Anne's was owed about $1.7 million in Medicaid reimbursements.

Total unreimbursed care in Illinois last year is estimated at about $500 million. Hospitals outside poor areas generally pass on the unreimbursed expenses to their paying patients. Hospitals like St. Anne's have no such possibility. Furthermore, when they close down, the same government-dependent patients shift to other hospitals, bringing the problem with them. Thus reasonably institutions find themselves under new strains, and in danger of going under.

This vicious cycle must be broken before it threatens the entire public health system. And the way to do it is precisely by remembering that what we need is a system. Hospital A, Hospital B, Hospital C may each have individual identities and a glorious past, but if they want to ensure a future—a future of any kind at all—they must be interlinked in some manner.

Cook County, for example, is considering building a mammoth new hospital building to replace the existing one, with a price tag of $1.2 billion. Why spend so much money on building one facility in one location when other hospitals have under-utilized bed capacity? Isn't it better to build a smaller replacement building for the Cook County Hospital and use other area hospitals as satellite centers? This is an idea that has been kicking around for some time. Its time has come.

Another way to provide new funds for ailing hospitals would be through employer-paid insurance. Many of the indigent who use Medicaid have jobs, however low their wages. Generally, however, the employers of such people do not provide health insurance. At the urging of hospital groups, the House Ways and Means Committee of Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) is now looking into this.

With more-efficient use of tax dollars through a systemic approach and with a new source of revenue, there is an excellent chance that the poor will not be deprived of medical care. Otherwise, with lawmakers continuing to refuse to raise taxes to pay for indigent care, institutions like St. Anne's will continue to die. And eventually the overwhelmed survivors will have to be rescued at much greater cost by the same taxpayers whose ire the legislators are now trying to avoid.

HOSPITAL FAILURES AFFECT SURROUNDING COMMUNITIES

CHICAGO.—Inner-city hospitals collapsing in financial failure are likely to topple their shaky neighbors in a "domino effect" hastened by growing tides of poor people and eroding government support, authorities say.

Rural hospitals are shutting down at an equal rate and are leaving large gaps in the availability of health care, authorities say.

Two Illinois hospitals last week announced they would close—a 437-bed facility on Chicago's West Side and a 30-bed institution in rural southwestern Illinois—becoming casualties in an accelerating national trend.

"It's a fragile environment for hospitals," said Jan Shulman, a spokeswoman for the American Hospital Association, which allied a record 79 hospital closings nationwide last year, five in Illinois.

Twenty-five more of the state's 226 remaining hospitals fit the profile of endangered institutions, most of them located in Chicago and one in East St. Louis, said Kenneth Robbins, president of the Illinois Hospital Association.

Typically, the shaky hospitals are in poor, inner-city neighborhoods, with 25 percent of their patients poor people covered under Medicaid. 30 percent to 40 percent elderly people covered under Medicare, and 5 percent to 10 percent indigent people who have no method of payment, Robbins said.

Currently the state pays hospitals only 73 cents for every dollar the hospitals spend treating Medicaid patients, and the federal government pays only 90 cents for every dollar spent treating Medicare patients, he said.

"Nearly 60 percent of all community hospitals lost money providing patient-care services in 1986." Shulman said.

"There's a certain domino effect that accompanies the closing of any hospital," Robbins said.

Edward Duffy, outgoing director of the Illinois Department of Public Aid, says surplus beds as much as inadequate government support are to blame for many of the troubles facing hospitals. He cited the soon-to-be closed St. Anne's Hospital on the West Side as an example, noting that it has been using only about one-quarter of its 437 beds.

HOSPITAL CLOSINGS NOT LIMITED TO CITY

RURAL AREAS HAVE SAME PROBLEM, AND POOR SUFFER IN BOTH CASES

(By Jean Latz Griffin)

Susan Schofield and her brother, David Beem, had come home to the dusty farm town of White Hall, Ill., Wednesday to move their elderly mother—struggling to breathe and wracked by a gangrenous leg—from her familiar bed to another hospital 25 miles away.

"This shouldn't have happened," said Schofield, of Tampico, wiping away tears as her mother was loaded into the ambulance. "My mother is critical. She is much too sick to be moved. I can't believe this."

White Hall Hospital—all 30 beds, laboratory, X-ray department, emergency room and surgery—was closing, and Essie Cunningham, 70, was its last patient.

Nurses in black armbands bid Essie farewell as they wheeled her past the empty rooms. Already, 81-year-old Jule Gray had been taken home by his wife. The two senile women who had lived at White Hall for two years had gone to a nursing home.

As soon as the town's dentist finished the last oral surgery in the small operating room, all medical care here would cease. Everything would be over but the cleanup.

"It breaks my heart," said Margaret Gansz, a nurse's aide at White Hall for 18 years. "We are a family here."

About 260 miles northeast of White Hall in a tough Chicago neighborhood, Freddie Zaia was just as upset that his hospital—St. Anne's in Austin—was closing.

"I got shot in a gang-bang right in front of this store nine months ago," Zaia said. "I was in the hospital 22 days, most of the time in the ICU [intensive care unit]. Nobody thought I'd make it."

Zaia, who says he is "28 or 29, somewhere in there," pulled up his shirt to show an inch-wide and foot-long scar from the surgery after the shooting.

"I still got a bullet in my back, so I have to go for X-rays a lot," Zaia said. "I know St. Anne's is losing money, but I wish they'd stay open. Eileen is my favorite nurse. It's a good hospital."

On the same day last week, Tuesday, White Hall Hospital and St. Anne's Hospital announced they were closing their doors after more than 80 years of service to their communities.

White Hall had only 7 patients among its 39 beds; St. Anne's had only 115 patients in 437 beds. In each case, nearly 80 percent of those patients relied on Medicaid or Medicare to pay their bills.

The most-used facility in both hospitals was the emergency room. St. Anne's saw 100 patients a day; White Hall sometimes as many as a dozen. Yet fewer than 10 percent of those patients were admitted.

St. Anne's and White Hall represent two facets of the changing nature of health care in America—the decline of large, inner-city community hospitals and the withering of the country's small, rural hospitals.

"Our actual need here is not of a full-scale hospital," said White Hall administrator Glenn Klein. "To try to keep this place going the way it was would be like trying to keep a dinosaur going."

Even before the pain of loss cases, people in Austin and White Hall are trying to determine just what kinds of health care they truly need, and how to get it.

In White Hall, located midway between Springfield and St. Louis in Greene County, a 23-member community planning committee has been meeting for four weeks to decide if White Hall and its neighbor, Roadhouse, should apply to the state for funds to develop a Rural Health Clinic. And, true to its county roots, the committee on Aug. 4 voted to use the $1,032 earned at the dunk tank during the Fourth of July celebration for its expenses.

In Austin, on Chicago's West Side, things are more complicated. Several local politicians would like the Cook County Board to take over St. Anne's and the nine other hospitals that have closed in the past three years as satellites for Cook County Hospital. A social service agency is investigating the possibility of converting the hospital into a skilled care nursing home. There also is talk of converting many of the medical/surgical beds to an expanded psychiatric ward.

In some ways, White Hall and Austin couldn't be more different. Most of White Hall's 2,800 residents are elderly, retired and white. More than 80 percent of the 138,000 people who live in Austin are black or Hispanic and 43 percent are under 20 years old. A lazy two-lane highway winds its way through White Hall. CTA buses fume their way through Austin.

But on a deeper level, the level where decisions are made about health care, the two communities are remarkably similar. Both have high rates of unemployment and poverty; few people in either place have private medical insurance.

And the closing of both hospitals will have effects beyond health care. White Hall cannot afford to lose the 52 jobs that the hospital provided. The closing of St. Anne's will add about 500 more jobs to the 7,500 already lost in Chicago in the last three years due to hospital closings.

Both hospitals were built for other times, when the economy was better, more babies were being born, and the worlds of government and medicine were far apart. But those times are gone.

Of the 79 hospitals that closed in the last year in the nation, half were in rural areas and half were in the inner city.

Part of the problem is that both rural and inner-city hospitals serve poor patients. With government health care programs paying less than $1 for every $1 of health care given, hospitals with large numbers of poor patients find themselves on a downward spiral that eventually leads to financial collapse.

Some Chicago health care experts predict that the closing of St. Anne's and other inner-city hospitals will have a domino effect: Poor patients will be sent to fewer and fewer hospitals, thus overloading their ability to stay afloat.

But others, particularly the growing numbers of people who watched health care costs skyrocket over the last 20 years and then began to take steps to bring them into line, say the demise of the White Halls and the St. Annes of the country may be just what the cost analyst—if not the doctor—has ordered.

Hospitals, they say, are trying to cover the cost of operating large, out-of-date facilities by overcharging patients.

Government and insurance companies are trying to determine the best price they can get for medical care, regardless of a hospital's overhead cost. If one side effect is to push the least economical hospitals out of business, well, that's letting the marketplace function as it should, they say.

"You have several hospitals around St. Anne's that are operating at about 60 percent capacity," said Marilyn Plomann, executive director of the Illinois Health Care Containment Council. "They need St. Anne's patients. That closing may be the ticket to survival to those other hospitals."

But in White Hall and Austin, "those other hospitals" may not be what people have learned to trust.

Going to a different hospital often means finding new doctors or entering what is perceived as nearly alien territory—whether it is an area controlled by a different street gang in Chicago or the site of generational feuds in rural Illinois.

Asked why she would not go to Boyd Hospital in Carrollton 10 miles away, 15-year-old Ginny Allen looked appalled that anyone could seriously suggest such an idea.

"I'm an old-fashioned country girl, and my mama raised me up with Dr. Dech," Ginny said. Dr. Ludwig Dech has practiced in White Hall and Roodhouse for 30 years.

"He's the only one ever cared spit about me," said Ginny

"I understand him, and he understands me. He sewed up my thumb when it got caught in the lawnmower. He fixed my ankle when I sprained it running track. I don't like the attitude over at Boyd."

MONEY WOES CLAIM ST. ANNE'S HOSPITAL

WEST SIDE FACILITY VICTIM OF SLOW AND INSUFFICIENT STATE, FEDERAL PAYMENTS

(By Bob Reszek)

They gathered at St. Anne's Hospital Aug. 30 to eulogize yet another health care facility which will close its doors shortly because of financial problems stemming from lack of government funding.

The West Side institution was 85 years old when the life support system was unplugged.

Authorities of Ancilla Systems announced at a press conference St. Anne's, 4950 W. Thomas St., will discontinue its acute care operations within the next few weeks. An exact date will not be determined until approval from the Illinois Health Facilities Planning Board and a timetable for the transfer of beds and patients to St. Elizabeth's Hospital, 1431 N. Claremont Ave., can be finalized. St. Elizabeth's is also an Ancilla Systems facility.

Sister Kathleen Quinn, provincial of the Poor Handmaids of Jesus Christ which sponsors Ancilla Systems and its seven other Midwestern health care facilities, delivered the opening statement. St. Anne's will thus become the 10th Chicago-area hospital to close within the last three years.

Calling it a very difficult and well-thought-out decision. Quinn said, "We began examining our mission to the inner city and how to continue serving the poor and powerless back in 1984. At that time, we recognized that we would not be able to continue our mission in Chicago without making changes in our approach to health care delivery."

"Since that time," Quinn continued, "reimbursement structures have continued to decline, as both Medicare and Medicaid have drastically reduced state and federal commitments to providing for the health care needs of the public, including the community residents using St. Anne's services.

"Philanthropic efforts have overlooked the needs of the residents, and the Cook County commissioners continue to push for a new hospital, rather than contract with community-based providers for the inpatient needs of county health care recipients."

St. Anne's is owed more than $1.7 million in Medicaid reimbursements by the state.

The closing of St. Anne's will eliminate more than 400 full- and part-time jobs. The facility, which originally housed 437 beds and was cut down to 115 in cost-saving measures, currently services 97 inpatients.

In a statement from the Archdiocesan Pastoral Center issued that same morning, Cardinal Bernardin said: "The closing of St. Anne's Hospital is a great loss to the city of Chicago and the archdiocese. In expressing my gratitude to the sisters of the congregation of the Poor Handmaids of Jesus Christ who served this community for many years, I also express personal regrets that the reason the sisters decided to close was the inability of the hospital to remain financially viable because reimbursement for services to the poor is inadequate to cover costs. To prevent the trend of closure of hospitals that serve large numbers of the poor, it is important that all people of good will work in the private and public sectors to correct this condition. In keeping with the Catholic Church's commitment to its Catholic health care mission, especially in serving the poor, inpatient health care services under Catholic auspices will still be available to the community at other local Catholic hospitals."

Alethea Caldwell, president and chief executive officer of Ancilla Systems, said St. Anne's depended on 75 to 80 percent federal funding—the average for inner-city hospitals is closer to 66 percent. It was one of a number of hospitals across the state severely affected by late Medicaid reimbursements, which were pushed back from April 26 to July 1.

"The decision to cease operations at St. Anne's is not solely financial," she explained. "The redundancy of Catholic providers in their particular area, coupled with insufficiant sources of capital, have contributed to this reorganization of services.

"As long as other sources of Catholic health care remain available, St. Anne's does not serve this part of our mission alone. As a member of the Cardinal's initiative known as the Catholic Health Alliance of Metropolitan Chicago, we have now entrusted the preservation of Catholic health care to its membership."

Caldwell added, "We hope this will be an example, a lesson to focus on future changes. We hope it will be government—local, state and federal—working together to solve the problem because it is a problem."

Other hospitals closed in the city of Chicago since 1984 include Booth Memorial, Chicago Center, Cuneo, Englewood, Henrotin, Mary Thompson, Provident, Walther Memorial and Woodlawn. All closings with the exception of Booth Memorial have occurred since 1986. All had one thing in common: They treated large numbers of the poor and elderly.

The closing of St. Anne's means community residents requiring health care will opt for one of two alternatives—either seek new doctors and travel greater distances or postpone treatment until the next medical crisis forces a decision.

According to Earl C. Bird, president of the Metropolitan Chicago Healthcare Council, "Two thirds of the hospitals located in the city of Chicago are losing money on patient care, and the losses are increasing. For the first six months of 1988, the losses averaged 11 cents on each dollar of care provided. In 1987 for the same period the losses were 7 cents on each dollar of care provided."

Bird said the reason for the drops is because "Medicare and Medicaid are not paying their share of the costs of caring." Bird pointed out Medicare pays only 93 cents on the dollar of cost and Medicaid is even lower at 73 cents on the dollar of cost. To complicate matters, he said, the Chicago Health Systems Agency estimates close to 600,000 people in the city or one in five are without health insurance for at least part of the year.

"Contrary to popular belief," Bird said, "80 percent of all low-income patients are cared for by private hospitals in the Chicago area. This tab now exceeds $300 million to private hospitals in the "metropolitan area."

Father Leroy A. Wickowski, coordinator of the archdiocesan Health/Hospital Affairs office, said, "I think there has to be greater government funding to cover the costs. The question is how much can (hospitals) absorb and still be able to continue. It is a problem and we would try to have our (Catholic) hospitals work together to strengthen themselves."

Ken Robbins, president of the Illinois Hospital Association, also announced at the press conference White Hall Hospital in downstate Greene County will cease operations. It likewise serves large numbers of poor people. He issued a plea to legislators to act now and prevent futher closings.

"Our lawmakers must have the vision and the conscience to provide sufficient funds to ensure that no more hospitals meet the same tragic fate," Robbins said.

Robbins claimed health care funding today is "$70 million short." He said Congress passed a law last year requiring funding be made available to hospitals depending on 25 percent or more Medicare. Robbins added the state should be spending about $15 million for those particular hospitals, when in reality it currently allows for $5 million.

Bill Cox, vice president of government services for The Catholic Health Association of the United States, also pointed the finger at the government, saying a CHA survey indicated "the federal government, since 1982, has reduced Medicare spending 23.1 percent or by $48 billion over its earlier estimates. Almost all of these cuts have been achieved through reduced Medicare payments to hospitals."

"The long and short of it is the demand for health care systems is up and government funding for it is short. And that's a disaster," Cox said.

Bird later revealed 23 hospitals in the Chicago area are identified as endangered, with at least six in "imminent danger." He would not name any facilities in particular, but did warn "if changes don't occur, then three-quarters are in ultimate danger."

Another press conference later in the morning featured various political figures, including state Sens. Richard H. Newhouse Jr. (D., Chicago) and Miguel del Valle (D., Chicago), state Rep. Robert LeFlore Jr. (D., Chicago), and Chicago Aldermen Danny K. Davis and Percy Giles. Newhouse indicated he would continue lobbying in the statehouse to keep the hospital open.

The problem is evident nationwide. A record 79 of the country's 5,800 hospitals closed, with more than half coming from inner-city communities.

SMALL INNER-CITY HOSPITALS IN UNITED STATES FACE THREAT OF FINANCIAL FAILURE

(By Isabel Wilkerson)

CHICAGO August 20.—Across the country, small community hospitals in poor inner cities appear on the brink of failure, squeezed by fluctuations in state and Federal Medicaid reimbursements and a rise in indigent patients depending on them, health policy experts say.

These hospitals, which are privately run and serve a specific community, are often the only place where poor residents can get routine medical care. But now financially troubled themselves, some of these hospitals are barely able to provide even marginal service.

At the Roseland Community Hospital on the South Side of Chicago and struggling to stay open, the CAT scanner broke down for the fourth time this year the other day. Once again officials had to transfer patients to another hospital, knowing they could not afford to replace a machine that was used when it was bought.

Roseland's troubles underscore the difficulty of running a hospital in a community that itself is falling apart. With 162 beds, Roseland is the only hospital in a densely packed 40-square-mile swath of inner-city Chicago. Its neighbors are ramshackle taverns on 111th Street, where the community's many unemployed residents watch the world from the sidewalk in their kitchen chairs.

WE'RE ALL THEY HAVE

"We're not like other communities where you look out the window and see five other hospitals," said Denise R. Williams, president and chief executive officer of Roseland. "For the poor people in this community, we're all they have."

But as the community has declined in the last decade from a middle-class neighborhood to a poor and working-class one peppered with boarded-up bungalows, so have the fortunes of the hospital. Like many other small, inner-city hospitals, Roseland is trying to stave off bill collectors and fix equipment that breaks down frequently at a time when it is anxiously trying to attract better-off patients whose insurance can pay for the hospital's services.

The fate of hospitals like Roseland is a major concern of health policy experts who say that without these hospitals poor Americans may have dangerously limited access to health care. A shortage of inner-city hospitals could result for the poor in even lower life expectancies and higher infant mortality rates, they say.

"It's a double-barreled problem," said one of the experts, Alexander Williams 3d, senior vice president of the American Hospital Association. "Many of these hospitals are not the kind of hospitals that would attract people, poor or not, from outside the community. The high-cost, socially difficult and unpopular patients are the ones they're caring for. They are likely to have no full-pay patients and a large number of patients who are unable to pay at all."

Last year a record 79 of the nation's 5,800 hospitals closed across the country while few, if any opened. About half of those hospitals that closed were in inner cities. Indigent patients, many of them uninsured, are overloading a shrinking number of hospitals already financially strained by rising costs. Unable to pay for routine visits to a doctor, they usually show up at emergency rooms sicker than other patients, requiring the costliest procedures.

VIRTUALLY ALL IN LOW-INCOME AREAS

In Illinois, 80 percent of the state's Medicaid patients are concentrated in 20 percent of the state's 238 hospitals. Virtually all of those strained community hospitals are in low-income neighborhoods of Chicago and East St. Louis. At 28 of those hospitals, Roseland included, 27 percent or more of the patients are on Medicaid, according to the Illinois Hospital Association—which adds that 12 percent of the patients at a typical Illinois hospital are on Medicaid.

Many of these hospitals face almost certain death. "Either these hospitals are going to close or they're going to change their mission," said Gerard Anderson, director of the Center for Hospital Finance and Management at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore. "If you're starting to have more than 25 percent Medicaid, you're in trouble.

At Rosland, nearly 90 percent of its 4,000 patients each year are either uninsured or public aid from the state or Federal government, including 50 percent who are on Medicaid. The hospital loses money on almost every patient it admits because Medicaid in Illinois pays a flat per diem rate rate well below the cost of treatment.

Before the early 1980's, when Medicaid generally reimbursed hospitals based on expenditures, hospitals were virtually assured of breaking even. Now many states, seeking to contain costs, are basing their payments on either standardized limits for certain diagnoses or, as in Illinois and California, a set number of days for which the state will reimburse hospitals that care for Medicaid patients.

The hospitals say the changes are pushing them toward bankruptcy, but state health officials say many troubled hospitals are merely being mismanaged. "Our program is not intended to keep hospitals in business, but to buy quality care for poor patients," said Martha Thompson, chief of the Bureau of Hospital Services at the Illinois Department of Public Aid.

QUESTIONS AMOUNT OF PAYMENTS

Citing an average occupancy rate of 60 percent in the city's hospitals, Ms. Thompson asked, "if a hospital has only one patient, should we pay $10,000 a day for the hospital to meet its operating costs?"

But hospital administrators say that efficiency alone does not make up for the rise in uninsured patients seeking care for which the hospitals get no compensation. Adjusted for inflation, hospitals across the country lost $7 billion caring for indigent patients in 1976, more than twice the $2.8 billion lost in 1980, according to the American Hospital Association. In 1986, at least 31 million people, and perhaps as many as 37 million, had no private or public health insurance, according to the Federal Census Bureau.

Complicating the problem for hospitals heavily dependent on Medicaid are the delays and instability of many state programs.

Last spring Illinois, like several other states, ran out of money for Medicaid and except for sporadic emergency aid to the neediest hospitals, halted Medicaid reimbursements for nearly three months.

There were immediate repercussions. The day the suspension was announced, Mary Thompson Hospital, a 203-bed West Side facility with 80 percent of its patients on public aid, announced it was shutting its doors. Last month Chicago's Frank Cuneo Hospital, where 88 percent of the patients were on public aid, closed. It was losing $2 million a year.

"These hospitals have little elasticity—something happens and the hospitals living close to the edge can easily go under," said Mr. Williams of the American Hospital Association.

FOLLOWS A NATIONWIDE TREND

It is a trend playing out all over the country. Last fall, when West Virginia halted Medicaid payment for six months, one hospital closed, several stopped admitting patients and many others came close to bankruptcy.

"What we're seeing is the cumulative effect of losses," said Alan Sprintz, executive senior vice president of the Chicago Health Care Council, an association of about 94 Chicago hospitals. "It's a mutation of what has happened at rural hospitals. Now a lot of inner-city hospitals are cutting staff and services."

That is what Roseland did. To make up for an operating loss of nearly $1 million over the last two years, the hospital has cut 100 staff positions, eliminated unnecessary supplies and now it periodically closes floors.

For years Roseland was the butt of jokes among community residents who used to say that if they ever were in an automobile accident. Roseland was the last place they wanted to go. Now that the hospital has fallen on hard times, the 70,000 people of the Roseland area remember the times it came through, like when children at the grade school came down with food poisoning last year and were taken to the hospital, five minues away.

"I'll do anything to keep it going," said Willie Lomax "We need that hospital."

Last year he and other community leaders went to local bank and got approval for a line of credit for the hospital to tide it over. Still, when Illinois ran out of Medicaid money this year and Roseland had to go nearly four months without a regular Medicaid payment, the hospital used money it has earmarked for new equipment to cover immediate expenses and stopped paying most of its bills. It did so despite an emergency payment of $647,000 from the state.

STARTING TO PLAY HARDBALL

"Now the suppliers are nervous," said Denise Williams of Roseland Community Hospital. "They've had a lot of hospitals file Chapter 11. They play hardball when you start talking slow."

As public and private insurers grow more discriminating in their hospital coverage, hospitals are competing for well-insured patients. Now even struggling hospitals like Roseland are talking about market share and customer relations to reduce their dependence on Medicaid.

"We want to dilute our public aid load," Ms. Williams said "We're trying to attract all types of patients. We don't have the shiny new facilities and amenities to attract full-pay patients. But we're brushing up on our customer relations and we're marketing new programs."

But physically, Roseland is a difficult sell. It is a 64-year-old facility of cinder block walls and linoleum floors. It has no gift shop—just a small display case with dusty trinkets in the lobby. And when equipment like the $500,000 CAT scanner breaks down, as it often does, Roseland must transfer patients to other hospitals for routine procedures.

"Then the patients figures, if they have to tranfer to another hospital for a basic procedure," Ms. Williams said, "why don't they just stay at the other hospital?"

To overcome such obstacles, the hospital has restudied the population it serves and has renovated the emergency room, started an after-hours pediatric care unit and strengthened its obstetrical and gynecological services to meet the needs of the community's many children and women.

Eventually, Ms. Williams said, Roseland may follow troubled hospitals like St. Mary's in East Louis that joined a well-endowed hospital system to stay open.

But many wonder if that will be enough. "The hospital is slowly suffocating," said Dr. Quentin Young, a professor of preventive medicine at the University of Illinois medical school who is president of the Health and Medicine Policy Research Group, a citywide research group studying Roseland "These hospitals need nurture. As long as you look to marketplace solutions, you will have Roseland closings down."

ANCILLA SYSTEMS,
Elk Grove, IL, August 30, 1988.

CHICAGO, ILL.—Four hundred and thirty-seven bed St. Anne's Hospital located on the city's west side, after 85 years of serving all who entered her doors, has announced plans to discontinue its acute care operations. The hospital has petitioned the Illinois Health Facilities Planning Board for permission to, in effect, transfer certain key services to St. Elizabeth's Hosptial, its nearby affiliate. Both hospitals are members of Ancilla Systems, a multi-hospital company sponsored by the Poor Handmaids of Jesus Christ (PHJC) religious congregation, whose commitment, for more than 100 years, has been to alleviate sickness with special sensitivity to the poor. Ancilla Systems, in addition to its inner city presence in Chicago, operates hospitals in East St. Louis, Illinois, and Gary and East Chicago, Indians, among other sites.

Sr. Kathleen Quinn, Provincial of the Poor Handmaids of Jesus Christ, said, "We began examining our mission to the inner city and how to continue serving the poor and powerless back in 1984. At that time, we recognized that we would not be able to continue our mission in Chicago without making changes in our approach to health care delivery. Since that time, reimbursement structures have continued to decline, as both Medicare and Medicaid have drastically reduced state and federal commitments to providing for the health care needs of the public, including the community residents using St. Anne's services. Philanthropic efforts have overlooked the needs of the residents, and the Cook County Commissioners continue to push for a new hospital, rather than contract with community-based providers for the inpatient needs of the county health care recipients."

Alethea Caldwell, president and CEO of Ancilla Systems, described the efforts that had been made by the hospital to downsize operations and reduce costs in an effort to remain financially viable, bringing its acute care services to the current 115 bed level. She stated, "There is a need for St. Anne's to continue serving its patients, even at its downsized level, filling the medical gap which exists within the community. This largely Medicaid reimbursed patient base, averaging in excess of 50%, has occupied the 115 beds at a fairly steady level. However, despite this need, St. Anne's cannot sustain this amount of indigent care at the current reimbursement levels. Therefore, in order to be socially responsive to today's health care environment and to safeguard System assets, which must insure that the mission to serve the health care needs of the inner city poor are met, both in Chicago and in the other three Ancilla regions, governance and management have determined that the facility must discontinue operations.

"The closure has significant economic impact on the community and the employees of St. Anne's. It is also a symptom of the lack of a national health care policy in, and the solution to, the under funded access to health care for the poor."

Sr. Judian Breitenbach, PHJC, Chairperson of the Ancilla Systems Board stated, "The overbedded condition of the health care environment in Chicago seems to indicate that there are plenty of unused services for the people of St. Anne's neighborhood upon which to draw. However, the high infant mortality rates of the inner city continue to remain unimproved and emergency rooms around the city do not always afford access to care for our city's poor. We will continue to focus our efforts to serve the west side; first, through various services at the St. Anne's Professional Office Building and secondly, through our continued presence at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, approximately four miles east of St. Anne's." She added, "Our commitment to enhance Catholic health care in the areas we serve will continue as we look for partners to help us meet the health needs of the community formerly served by St. Anne's."

Caldwell further stated, "The decision to cease operations at St. Anne's is not solely financial. The redundancy of Catholic providers in this particular area, coupled with insufficient sources of capital, have contributed to this reorganization of services. As long as other sources of Catholic health care remain available, St. Anne's does not serve this part of our mission alone. As a member of the Cardinal's initiative known as the Catholic Health Alliance of Metropolitan Chicago, we have now entrusted the preservation of Catholic health care to its membership.

"While we continue to provide those outpatient services we can identify as necessary, we must focus our very scarce resources, both financial and otherwise, on strengthening St. Elizabeth's Hospital, seeking other health care partnerships, and solidifying our future role in health delivery in Chicago."

Philip J. Karst, president and CEO of St. Anne's, added, "St. Anne's is a proud and noble institution which has long stood in the Austin community area providing care and helping to heal the sick who have passed through her doors."

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I am pleased to join in sponsoring this resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that Medicare payments to hospitals for fiscal year 1990 not be reduced below current law levels. As you know, on October 1, 1983, a new method of Medicare payments for hospitals—Medicare part A—called the prospective payment system [PPS] went into effect. Subsequently, payments to hospitals have been made on a prospective basis; that is, fixed payment rates are determined in advance of the provision of hospital services. Unless excluded from PPS, Medicare participating hospitals are paid a specific amount for inpatient services provided to Medicare beneficiaries based on the patient's classification into one of 471 diagnosis related groups [DRG's].

Unfortunately, PPS rate updates have not kept pace with hospital costs. In fact, since 1983 PPS rate increases have fallen significantly below the rate of increase in the hospital marketbasket, an index established by the Health Care Financing Administration [HCFA] to measure changes in the price of goods and services purchased by hospitals. Average hospital operating margins have dropped steadily from a high of 15 percent in the first year of PPS to zero in 1988. Employing HCFA's accounting methods, the Consolidated Consulting Groups of Washington, DC, project that in fiscal year 1989 more than half of all hospitals will suffer losses treating Medicare patients.

The budget proposal for fiscal year 1990 submitted to Congress by the previous administration would further exacerbate this pressing problem. The Reagan administration proposed to cut Medicare reimbursement for hospital capital costs in fiscal year 1990 by $1.6 billion, allow inflation increases under PPS of only 3.2 percent instead of the projected 4.7-percent hospital inflation rate, and reduce Medicare's indirect medical education payment [IMEP] for teaching hospitals from the current level of 7.7 percent to 4.05 percent.

These proposed reductions come on top of already greatly reduced Federal support for the Medicare Program. The previous administration submitted proposals repeatedly to Congress which would drastically undermine the Federal Government's commitment to ensuring access to quality health care for our Nation's elderly and disabled citizens—in fact, its fiscal year 1987 budget proposal alone would have made a 5-year cut in Medicare of $54.5 billion. While I am pleased that Congress was able to turn back many of these proposed cuts, the Congressional Budget Office estimates that Medicare still sustained reductions of at least $35.9 billion from fiscal years 1981 through 1987.

As you know, my own State of Maryland has been at the forefront of efforts to hold down health care costs and is the home of the longest running hospital rate regulation program in history. The success of the Maryland program is confirmed by noting that since the inception of rate regulation, Maryland hospitals have consistently held their cost increases below national averages, moving from 24 percent above average cost per equivalent admission in 1976 to 6 percent below average in 1987.

However, reductions in Federal support for Medicare have also taken a heavy toll on hospitals in Maryland. This is illustrated in the first three quarters of 1988 when the average profit margin of Maryland hospitals fell to less than one quarter of the national average. Further cuts in Medicare reimbursements to hospitals could seriously jeopardize my State's ability to retain its current waiver permitting Medicare and Medicaid participation in rate regulation reviews. Maryland's waiver status has been an important variable in enabling Maryland hospitals to keep inflation in health care to reasonable levels. In addition, the waiver has allowed Maryland to remain one of the few States where the burden of uncompensated care is shared equally by all payor groups. In turn, patients pay basically the same price for a hospital service regardless of the type of payment or insurance. This has enabled Maryland citizens to avoid the "dumping syndrome" experienced by many poor and elderly people in other States. Losing this assurance would be a major step backward in the health care of the people of my State.

Mr. President, it has been said that the measure of a civilized society is how well it cares for those who are unable to care for themselves. The Medicare Program was established to ensure the availability of quality and affordable health care to every older or disabled American. Granting Medicare part A a 1-year hiatus in cutbacks would provide hospitals with some critically needed financial stability. It would also allow Congress to undertake a careful and thoughtful review of the impact of the substantial policy changes instituted in the Medicare Program since 1981 on access to quality health care for our most vulnerable populations. We owe the citizens of this Nation nothing less and I urge the prompt consideration and passage of this important resolution.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, we must ensure that our elderly and disabled citizens have access to quality health care. The cuts in Medicare payments to hospitals have begun to take their toll, forcing many to reduce services or, in some cases, to close completely.

In Connecticut, a number of hospitals have experienced Medicare shortfalls because of reductions in Medicare payments. For example, St. Mary's Hospital in Waterbury, CT, accepts all patients who seek care. As a consequence, 45 percent of its patients are Medicare recipients. According to Sister Marguerite Waite, president of the hospital, St. Mary's suffered a 12-percent deficit in its Medicare reimbursement for the care of Medicare patients. That deficit could rise to 20 percent or more by 1993.

Given this situation, I am pleased to join today with Senators SIMON, KASSEBAUM, and DURENBERGER in supporting a resolution which urges that Medicare payments to hospitals for the fiscal year 1990 not be reduced below current levels. This 1-year reprieve will allow the Government to carefully consider the impact of Medicare payment policies on institutions like St. Mary's and on the disabled and elderly population they seek to serve so well.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senators SIMON and DURENBERGER in reintroducing a resolution we sponsored last September expressing the sense of the Congress that no further cuts be made in Medicare part A during the coming fiscal year.

We are introducing this resolution in order to help assure that payments to hospitals are adequate to maintain the promise of the Medicare Program to offer quality health services to the 33 million elderly and disabled persons who depend upon it. For a number of reasons, the ability of hospitals to deliver on this promise is being seriously challenged.

The Medicare hospitals prospective payment system was initiated in 1983. Among other things, the prospective payment system [PPS] was intended to encourage greater productivity and efficiency in hospital operations. Such a change was needed, as the previous system of reimbursement was not effective in bringing costs under control.

Hospitals have responded to this challenge. However, payments to hospitals under PPS have never been fully adjusted to reflect cost increases in the so-called hospital marketbasket of goods and services. Each year, Congress has cut back the marketbasket adjustment.

Again this year, the budget submitted by former President Reagan proposes a PPS update of marketbasket minus 1.5 percent. This proposal, along with other recommendations in the administration's fiscal year 1990 budget, would result in Medicare part A spending levels falling more than $3.5 billion below that provided by current law. It remains to be seen what adjustments President Bush might make in the Reagan proposals.

It is important to recognize that the reductions which have already been made have begun to take their toll. The General Accounting Office has estimated that, during the period from 1981 to 1986, expenditures for Medicare part A have been reduced by about $17 billion below the level they would have reached had previous growth trends continued.

As a consequence, we are seeing growing numbers of hospitals placed in precarious financial situations. In 1987, 79 hospitals closed their doors nationwide. Last year, this number increased to 85. This situation is likely to worsen. The Prospective Payment Assessment Commission found that nearly half of the Nation's hospitals operated at a loss in 1988. The Commission has also estimated that, on average, it will cost hospitals more to care for Medicare patients than Medicare will pay this year. Although tight Medicare payment levels are not the sole explanation for these financial difficulties, they are an important factor.

It seems to me we need to call a timeout and pull our Nation's hospitals off the front lines of the budget battle. Our resolution proposes exactly that—a 1-year reprieve from budget-driven policymaking. By putting aside our pursuit of hospital budget savings, we will not only provide needed relief from financial pressures but will also be able to better focus our attention on other issues raised by the prospective payment system.

Coming from the State of Kansas, I have been especially concerned that rural hospitals have not fared well under prospective payment. Small rural hospitals have been particularly affected.

In my State, the overwhelming majority of hospitals are small and rural. Of the 142 Kansas community hospitals, 85 percent are located in rural areas and nearly 60 percent have fewer than 50 beds. About 20 percent have between 50 and 100 licensed beds, while another 11 percent have bed sizes between 100 and 200. Fewer than 10 percent of Kansas hospitals have more than 200 licensed beds.

I have had the opportunity to discuss the Medicare situation with a number of hospital administrators, physicians, and Kansans of all ages. Medicare accounts for 53 percent of rural hospital revenues and for 43 percent of the revenues of urban hospitals, and there is a lot of concern in the State about what continued cutbacks will mean for local hospitals and local communities.

Community support for local hospitals is exceptionally strong. The Kansas Hospital Association has undertaken an educational effort promoting the theme "Communities and Hospitals—Staying Healthy Together." This campaign has struck a responsive chord in my State, where nearly half of all hospitals are State or local government hospitals. Nationally, 27 percent of hospitals are owned by State or local governments. The willingness of Kansas citizens to support higher mill levies and other additional taxes to keep their hospitals going attests to the central role which they see hospitals playing in the life of their communities.

Congress has begun to address the question of equitable treatment of rural hospitals, but much more remains to be done. Other refinements are needed in prospective payment as well. By assuring that an adequate pool of funding is available for hospitals, our resolution should help this process by allowing us to concentrate on fine-tuning the system rather than on putting out budget brush fires.

Our Nation's hospitals have an outstanding record in providing quality health care services to our elderly and disabled. We must see that they have the ability to build upon this record. I am pleased that a number of Senators have already agreed to join our efforts, and I hope that all our Senate colleagues will support this resolution.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, in 1983 we made a commitment to the beneficiaries of Medicare. We promised to keep Medicare solvent, and we did. We also made a promise to the hospitals, that we would reward them if they controlled costs and utilization. The hospitals have kept their end of the bargain, but we have not. From February 1983 through February 1989 annual updates for hospitals totaled only 12.4 percent while the marketbasket increased 28.3 percent.

We have not rewarded them. In fact some hospitals are suffering because they kept up their end of the bargain and we didn't. Therefore, I rise today to call for the protection of the Medicare Program from the unfair and unreasonable reductions being proposed in the Reagan budget. This program has carried the burden of budget reconciliation for the past 5 years and now is at the point where the services for the most vulnerable people in our society, the elderly and the disabled are jeopardized.

Mr. President, the Medicare Program is a fundamental component of the economic security of the 33 million elderly and disabled in our country. These people depend on the Medicare Program for the majority of their health services and this security must not be undermined.

Clearly, the Medicare Program has done its share to help accomplish necessary budget deficit reductions. It is now time to stop further cuts until we better understand the consequences of these actions and can develop initiatives that will refine the fiscal management of this program. My concerns over these budget cuts are not just based on the need to live up to our commitment to the elderly and disabled, although that is fundamental, but also stem from evidence that the health care delivery system is showing signs of serious deterioration.

Eighty-one community hospitals closed during this past year, for the second consecutive year the highest number of hospital closings ever recorded. According to data released by the American Hospital Association, the majority of these closures are in rural and inner city areas, areas where the elderly are concentrated and are most vulnerable. In my State, Minnesota, a total of 13 hospitals have closed since 1983. There are several more now operating with major deficits and will be forced to close if payment under the Medicare Program is further reduced. For example, in my State take a rural town like Blue Earth, MN. More than 65 of their total incoming patients are on Medicare. Certainly this hospital and others like it cannot take any further reductions in Medicare and continue as they are. We have taken $53.8 billion out of hospitals to contribute to the deficit reduction since 1983. Enough is enough. These hospitals derive a high proportion of their income from Medicare patients and therefore even small changes in reimbursement has a devastating effect on their budgets.

That is why I and more than 22,000 others in my State of Minnesota signed a petition demanding fair and more equitable payment for hospitals and physicians in urban and rural areas.

For the past 6 years, payment rates to hospitals under Medicare have fallen well below increases in their operating costs. As a consequence, more and more of these hospitals are experiencing negative Medicare operating under margins PPS.

A recent report by the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission indicates that almost 36 percent of our hospitals had negative operating margins during the third year of PPS, up from 18 percent during the first year of the program. Moreover, this trend has continued during 1988 exacerbating the overall financial problem of these institutions. The PROPAC Commission notes that: "This could jeopardize the financial viability of many hospitals and ultimately threaten Medicare beneficiaries access to high quality hospital care." We are slowly but surely destroying our hospital system by causing these institutions to use up their reserves and delay needed capital improvements. Some are being forced to close. Others are continuing to find ways to survive, but are being forced to reduce services and shift costs to other payers. All are in jeopardy of compromising the quality of their care if Medicare payments are not stabilized.

The effects of Medicare budget cuts on rural and inner city health care is particularly troublesome. Rural residents tend to be older and poorer. Consequently, rural hospitals often depend on Medicare and Medicaid for a larger share of their revenue, often more than 50 percent. Reductions in these funds therefor has a dramatic effect on their operating budgets. Moreover, these hospitals are often serving constituents who are experiencing the financial crisis of American agriculture and therefore they have limited opportunity to make up these deficits from other sources. When these hospitals close, access to basic health service is seriously compromised. It is difficult to recruit and retain physicians in rural areas and it is doubly difficult when the hospital closes. This is especially true since the reductions in the Medicare Program have unduly effected rural physicians often paying them only half that paid for the same procedure in urban areas.

The inner city problem was probably best illustrated by the closing of St. Annes Hospital in Chicago during this last fall. This hospital was located in a predominantly poor, underserved area of Chicago. After valiant attempts to cut costs by reducing staff and beds, the hospital was forced to close. Payment from the Medicare and Medicaid Programs were simply too low to sustain operations and there were no other sources of funds. This same scenario is being played out in most other large metropolitan areas including New York, Los Angeles, and Houston.

Clearly there needs to be some restructuring of our hospital system. The health care field is undergoing dramatic change, much of it caused by changing practice styles and cost containment efforts in the public and private sectors. Hospitals must be given an opportunity to adapt to these changes rather than being financially starved into closure. There is good evidence that they are rising to the challenge. Studies by the Center for Health Services Research at the University of Minnesota show that hospitals, and rural hospitals in particular are diversifying, restructuring and developing networks of health services to better serve the needs of their communities. During this past year I initiated the Rural Health Care Transition legislation to assist in this process. We need to protect payment under the Medicare Program while hospitals under go this restructuring.

This isn't solely a hospital issue. Any further reductions in Medicare payments to physicians will exacerbate the physician distribution problem. Across the board cuts, or caps on payments to physicians will not only heighten the geographic inequities that currently exist, but will force some in the most underserved areas to close their practices.

While access to high quality health services is being eroded by budget cuts, the elderly are being required to pay more both for coverage under the program and for the services they receive. According to a GAO report the average out of pocket cost per Medicare enrollee for Medicare covered services increased by 73 percent for part A hospital and nursing home services and 36 percent for part B physician services between 1980 and 1986. Moreover they are paying more than ever before for the part B premium costs.

Mr. President, the Medicare Program was designed as part of an American commitment to provide basic economic security for our elderly and disabled. We are not living up to that commitment and promise. Instead we have asked them to carry a disproportionate and unfair burden to deal with the budget deficit. These reductions have eroded coverage under the Medicare Program and are threatening the financial vitality of the health care delivery system. This is especially true in rural and inner city areas where the service needs are the greatest and the financial resources are the most constrained. We must prevent further cuts in this program while we reevaluate the prospective payment system and develop better more fair reimbursement methods. To otherwise will do severe damage to our health care system while denying services to the weakest and poorest among us. We have already begun to affect the muscle and bone of the system. Let us not take it to the bone marrow.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased today to join Senators SIMON, DURENBERGER, and KASSEBAUM in introducing a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that part A of the Medicare Program should not be subjected to additional budget reductions in 1990.

I have joined in this effort because I believe it would give us the opportunity to look at health care differently.

Like education, good health care is an investment in our most critical national resource: people. It is time that we gave health care the same high priority in the budget that we give it in our rhetoric.

Over the past 5 years the Medicare Program has borne the brunt of Congress' efforts to reduce the Federal deficit. In just 6 years time, this program has contributed more than $30 billion toward savings to reduce the deficit. Each year, on a bipartisan basis, the Finance Committee, which has jurisdiction over this program, has restricted the funds for reimbursement of hospitals, physicians, and other health care providers. However, at the same time concern about the quality of care provided by these individuals and institutions has increased.

We can only do so much so fast without sacrificing the quality of care provided and Medicare beneficiaries' access to that care. Assumptions that Medicare cuts will not affect beneficiaries are highly questionable. If we continue to decrease Medicare reimbursement, quality and access will be adversely affected. These cuts will have an impact on Medicare beneficiaries.

A moratorium on Medicare part A changes for 1 year will give us time to take a look at the results of our actions over the past 5 years and will give us the chance to explore future changes in the program.

The cost of the Medicare Program is still increasing at an unacceptable rate and we must continue to look at how the program can be changed to slow these increases down. Changes may have to be made in the Medicare system to ensure the long-term stability of the Medicare trust fund. However, these changes must be based on good health care policy decisions, rather than budget decisions.

It may be that the Congress as a whole will not agree to this resolution. In that event, changes may have to be made in the program to achieve necessary savings. If that is the result, I will certainly do my best to ensure that our decisions are sound. As the Finance Committee considers any changes to the Medicare Program, my goal will be to ensure that the Medicare Program continues to provide quality health care at a reasonable cost to beneficiaries while adequately reimbursing providers.

I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort.

SENATE RESOLUTION 25—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED AUTHORIZING EXPENDITURES BY THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING

Mr. PRYOR, from the Special Committee on Aging, reported the following original resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

S. RES. 25

Resolved, That, in carrying out its powers, duties, and functions under the Standing Rules of the Senate, in accordance with its jurisdiction under rule XXV of such rules, including holding hearings, reporting such hearings, and making investigations as authorized by paragraphs 1 and 8 of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Special Committee on Aging is authorized from March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, and March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, in its discretion (1) to make expenditures from the contingent fund of the Senate, (2) to employ personnel, and (3) with the prior consent of the Government department or agency concerned and the Committee on Rules and Administration, to use on a reimbursable basis the services of personnel of any such department or agency.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee for the period March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, under this resolution shall not exceed $1,200,008, of which amount (1) not to exceed $33,000 may be expended for the procurement of the services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended), and not to exceed $800 may be expended for the training of the professsional staff of such committee (under procedures specified by section 202(j) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946).

(b) For the period March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, expenses of the committee under this resolution shall not exceed $1,213,792, of which amount (1) not to exceed $33,000 may be expended for the procurement of services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended), and not to exceed $800 may be expended for the training of the professional staff of such committee (under procedures specified by section 202(j) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946).

SEC. 3. The Committee shall report its findings, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable, to the Senate at the earliest practicable date, but not later than February 28, 1990, and February 28, 1991, respectively.

SEC. 4. Expenses of the committee under this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee, except that vouchers shall not be required for the disbursement of salaries of employees paid at an annual rate, the payment of long-distance telephone calls, or for the payment of stationery supplies purchased through the Keeper of Stationery, U.S. Senate.

SEC. 5. There are authorized such sums as may be necessary for agency contributions related to the compensation of employees of the committee from March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, and March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, to be paid from the Appropriations account for "Expenses of Inquiries and Investigations."

SENATE RESOLUTION 26—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED AUTHORIZING EXPENDITURES BY THE COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET

Mr. SASSER, from the Committee on the Budget, reported the following original resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

S. RES. 26

Resolved, That in carrying out its powers, duties, and functions under the Standing Rules of the Senate, in accordance with its jurisdiction under rule XXV of such rules, including holding hearings, reporting such hearings, and making investigations as authorized by paragraph 1 of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee of the Budget is authorized from March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, and March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, in its discretion (1) to make expenditures from the contingent fund of the Senate, (2) to employ personnel, and (3) with the prior consent of the Government department or agency concerned and the Committee on Rules and Administration, to use on a reimbursable basis the services of personnel of any such department or agency.

SEC. 2. (a) The expenses of the committee for the period March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, under this resolution shall not exceed $3,313,130, of which amount (1) not to exceed $20,000 may be expended for the procurement of the services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended), and (2) not to exceed $2,000 may be expended for the training of the professional staff of such committee (under procedures specified by section 202(j) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946).

(b) The expenses of the committee for the period March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, under this resolution shall not exceed $3,382,402, of which amount (1) not to exceed $20,000 may be expended for the procurement of the services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended), and (2) not to exceed $2,000 may be expended for the training of the professional staff of such committee (under procedures specified by section 202(j) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946).

SEC. 3. The committee shall report its findings, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable, to the Senate at the earliest practicable date, but not later than February 28, 1990, and February 28, 1991, respectively.

SEC. 4. Expenses of the committee under this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee, except that vouchers shall not be required for the disbursement of salaries of employees paid at an annual rate, the payment of long-distance telephone calls, or for the payment of stationery supplies purchased through the Keeper of the Stationery, U.S. Senate.

SEC. 5. There are authorized such sums as may be necessary for agency contributions related to the compensation of employees of the committee from March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, and March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, to be paid from the Appropriations account for "Expenses of Inquiries and Investigations."

SENATE RESOLUTION 27—COMMENDING BAILEY GUARD FOR HIS SERVICE TO THE SENATE

Mr. CHAFEE (for himself, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. WARNER, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. REID, Mr.

GRAHAM, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. DIXON, Mr. DOLE, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. GORTON, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. PRESSLER, and Mr. SIMON) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 27

Whereas Bailey Guard became an employee of the Senate of the United States on November 27, 1956, and since that date has ably and faithfully upheld the high standards and traditions of the staff of the Senate of the United States for a period that included eighteen Congresses;

Whereas Bailey Guard has served as Staff Director and as Minority Staff Director of the Committee on Environment and Public Works from January 1, 1966, until the present;

Whereas Bailey Guard served prior to 1966 as Administrative Assistant to the Honorable John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky;

Whereas Bailey Guard served his Nation with great honor and valor during World War II as a B-17 and B-29 pilot instructor;

Whereas Bailey Guard faithfully discharged the difficult duties and responsibilities of his positions on the staff of the Senate of the United States with great efficiency, devotion, and dedication;

Whereas Bailey Guard's clear understanding of the challenges facing the Nation has left his mark on landmark legislation in the areas of the environment, public works, economic development, and agriculture;

Whereas Bailey Guard is retiring from the Senate of the United States on January 31, 1989: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States commends Bailey Guard for his exemplary service to the Senate and the Nation, and wishes to express its deep appreciation and gratitude for his long, faithful, and outstanding service.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this resolution to Bailey Guard.

SENATE RESOLUTION 28—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED TO AUTHORIZE EXPENDITURES BY THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. INOUYE, from the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the following original resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

S. RES. 28

Resolved, That, in carrying out the duties and functions imposed on it by Section 105 of S. Res. 4, Ninety-Fifth Congress, agreed to February 4 (legislative day, February 1), 1977, as amended, the Select Committee on Indian Affairs (hereafter in this resolution referred to as the "Select Committee") is authorized from March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, and March 1, 1990 through February 28, 1991, in its discretion (1) to make expenditures from the contingent fund of the Senate, (2) to employ personnel, and (3) with the prior consent of the Government department or agency concerned and the Committee on Rules and Administration, to use on a reimbursable basis the services of personnel of any such department or agency.

SEC. 2. (a) The expenses of the Select Committee for the period March 1, 1989 through February 28, 1990, under this resolution shall not exceed $1,887,941, of which (1) an amount not to exceed $174,846 may be expended for the procurement of the services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended).

(b) For the period March 1, 1990 through February 28, 1991, expenses of the Select Committee, under this resolution, shall not exceed $1,021,116, of which amount (1) not to exceed $4,846 may be expended for the procurement of the services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended.)

SEC. 3. The Special Committee on Investigations (hereafter in this resolution referred to as the "Special Committee"), a duly authorized subcommittee of the Select Committee, is authorized from March 1, 1989 through February 28, 1990, to study or investigate any and all matters pertaining to problems and opportunities of Indians and the Federal administration of mineral resources, including but not limited to State Governments, Indian education, health, special services, and other Federal programs, and related matters.

(b) For the purpose of this section, the Special Committee is authorized from February 28, 1989 through February 28, 1990, in its discretion (1) to adopt rules (not inconsistent with this resolution and the Standing Rules of the Senate) governing its procedures, to be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, (2) to make investigations into any matter within its jurisdiction, (3) to make expenditures from the contingent fund of the Senate, (4) to employ personnel, (5) to sit and act at any time or place during the sessions, recess, and adjourned periods of the Senate, (6) to hold hearings and to take staff depositions and other testimony, (7) to require, by subpoena or order, the attendance of witnesses and the production of correspondence, books, papers, and documents at hearings or at staff depositions, (8) to procure the services of individual consultants or organizations thereof, in accordance with the provisions of section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended, and (9) with the prior consent of the Government department or agency concerned and the Committee on Rules and Administration, to use on a reimbursable basis the services or personnel of any such department or agency.

(c) The Chairman of the Special Committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses and, at staff depositions authorized by the Special Committee, oaths may be administered by any individual authorized by local law to administer oaths.

(d) Subpoenas authorized by the Special Committee may be issued over the signature of the Chairman, or any member of the Special Committee designated by the Chairman or the member signing the subpoena.

(e) The Special Committee shall report its findings, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable, to the Senate through the Select Committee at the earliest practicable date, but not later than February 28, 1990.

SENATE RESOLUTION 29—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED AUTHORIZING EXPENDITURES BY THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, SCIENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION

Mr. HOLLINGS, from the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, reported the following original resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

S. RES. 29

Resolved, That, in carrying out its powers, duties, and functions under the Standing Rules of the Senate, in accordance with its jurisdiction under rule XXV of such rules, including holding hearings, reporting such hearings, and making investigations as authorized by paragraphs 1 and 8 of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation is authorized from March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, and March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, in its discretion (1) to make expenditures from the contingent fund of the Senate, (2) to employ personnel, and (3) with the prior consent of the Government department or agency concerned and the Committee on Rules and Administration, to use on a reimbursable basis the services of personnel of any such department or agency.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee for the period March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, under this resolution shall not exceed $3,694,395, of which amount (1) not to exceed $14,572 may be expended for the procurement of the services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended), and not to exceed $11,900 may be expended for the training of the professional staff of such committee (under procedures specified by section 202(j) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946).

(b) For the period March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, expenses of the committee under this resolution shall not exceed $3,769,571, of which amount (1) not to exceed $14,572 may be expended for the procurement of the services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(j) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended), and not to exceed $12,400 may be expended for the training of the professional staff of such committee (under procedures specified by section 202(j) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946).

SEC. 3. The committee shall report its findings, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable, to the Senate at the earliest practicable data, but not later than February 28, 1990, and February 28, 1991, respectively.

SEC. 4. Expenses of the committee under this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee, except that vouchers shall not be required for the disbursement of salaries of employees paid at an annual rate, the payment of long distance telephone calls, or for the payment of stationery supplies purchased through the Keeper of Stationery, U.S. Senate.

SEC. 5. There are authorized such sums as may be necessary for agency contributions related to the compensation of employees of the committee from March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, and March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, to be paid from the Appropriations account for "Expenses of Inquiries and Investigations."

SENATE RESOLUTION 30—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED, AUTHORIZING EXPENDITURES BY THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. RIEGLE, from the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, reported the following original resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

S. RES. 30

Resolved, That in carrying out its powers, duties, and functions under the Standing Rules of the Senate, in accordance with its jurisdiction under rule XXV of such rules, including holding hearings, reporting such hearings, and making investigations as authorized by paragraphs 1 and 8 of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs is authorized from March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, and March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, in its discretion (1) to make expenditures from the contingent fund of the Senate, (2) to employ personnel, and (3) with the prior consent of the Government department or agency concerned and the Commitee on Rules and Administration, to use on a reimbursable basis the services of personnel of any such department or agency.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee for the period March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, under this resolution shall not exceed $2,560,816 of which amount (1) not to exceed $1,000 may be expended for the procurement of the services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended), and (2) not to exceed $1,000 may be expended for the training of the professional staff of such Committee (under procedures specified by section 202(j) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946).

(b) For the period March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, expenses of the committee under this resolution shall not exceed $2,614,125 of which amount (1) not to exceed $1,000 may be expended for the procurement of the services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended), and (2) not to exceed $1,000 may be expended for the training of the professional staff of such committee (under procedures specified by section 202(j) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946).

SEC. 3. The committee shall report its findings, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable, to the Senate at the earliest practicable date, but not later than February 28, 1990, and February 28, 1991, respectively.

SEC. 4. Expenses of the committee under this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee, except that vouchers shall not be required for the disbursement of salaries of employees paid at an annual rate, the payment of long distance telephone calls, or for the payment of stationery supplies purchased through the Keeper of the Stationery, U.S. Senate.

SEC. 5. There are authorized such sums as may be necessary for agency contributions related to the compensation of employees of the committee from March 1 1989, through February 28, 1990, and March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, to be paid from the Appropriations account for "Expenses of Inquiries and Investigations".

SENATE RESOLUTION 31—DESIGNATING NATIONAL ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE MONTH

Mr. PRESSLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 31

Whereas more than two and one-half million Americans are affected by Alzheimer's disease, which is a surprisingly common disorder that destroys certain vital cells of the brain;

Whereas Alzheimer's disease is the fourth leading cause of death among older Americans;

Whereas Alzheimer's disease is responsible for 45 percentum of all nursing home admissions; at an annual cost of more than $80,000,000,000;

Whereas in one-third of all American families one parent will succumb to this disease;

Whereas Alzheimer's disease is not a normal consequence of aging; and

Whereas an increase in the national awareness of the problem of Alzheimer's disease and recognition of national organizations such as the Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association and The American Health Assistance Foundation may stimulate the interest and concern of the American people, which may lead, in turn, to increased research and eventually to the discovery of a cure for Alzheimer's disease: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America, That the month of November, 1989, is designated as "National Alzheimer's Disease Month." The President is requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, today I am honored to submit a resolution designating the month of November 1989 as National Alzheimer's Disease Month.

Contrary to the belief of earlier generations, Alzheimer's is not a normal part of the aging process. The Alzheimer's dementia is a tragic progressively debilitating disease. Promoting greater awareness and understanding of this disease, which currently afflicts more than 2½ million Americans, is vital to national efforts in Alzheimer's education and research. Furthermore, a familiarity with Alzheimer's and related dementias provides those who have not been touched by this disease the ability to give compassionate, informed support to others.

Currently, Alzheimer's costs our Nation over $80 billion a year—but approximately only $60 million is expended for research into the cause and cure of this heartbreaking disease. In this age of modern science, where once fatal diseases have been all but eliminated from the population, I believe we can discover the causes of and a cure for Alzheimer's. The Alliance for Aging Research, an organization composed of scientists, industry, and policymakers, in a 1987 report entitled "Aging Research on the Threshold of Discovery," predicted that we will understand the "underlying genetic mechanism involved in Alzheimer's" in the next 10 years. However, this exciting prospect may not become a reality without increased national awareness of Alzheimer's and a greater commitment to research.

National Alzheimer's Disease Month establishes a time for understanding the suffering of Alzheimer's victims and their families. In addition, it provides us with an opportunity to pay tribute to organizations which have developed support networks across the country. Americans should know about the wonderful work of the Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association, Inc., the American Health Assistance Foundation and other organizations. These organizations have taken the lead in providing support for the victims of Alzheimer's and their families, as well as spurring research efforts. Many of our colleagues joined me in cosponsoring a similar resolution last year, which I am pleased to say was signed into law by President Reagan on November 5, 1988. I hope they will join me again this year to battle the disease which has taken the personality, love, memories and life of too many of the Nation's elderly.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON RULES AND ADMINISTRATION

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Committee on Rules and Administration will meet on Thursday, February 2, 1989, at 9 a.m., in SR-301. The committee will consider the report on the procedures for the impeachment trial of U.S. District Judge Alcee L. Hastings in the Senate, and two original resolutions relating to this matter.

For further information regarding this meeting, please contact Jack Sousa, Rules Committee chief counsel, on 224-5648.

Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Committee on Rules and Administration will meet in SR-301, Russell Senate Office Building, on Wednesday, February 8, and Thursday, February, 9, 1989, at 9:30 a.m. on each day, to receive testimony from committee chairmen and ranking minority members on their 1989 and 1990 committee funding resolutions.

For further information concerning these hearings, please contact Carole Blessington of the Rules Committee staff on extension 40278.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs will be holding a joint hearing with the House Interior and Insular Affairs—Indian Affairs Office—on February 7, 1989, beginning at 9:45 a.m., in 1324 Longworth House Office Building, on the fiscal year 1990 budget for Indian programs.

Those wishing additional information should contact the Select Committee on Indian Affairs at 224-2251, or the House Indian Affairs Office at 226-7393.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON ENVIRONMENT AND PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Environment and Public Works, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Tuesday, January 31, beginning at 10 a.m., to hear William Kane Reilly, nominated by the President-elect to be Administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SPECIAL SUBCOMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Special Committee on Investigations of the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on January 31, 1989, at 10 a.m. to hold hearings pursuant to Senate Resolution 381, section 21, agreed February 26, 1988.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Governmental Affairs be authorized to meet on Tuesday, January 31, 1989, at 9:30 a.m., on a hearing relative to the report of the 1989 Commission on Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Salaries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services be authorized to meet on Tuesday, January 31, 1989, at 2 p.m. in executive session to continue hearings on the nomination of John G. Tower to be Secretary of Defense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Select Committee on Intelligence be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, January 31, 1989, at 2 p.m. to hold an open confirmation hearing on Richard Kerr to be the Deputy Director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs be allowed to meet during the session of the Senate Tuesday, January 31, 1989, at 10 a.m. to conduct oversight hearings on the problems of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

ON THE ARREST OF CZECH DISSIDENT VACLAV HAVEL

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to bring to the attention of this body the arrest of Czechoslovakian playwright Vaclav Havel on January 15, 1989. Havel, whose works have been banned in Czechoslovakia for 20 years, was detained for "hooliganism"; that is, peacefully demonstrating for change in Prague. For this crime, he faces as much as 2 years in prison.

This body should note that Havel's arrest—1 of 15 that day—occurred on the last day of the Vienna meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. Little more than an hour after the Government of Czechoslovakia solemnly agreed in Vienna that "civil, political * * * and other rights and freedoms are of paramount importance and must be fully realized by all appropriate means," it crushed the smallest expression of dissent at home. Perhaps their memories are short. More likely, they are extremely selective.

Then-Secretary of State George Shultz protested the incident, as did many like-minded people. The PEN American Center wrote an eloquent letter on Havel's behalf, one which speaks for itself. I ask that it be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The letter follows:

PEN AMERICAN CENTER,
New York, NY, January 23, 1989.

Mr. GUSTAV HUSAK,
President, Czechoslovak Socialist Republic, Prague-Hrade, C.S.S.R.

Mr. MILOS JAKES,
General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia, Nabreszi L. Svobody, Prague 1, Czechoslovak Socialist Republic.

DEAR PRESIDENT HUSAK AND GENERAL SECRETARY JAKES: On behalf of the 2,100 members of the PEN American Center, we wish to register the strongest possible protest against the January 15 arrest and detention of peaceful demonstrators in Wenceslas Square, including our colleague, the eminent playwright Vaclav Havel. It is outrageous that Havel faces charges of "hooliganism" and a possible two-year prison sentence for exercising rights to freedom of expression protected by international human rights covenants to which Czechoslovakia is a signatory.

It is particularly ironic that just as these arrests took place, your emissaries were in Vienna signing another human rights accord that includes specific provisions barring retaliation against those who monitor human rights. In protesting the arrest of Havel and others, we wish to call attention once again to the impending trial of the poet Ivan Jirous, who was arrested in October and charged with "assaulting state officials" because he signed a letter protesting human rights violations.

The international literary community cares very deeply about what happens to these colleagues because, as Havel has written, "creation is related to freedom," and we feel with him that the loss of either is intolerable.

Indeed, the sacrifice to oppression of even one creative voice, in whatever country, must necessarily engage the attention and concern of writers, poets and playwrights around the world. We therefore urge the immediate release of Vaclav Havel, Ivan Jirous and all others who have been imprisoned for the exercise of freedom of expression.

Respectfully,

Susan Sontag, President; Hortense Calisher, Past President; Alan Ginsberg, Vice-President; Maureen Howard; Norman Mailer, Past President; Victor Navasky; Grace Paley; Faith Sale, Co-Chair, Freedom-to-Write Committee; Rose Styron, Co-Chair, Freedom-to-Write Committee; Kurt Vonnegut; PEN AmericanCenter.●

CAPITAL GAINS RATE CUT WOULD ENCOURAGE EQUITY FINANCING

● Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, many in Congress are increasingly concerned about the surge in corporate mergers and buyouts, financed by great amounts of debt and creative financing techniques. From $11 billion in transactions over the 5 years prior to 1983, $160 billion in leveraged buyouts [LBO] have been completed in the 5 years since. The recent, high publicized $25 billion LBO of RJR-Nabisco, which shocked and awed America, has prompted calls in Congress to do something about LBO's. Congress uncertainty about whether—and how—to respond was summed up by Ways and Means Chairman DAN ROSTENKOWSKI: "There's an appetite here on the Hill to do something about it [but] we shouldn't have a meat ax approach. There are some good things that come out of buyouts." Indeed, the empirical studies of LBO's that I am familiar with seem to indicate that they are beneficial to the competitiveness of our economy, and that most companies that undergo a leveraged buyout are more profitable and efficient afterward.

I welcome the congressional debate on LBO's. It has created an opportunity to look into the current Tax Code to determine if there is an undesirable bias in the law favoring debt financing over equity. In my view, there is a bias against equity because interest payments on corporate debt are deductible for businesses and dividend payments to stockholders are not. Our Tax Code imposes multiple layers of taxation on income that is saved and invested. An individual's return from investment in commercial enterprises is taxed once at the corporate level and then again at the individual level when dividends are received.

The more popular policy responses to the LBO issue and the debt-equity question are: One, reduce the corporate interest deduction; two, allow a dividends deduction; and three, reduce the burden of double taxation with a debt-equity swap. There are problems with all of these options. Cutting back corporate interest deductions would raise the cost of capital for U.S. firms, and facilitate foreign takeover bids. Instituting full or partial dividend deductions in return for partial elimination of interest deductions would not lower the overall cost of capital for U.S. firms vis-a-vis foreign firms. Allowing the deductibility of dividends would reduce the burden of double taxation and lower the cost of capital—but many are concerned about the political potential static revenue loss for the Treasury.

I believe the most effective way to solve the double taxation problem, reduce the cost of capital, and help encourage equity financing is to reduce the high capital gains tax rate. Taxing capital gains is yet another form of double taxation of investment. The Tax Code taxes investment income twice by taxing both the future income stream and the capitalization of that stream or the capital gain. The high capital gains tax rate reduces the after-tax return to investment—particularly equity investment.

A lower capital gains tax rate would refocus financial markets toward long-term equity investing and away from maximizing either interest income through junk bonds or short-term gains through commodity options. Many prominent business leaders and Government officials have advocated this approach. In testimony before the Finance Committee last week, Alan Greenspan, the chairman of the Federal Reserve, said the lowering the tax rate on capital gains would help encourage equity financing. In an article in Friday's Wall Street Journal, Edson Spencer, the former chairman of Honeywell, said that capital gains rate cut would curb LBO breakups by restoring the decisionmaking process of American business toward long-term rewards.

Two days ago, I introduced a bill S. 171, to reduce the capital gains tax rate to encourage entrepreneurship, capital formation, productivity growth, and job creation; target the tax incentive soley to equity investments; and partially index capital gains to help eliminate unfair taxation on purely inflationary gains. Specifically, the bill provides for a 50-percent capital gains exclusion from ordinary income tax rates. The differential would apply to investment in equities—direct investments in corporate stock and purchases of corporate stock sold by other investors. In the years for which the annual inflation rate exceeds 4 percent, capital gains would be indexed by adjusting the basis of all assets sold or exchanged.

By restricting the capital gains differential to equities, my bill would promote high-risk, long-term, growth-oriented investment, not tax shelters and collectibles trading. It equalizes the tax burden between equity and debt capitalization—and reduces the overall cost of capital.

Mr. President, the answer to the LBO question can be found by re-examining how our Tax Code impacts income that is saved and invested. I believe that after a thorough investigation of the double taxation problem, most Members will agree that further tax adjustments are needed—and that capital gains tax reform is an essential first step.

Mr. President, I ask that Mr. Spencer's article be printed in the RECORD: The article follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Jan. 27, 1989]

CAPITAL-GAINS SHIFT COULD CURB LBO BREAKUPS

(By Edson W. Spencer)

Takeovers are hurting the international competitiveness of American business. Hostile attacks on well-managed companies and the overloading of balance sheets with high-cost debt are weakening U.S. companies and playing into the hands of foreign competitors.

The market may no longer be the best measure of the value of a company. Now Wall Street forecasts break-up values to show that companies should be bought by takeover artists and then split into pieces to maximize short-term shareholder gains.

Such break-up scenarios ignore the benefits to shareholders that management has developed over a long period to obtain the synergies from related businesses, not all of which increase earnings at the same time. It ignores the advantages of building a portfolio of businesses that can benefit shareholders over different phases of the business cycle. It ignores new evidence from some LBOs where the crown jewels can be sold at a premium but the cats and dogs remain to lower the total return on the deal. It ignores the rising number of highly leveraged companies whose debt and the interest charges drive the company toward insolvency. It ignores the impact of junk-bond interest rates on long-term bond holders.

A more serious problem is the limited amount of equity the deal makers put in relative to the high-leverage, high-interest debt left for the surviving company to pay off. Good divisions are sold, generally to competitors. Long-range expenses for marketing, manufacturing efficiencies and research and development are cut. Interest charges eat into profits. The company's ability to compete is severely weakened.

Foreign competitors of U.S. companies are the real beneficiaries of the weakening of corporate America. This is particularly true in the case of Japan and the emerging Asian industrial powers, but it also applies to some extent to West Germany and other European countries. While many companies in those countries also are highly leveraged, they have stable shareholders, strong bank support and use leverage as a lower cost of capital than equity in the expansion of the business.

In those countries, large blocks of shares are held by banks and sister companies interested in long-term growth of the company rather than in short-term enhancement of share value. There is very limited quarterly-earnings pressure from pension and endowment funds unlike the U.S., where comparisons of the quarterly performance of pension portfolios with peers is the accepted measurement of fund performance.

Accounting rules and practices in other countries favor conservative reserves and high cash flows, while keeping taxes and profits lower than is expected of American managers. This enables foreign competitors to place less emphasis on short-term earnings and more on investments in research and development and in building market share.

Ask a Japanese CEO to rate his stakeholders and he will put his employees first, his customers second and his shareholders third. In contrast, U.S. takeover law says that if a business is to be sold, the board's job is to get the highest price, regardless of the effect on employees and customers, or on the communities affected by the sale of a company.

At last Congress appreciates the problem and is discussing remedies, albeit not very good ones. Trying to lower the cost of equity relative to debt by making dividends tax deductible rather than taxing them twice is fine in principle but would result in a high revenue loss for the Treasury. Imposing a threshold interest rate beyond which junk bonds would pay a penalty is an unnecessary intrusion of regulation and could penalize occasional legitimate users of high-cost debt.

President Bush should expand on an idea from Candidate Bush, and ask Congress to pass a new capital-gains tax. Assets held 12 months or less would be subjected to a short-term capital gains tax of 50%. Assets held one to two years would pay a 30% rate. Assets held two to five years would pay 15%, and assets held more than five years, nothing. The tax should apply equally to pension funds and other non-profits. It would apply to foreign shareholders.

There are many advantages. First, the tax could be constructed to be at least revenue neutral, if not revenue positive. Second, it penalizes speculators and arbitrageurs by making takeovers more expensive. Third, it benefits the farmer, the small businessman and the entrepreneur who have built their enterprises over a long period of time from small beginnings to businesses that be sold at a good capital gain. Finally, a balance will be restored between short- and long-term investments and the decision process that strengthens the future of a competitive America by enabling the owner-shareholder to shift his attention, and that of management, to long-term rewards. This may not completely level the playing field, but it is a shift that will help our international competitiveness.

Managers are pressured to make the wrong decisions for short-term reasons. President Bush needs to introduce a capital-gains tax bill that will turn our attention to building the long-term competitive strengths of America.●

BELLEVILLE, NJ, CELEBRATES 150 YEARS

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise to honor the town of Belleville, an historic New Jersey town. On January 28, 1989, the citizens of Belleville will celebrate its 150th birthday.

Belleville's founders were Dutch. Instrumental in its founding was Peter Minuit, who purchased New Amsterdam from the Indians in 1613. In 1626, the Dutch settlers established an Indian trading post across the Hudson, and in 1633 settled Bergen—now New Jersey City. They expanded to Hackensack, to Acquackanonk, now Passaic, and to Second River, today known as Belleville.

Belleville has played an important role in New Jersey history. During the Revolutionary War, Second River maintained fierce loyalty to the New World and was subjected to many British raids during the conflict. Gen. George Washington and his troops passed through Second River on November 22, 1776. During his stay in Newark, General Washington planned strategy which led to the crossing of the Delaware and the capture of the Hessians in Trenton. These events were important turning points in the Revolutionary War.

Second River played an important role in the industrial revolution as a result of its location at the junction of two rivers. In Second River, Josiah Hornblower, a distinguished citizen, used the first steam engine in the United States in copper mining in 1753. In 1797, he and Nicholas Roosevelt and Col. John Stevens built the first steamboat in New Jersey. Second River's contribution to industry continued as it provided waterpower to run the water wheel of the Hendrick's Copper Mill, and access to the Passaic where coal and supplies could be brought in by boat from New York. At one time the plant was turning out 350 tons of sheet and bolt copper per year.

On June 26, 1797, under the leadership of Josiah Hornblower, the citizens of Second River changed its name to Belleville, French for "Beautiful Village." On February 23, 1839, Belleville, which included parts of the present towns of Bloomfield and Nutley was set aside and a township committee was established.

For 150 years Belleville has contributed greatly to the State of New Jersey and today this tradition continues. From its early beginnings it has evolved into a 20th century metropolitan community about to come into the 21st century. It boasts strong economic growth supported by an outstanding transportation system, Government and education facilities.

The history of this outstanding community would not be complete without acknowledging its citizens and the leaders of today. I extend my best wishes for a grand celebration to Mayor Michael P. Pizzi and to Commissioners Vincent J. Frantantoni, Joseph Fornarotto, Joseph F. McGreevy, and Angelo C. Risoli. May Belleville continue to thrive into the 21st century to celebrate its bicentennial.●

MEDICARE RESOLUTION

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today in support of a Medicare resolution which aims to promote accessible, quality health care for our own senior citizens. I am joining Senators KASSEBAUM, DURENBERGER, and SIMON in this bipartisan effort, and I commend them for their commitment to this cause.

This resolution results from numerous budget reductions affecting our Nation's hospitals. Unfortunately, the fiscal year 1990 budget contributes to threaten hospitals. The PPS update factor is 1.5 percent below the market-basket. In addition, the budget proposes to reimburse hospitals only seventy-five percent of capital-related costs. Currently Medicare reimburses up to 85 percent of these costs. These reductions are proposed at a time when projections indicate that in 1989 more than half of the Nation's hospitals will experience negative Medicare operating margins. The elderly will be the true victims of these reductions and trends.

As the 101st Congress faces the prospect of an administration budget proposal that includes up to $6 billion in additional medical cuts, I am pleased to be a part of an effort to protect our hospitals from bearing too much of the burden of our Federal deficit. This resolution ensures that Medicare payments to hospitals will not be reduced below current services levels. Without this resolution, the ability of our hospitals to provide accessible quality health care for our seniors may be threatened.

I thank my colleagues, Senators KASSEBAUM, DURENBERGER, and SIMON, for their support and dedication to this worthy cause. I look forward to working with them to protect those health care institutions which struggle to meet the health care needs of our frail elderly.●

POSSE COMITATUS IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1989

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate my good friend and colleague, Senator AL D'AMATO, on his introduction of the Posse Comitatus Improvement Act of 1989, and I'm pleased to add my name as a cosponsor of this important legislation.

Senator D'AMATO has been tireless in his efforts to insure that the Federal Government, including the Department of Defense, be in the forefront of providing assistance and cooperation in the battle against illegal drugs. Senator D'AMATO's legislation would further strengthen the role of the DOD in a war this country cannot afford to lose—the fight against illegal drugs.

In the 100th Congress, I worked closely with Senators D'AMATO, WILSON, NUNN, STEVENS, and others during consideration of the fiscal year 1989 Defense Authorization Act to draft an amendment that would elevate the Department of Defense to the lead role in the war on drugs. That amendment attempted to utilize the assets of the military, especially in the areas of surveillance, detection, and tracking of maritime vessels and aircraft.

The legislation directed the President to deploy radar surveillance aircraft along the Southern border of the United States to search for drug smugglers; it required the Navy to work with the Coast Guard to search out and apprehend marine vessels and aircraft attempting to deliver their payloads of poisons on our shores; and it gave the National Guard the authority and resources to assist individual States and law enforcement agencies in their drug enforcement efforts.

Although the amendment overwhelmingly passed the Senate last year, several critical provisions were dropped in conference. I don't believe it requires a great deal of expertise to understand that to have any chance of stopping the flow of drugs coming across our borders we must be willing to adopt tough measures—including increased use of our military.

The Posse Comitatus Improvement Act would restore last years' original Senate language. We will not win a battle by only providing half the troops with half the ammunition required.

Mr. President, there is one provision in Senator D'AMATO's legislation which is of particular importance to an area I believe requires immediate attention—the 2,000-mile Southwest border which is today the No. 1 route for drugs being smuggled into the United States. This provision would require the Defense Department to provide at least 2,000 additional hours of airborne radar surveillance support dedicated to spotting drug smugglers.

At the present time the Southwest border has one aerostat radar balloon operating and six additional balloons are scheduled to be on line by the end of 1989. The U.S. Customs Service also provides radar surveillance but has a limited number of assets. Defense Department support would fill a serious void in radar coverage along the border and would held to funnel traffickers to ground crossings which make apprehension easier.

Finally, in the past it has been a yearly struggle to get the President and the Department of Defense to understand the important Congress places on military involvement in the war on drugs. This legislation would require that the Secretary of Defense include a drug interdiction program in the DOD's 5-year defense play and that the President submit a budget request for drug related programs through fiscal year 1991.

I believe the use of the military for drug interdiction and enforcement could have a major impact on drug trafficking. By combining the resources, expertise, and manpower of the Department of Defense with local, State, and Federal law enforcement agencies now involved in the fight, the United States will finally have a real war on drugs.●

HOBBLING OURSELVES IN INTERNATIONAL SERVICES TRADE

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, like many of my colleagues, I am concerned about our country's balance of trade in both goods and services, especially our bilateral imbalance with Japan. The Congress has worked hard to address the problem, as witnessed by the successful passage of the trade bill in the last Congress.

Telecommunications services are an increasingly important part of our trade policy, both because of their significance to our economy, and because we have a real opportunity to excel in this field. Japan changed its laws several years ago to permit as much as one-third foreign ownership interest in companies providing competition in Japanese international telecommunications. The U.S. Government worked hard for that change and even harder to prevent Japanese backsliding.

Although the path has been long and difficult, an American company has now succeeded in obtaining Japanese Government and industry approval to participate in the Japanese end of an important new telecommunications project. Pacific Telesis Group has successsfully negotiated an option to acquire a significant percentage of International Digital Corp. [IDC], which is authorized to provide competition to KDD, Japan's international carrier. IDC is the only company planning to compete by building its own fiber optic cable across the Pacific Ocean. This is one of the first times that this trade agreement has actually been implemented in Japan.

It is a great irony, therefore, that Pacific's efforts to move forward with its participation are now being impeded at the United States rather than the Japanese end. The 1984 AT&T consent decree requires that Pacific seek permission from the U.S. district court to participate in IDC. In December 1987, Pacific requested a positive recommendation from the Department of Justice, and in November 1988, the Department responded favorably, recommending to the U.S. district court that the company be permitted to participate.

No final action has yet been taken. Pacific's original option expired without a decision by the district court. Because of our official failure to act before that date, major U.S. trade and foreign policy interests have been jeopardized. Failure at this end to approve proposals for United States industry participation in the Japanese market will leave the clear impression that we do not really care, and such failure will have major adverse consequences for our ability to advance United States interests in both the short and the long run.

Pacific has now been able to negotiate an extension on its rights to acquire the IDC until February 23 of this year. It would be a great loss, not simply to that company, but more importantly to the credibility and effectiveness of our trade policy with Japan, if we are not able to complete our own required reviews before that time.

Even beyond the question of timing, I think it is inappropriate for us to allow a regulatory gordian knot to thwart efforts by American companies to establish a foothold in Japan, and I believe that the Senate should act to address conflicts between legitimate domestic antitrust concerns and our broader international trade and foreign policy interests—both in telecommunications and other critical United States industries.●

CONGRATULATIONS TO SENATOR BAUCUS ON HIS HANDLING OF TAX BILL

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the senior Senator from Montana, Mr. BAUCUS, on his handling of the tax technical corrections bill last year. Last August, I asked Senator BAUCUS, in his capacity as chairman of the Subcommittee on Taxation and Debt Management of the Committee on Finance, to guide this bill through a demanding legislative process. He did the job. First, Senator BAUCUS led the full Finance Committee in the adoption of a difficult and lengthy committee amendment that incorporated tax initiatives of many Members of the Senate. Next, as time was running out on the 100th Congress, Senator BAUCUS devoted his time and energy to making sure the bill came to the Senate floor. Senator BAUCUS managed the bill during 3 full days of floor debate, during which over 100 proposed floor amendments were disposed of, and after which the bill passed by a vote of 87 to 1. Finally, Senator BAUCUS served as acting chairman of a very tough conference, and brought the conference report back to the floor just in time for enactment before sine die adjournment.

On several occasions, it looked as though the technical corrections bill might die, but Senator BAUCUS was determined to keep it alive. This bill gives American taxpayers a taxpayer bill of rights; it removes the unfair diesel tax and heifer tax from American farmers; it extends a number of important provisions that would otherwise have expired, including the research credit and the mortgage revenue bond program; and it corrects technical mistakes in the 1986 Tax Reform Act, as well. I, for one, am delighted that we have adopted the technical corrections bills, and that we have put that business behind us. I want to thank my friend MAX BAUCUS for the good work he did, and to congratulate him on a job well done.●

ROCHESTER INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY AND NATIONAL TECHNICAL INSTITUTE FOR THE DEAF

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to honor a special organization from my home State of New York. Next month, the Rochester/Monroe County Convention and Visitors Bureau will be presenting its annual "Tourism Civic Award" to the Rochester Institute of Technology [RIT], with special recognition and emphasis to one of its nine colleges, the National Technical Institute for the Deaf [NTID].

Each year thousands of people visit the Rochester area. Its attractions include several museums, sports fishing on Lake Ontario, and the wineries in the nearby Finger Lakes region. Next year, Rochester will play host to the U.S. Open Golf Tournament. With visitors spending over $119 million in the area last year, tourism is understandably an important part of the community. The Convention and Visitors Bureau, since 1981, annually gives an award to companies, institutions, or individuals who have demonstrated outstanding commitment toward the tourism industry. This year, RIT will receive this award.

RIT is a competitive institution in Rochester, NY, offering more than 230 career-oriented programs. With a student population numbering more than 13,000 RIT is the Nation's 13th largest private college or university. NTID, in its 21st year, is the world's only technological college for deaf students. The institute consists of three colleges, the School of Visual Communication Careers, the School of Business Careers, and the School of Science and Engineering Careers, which offer certificate, diploma, and associate degree programs. The school has a respected reputation—its graduates have a 95-percent placement rate.

Each year both RIT and NTID attract people to the Rochester community for seminars, commencements, special weekends, and various other school-related functions. Also, NTID attracts a special group of visitors for its functions for the deaf and hearing impaired. In fact, Rochester is becoming the center for deaf-related meetings, conventions, and seminars. In 1990, Rochester expects about 3,000 visitors when it hosts the International Congress on the Education of the Deaf.

I commend RIT and NTID for their special contributions to Rochester and Monroe County. As a member of NTID's national advisory group, I am especially proud to send my personal congratulations on this occasion.

BROOKHAVEN SCIENTIST WINS FERMI AWARD

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to call our colleagues' attention to the achievements of Dr. Richard B. Setlow of East Quogue, NY. Dr. Setlow, a biophysicist at Brookhaven National Laboratory, is one of the two winners of the 1988 Enrico Fermi Award, the highest scientific award given by the U.S. Department of Energy, recognizing "exceptional and altogether outstanding scientific achievement in the development, use or control of atomic energy." Dr. Setlow is being honored for his contributions to the fields of radiation biophysics and molecular biology.

Dr. Setlow has been at the forefront of scientific research for many years. Almost 30 years ago Dr. Setlow discovered the process of DNA repair in cells and together with his colleagues demonstrated that ultraviolet light induces structural defects in DNA that can cause biological damage. He has served on advisory boards of the National Academy of Sciences, the Office of Technology Assessment, and the Food and Drug Administration, and served as president of the Biophysical Society and of the Comite International de Photobiologie. His leadership has contributed greatly to the direction of biomedical research in the United States.

I ask that I may have printed in the RECORD, a copy of the press release which highlights further, Dr. Setlow's remarkable achievements.

The press release follows:

BROOKHAVEN SCIENTIST WINS FERMI AWARD

UPTON, NY.—Richard B. Setlow, a biophysicist at Brookhaven National Laboratory, is one of two winners of the 1988 Enrico Fermi Award. The second recipient is physicist Victor F. Weisskopf, of Cambridge, Massachusetts. Each recipient will receive a presidential citation, a gold medal and a $100,000 honorarium.

The Fermi Award, which dates back to 1954, is the highest scientific award given by the U.S. Department of Energy. It recognizes exceptional and altogether outstanding scientific and technical achievement in the development, use or control of atomic energy.

Dr. Setlow is being honored for his contributions to the fields of radiation biophysics and molecular biology. His citation reads: "For his pioneering and far-reaching contributions to the fields of radiation biophysics and molecular biology, beginning with the discovery and conceptualization of the process of DNA repair that have had an impact on research in genetics, recombination, mutation and carcinogenesis."

Secretary of Energy John S. Herrington announced the Fermi Award winners in Washington, D.C. on December 23. In congratulating Dr. Setlow on his award, Brookhaven Lab Director Nicholas Samios said, "I think it's marvelous that Dick Setlow has won this prestigious award. Dick is a biophysicist, and the award is being given for his contributions to the life sciences, demonstrating once again the unity of all the sciences."

A native New Yorker, Richard B. Setlow received his A.B. from Swarthmore College in 1941 and his Ph.D. in physics from Yale University in 1947. From 1941 to 1961 he taught physics and biophysics at Yale University. In 1961, he went to the Biology Division at Oak Ridge National Laboratory, in Tennessee. In 1974, he joined the staff of the Biology Department at Brookhaven National Laboratory and was named chairman in 1979. Since 1986, he has served as Brookhaven's Associate Director for Life Sciences.

In the early 1960's, Dr. Setlow discovered the processes of DNA repair in cells. (DNA is the basic substance of the chromosome, which carries hereditary characteristics.) With his coworkers at Oak Ridge, Dr. Setlow was the first to demonstrate that ultraviolet light induces structural defects in DNA that can cause biological damage. He then showed that in normal bacterial cells, these lesions can be excised from DNA. This discovery of excision repair showed for the first time that the genetic material is subject to biochemical turnover, a notion disputed at that time by most geneticists.

Setlow's trailblazing work, which he has vigorously continued even during his years of administrative duties at Brookhaven Lab, stimulated a veritable explosion of research activity that has led to the discovery of other DNA repair mechanisms, not only in bacteria, but in all organisms, including humans. Scientists now believe that the genetic stability of cells is maintained by a variety of intricate biochemical mechanisms, among which repair plays a central role. In addition, certain genetic diseases in humans are the result of inherited deficiencies in DNA repair. Thus, Dr. Setlow's original discoveries laid the basis for what has become one of the most fruitful, far-reaching and intellectually important areas of modern biology and medicine.

As a science administrator, Dr. Setlow has established, within the biology departments at both Oak Ridge and Brookhaven, research laboratories that have developed international recognition. He has served on various advisory boards to the National Academy of Sciences, the Office of Technology Assessment and the Food and Drug Administration. Setlow has also served as president of the Biophysical Society and president of the Comite International de Photobiologie. His leadership in these roles has contributed significantly to the direction of biomedical research in the United States.

Dr. Setlow is a resident of East Quogue, New York.

Brookhaven National Laboratory is managed by Associated Universities, Inc. under contract with the U.S. Department of Energy.●

SUSAN BRUNS NAMED RHODES SCHOLAR

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, as our educational system is of utmost importance of the citizens of the United States, I am pleased to recognize Susan Bruns, the first Rhodes Scholar from the University of Idaho in 52 years.

Susan has been an exceptional student all of her life. She has never received less than an "A" on any report card. Besides being an outstanding student, she is a member of the Delta Delta Delta women's fraternity, has interned for both U.S. Senator JAMES MCCLURE and First Interstate Bank, and between semesters tutors minority children in New Jersey.

From the town of Eden, ID, with a population of 396, this finance major is an example to all students in and out of Idaho, and I ask that the article from the Idahoan about Miss Bruns be printed in the RECORD.

[From the Idahoan, Dec. 13, 1988]

NOT YOUR AVERAGE EGGHEAD

(By Christopher Smith)

Susan Bruns is a typical University of Idaho student. She's from a small Idaho farming town. Today she's cramming for final exams. Yesterday she received a campus parking ticket.

She's also a Rhodes Scholar.

The first UI winner in 52 years of the prestigious scholarship named after British colonialist Cecil Rhodes, Bruns doesn't picture herself in the musty stereotype of the cerebral highbrow.

"My mother always said I was 'book smart'—she didn't think I had a lot of common sense," the 22-year-old senior said today between final examinations. "I have never seen myself—and I hope others don't see me—as some kind of an enigma. People who are associated with the genius of the caliber of Einstein are often seen as some kind of eccentric and I don't see myself that way at all."

Still, the UI business finance major has never gotten less than an "A" on a report card. At least, "not to date. That starts this week," she jokes. "I take a final this afternoon and I have two on Wednesday including a semester computer project that I worked a total of one weekend on."

Such disclosures of human frailty won't shock academicians. But Bruns is an unpretentious scholar who says she feels no external pressure.

"I really don't feel any different after winning this award," she says. "I'm still the same Susan I woke up with last week. My grade point is a goal I set for myself and I don't feel pressure from other people."

And the Delta Delta Delta women's fraternity member dispels the myth of a scholar's monastic lifestyle.

"You should talk to my friends," she laughs. "Usually when I feel I need to get away, I make that time for myself. I don't keep my head buried in a book."

In the course of maintaining an outstanding academic record, Bruns has found time to serve internships with U.S. Sen. James McClure and First Interstate Bank, plus tutor minority children in New Jersey between semesters.

Now, three days away from earning a diploma, she is ready to head for sanctuary. It is named, appropriately enough, Eden.

"The road sign on the way into town says, 'Population 396'," Bruns says of her hometown in southern Idaho's Magic Valley. One of three daughters of a retired farmer, she plans to spend the next nine months "getting reacquainted with my parents" and assorted nieces and nephews before heading to Oxford University in England for two years on her Rhodes Scholarship.

While her parents "have not always understood the things I wanted to do, they did not set goals for me. They would have been just as happy if I had gone to a community college."

But Bruns came to the UI, where she enrolled as a journalism major. An economics class for honors students taught by Dr. Richard Coffman changed that, inspiring her to switch her field of study to business. Yet she is a nonconformist student of business finance.

"I've known for a while that I didn't want to spend my life trying to beat the other guy on (financial) return," she muses. "I'm not your high-powered finance person, but I still thoroughly enjoyed my major because I came from a farming background where I knew absolutely nothing about corporate finance."

And economics, Bruns believes, is at the core of understanding a government she hopes someday to be a part of.

"I would like very much to work for the national government, and that's loosely defined," she said, noting that she may pursue political office in the future. But in that endeavor, she hopes to fulfill the wishes that Cecil Rhodes had for the recipients of his scholarships.

"If you read Cecil Rhodes' will, you see that in the kind of person he was looking for, he placed a great emphasis on the person who took an interest in their fellow human being," she said. "My greatest professors and the people I have most admired have had that quality. They've taken an interest in me as well as their fellow human beings and I wanted to pattern myself after that."●

WE'RE BEING TOO EASY ON DRUG-USING ATHLETES

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, during the period between the last Congress and the present one, our colleague Senator DENNIS DECONCINI had an article in USA Today about the use of drugs by athletes.

He suggested strongly that the National Football League and others ought to be much tougher in their standards.

I could not agree more.

I recall when I was a boy that my heroes were those of the athletic world. That continues to be the case today.

A 30-day suspension, for example, for someone found guilty of using cocaine is simply intolerable.

I do not suggest that Government ought to be interfering and playing a role. But I want to join my colleague Senator DECONCINI in urging the professional athletic groups to be much tougher on the matter of drug use.

I ask that the DENNIS DECONCINI article from USA Today be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

WE'RE BEING TOO EASY ON DRUG-USING ATHLETES

(By Senator Dennis DeConcini)

At a time when Americans should have been celebrating the spirit of Olympic competition, we were daunted with headlines of illegal drug use.

Several disgraced athletes hastily departed from Seoul, minus their medals and possibly their careers, because they tested positive for various banned substances.

Was the punishment handed to these athletes too harsh?

I don't think so.

I believe the International Olympic Committee should be commended for strictly enforcing its tough anti-drug policy. Now it is time for professional and collegiate sports organizations in this country to follow that good example.

As role models for young people, professional and collegiate athletes should be the first to spread the anti-drug message.

Letting athletes off with just a slap on the wrist for drug use is a crime in itself—it sends the wrong message. Our national sports leagues have neglected to establish and enforce adequate drug policies.

Currently, the National Football League imposes no penalties after the first positive drug test. On the second offense, the player receives only a 30-day suspension, with possible loss of pay and perhaps drug rehabilitation, both at the discretion of team officials. Steroid use carries only a possible suspension after the second offense.

The National Basketball Association has put forth a better effort than most. Its policy of testing all rookies and first-year players for cocaine and heroin use, with one-year suspensions after positive results, is a step in the right direction. Several players have even been suspended for two years or more.

This is a strong policy, but not yet strong enough.

I propose that all athletes at the professional and collegiate levels be tested yearly for illegal drugs, steroids and excessive alcohol use.

If a college athlete tests positive for a banned substance, he should automatically lose a year of eligibility, and should not be alowed to "red-shirt" that year.

A professional athlete's first failed drug test should result in suspension without pay for a year and a mandatory drug rehabilitation program. After a second failed test, an athlete should be banned from the sport for life.

With tough drug policies in professional and collegiate athletics, we can show kids that drug use is not glamorous—it is dangerous and will not be tolerated.

We need to send a strong message.

If you use mind-altering or performance-enhancing drugs, you will not be allowed to compete in sports at any level.●

COSPONSORSHIP OF THE ACT FOR BETTER CHILD CARE SERVICES OF 1989

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues, Senator DODD, Senator HATCH, and others in sponsoring the Act for Better Child Care Services of 1989.

Senators DODD and HATCH were leaders on the child care issue in the last Congress. I commend both of them for their dedication and commitment to addressing the need for affordable, quality child care. Because of time constraints last year, the full Senate was unable to craft an acceptable legislative compromise on the issue.

I am encouraged by the bipartisan willingness to devise a workable solution to the child care question. I feel certain that during the 101st Congress the Senate will be able to accomplish this worthy goal.

Millions of families will benefit from such legislation. We must not lose sight of the fact that fewer than 10 percent of families are what was once considered the "typical American family" with the mother staying home and the father working. The upsurge in the number of women in the work force has been dramatic: In 1950 only 12 percent of women with children under age 6 worked, today 57 percent do.

The family is the cornerstone of our Nation. Today's children, who will come of age in the 21st century, are our Nation's future. Many of them will have to overcome obstacles like broken homes, poverty, drugs, and troubled schools with high dropout rates. Studies show that early childhood intervention is the best hope for "at risk" children. We owe to these children the best in child care and must make it affordable to their parents.

I look forward to working with those on the Labor and Human Resources Committee in reaching a compromise on this issue.●

UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

● Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I am honored to join with many of my colleagues in the United States Senate to pay tribute to the brave Ukrainian people on the occasion of the 71st anniversary of Ukrainian independence and the 70th anniversary of the unification of the Western Ukrainian National Republic with the Ukrainian National Republic. On this day of celebration I applaud the Ukrainian people in their long struggle for freedom, human rights, and national independence.

Although the Ukrainian National Republic endured only 3 years after the January 22, 1918, declaration of freedom, the Ukrainian love of freedom has not been diminished. It is as prevalent in the hearts of Ukrainians today as it was before the Soviet takeover in 1921. Over the past 71 years the Ukrainian people have suffered almost insurmountable deprivation and degradation, yet the Soviet regime's efforts to deprive the Ukrainian people of their national identity, culture, and religious traditions have not extinguished the strong Ukrainian spirit.

Although the hardships endured by the Ukrainian people are many, the Soviet induced famine of 1932 is one that deserves our attention. The world knows little about this catastrophe, but only one famine has ever been recorded which claimed more lives. Yet what makes this famine unique is not its magnitude, but the fact that it resulted from man-made causes.

The Soviet Union, led by Stalin, artificially created this famine to crush the Ukrainian people and break their independent spirit and strong sense of nationalism. The Soviets seized and exported the bulk of the Ukrainian grain crop of 1932-33 and even established border patrols to prevent food from coming into the Ukraine. These actions ordered by Stalin, led to mass starvation which the Soviet Government has taken great pains to conceal. To this day the Soviet Government continues to deny the magnitude of this tragedy. It is my sincere desire that the report issued by the Ukrainian Famine Commission will preserve the memory of those who died by giving this forgotten holocaust a secure place in history.

Despite the attempt of the Soviet Union to dominate the Ukraine their national spirit thrives. They are a people who are not willing to submit to their powerful adversary. We, as a Nation, must not forget our struggle for freedom and on this day of recognition let us rededicate ourselves to the cause of freedom as we support those who are now speaking out against oppression. I join my colleagues in praising the spirit of the Ukrainian people and speaking out against the deplorable human rights violations inflicted on these courageous people in their quest for freedom and human dignity.●

SALUTE TO A HERO

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, we so seldom hear of true heroes today that I am honored to share with you one from my home State of Idaho. Last November, Jay Sines rescued three people from a burning home, risking his own life twice.

Jay Sines heard Cindy Breithaupt's cries for help. Seeing the smoke from the fire which was engulfing her home, he instructed his wife to phone the fire department, then drove to the fire. Upon hearing that two children and a man were trapped inside, Jay climbed through a broken window to rescue them. Twenty-two-month-old Ryan grabbed him as he fumbled in the dense smoke, and Jay handed him safely out to his mother. He then found Leonard and attempted to help him out, but Leonard was trapped. Jay then climbed back outside to catch his breath.

Suddenly, Angela's cries stopped and her mother, Cindy, became hysterical. Jay climbed back inside, determined to save the child. This time, aided by a flashlight, he discovered Angela, and managed also to free Leonard, thus ensuring the safety of everyone involved.

Mr. President, I ask that an article from St. Maries Gazette Record detailing Jay Sines' heroic actions be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From St. Maries Gazette Record, Nov. 23, 1988]

JAY SINES RESCUES THREE IN TWO TRIPS INTO FIERY HOME

Leonard Thaut, his daughter, Angela, and son, Ryan, owe their lives to Jay Sines' interest in his dog.

After getting home from work early Saturday morning, Mr. Sines took his Samoyed puppy out to play. It was while he was outside that he heard Cindy Breithaupt's screams for help.

At approximately the same time Mr. Sines took his dog outside, Ms. Breithaupt woke up and discovered the fire that was engulfing the mobile home where she and Mr. Thaut lived with their children, Angela and Ryan.

Had Mr. Sines not been outside about 12:30 Saturday morning he may not have heard Cindy Breithaupt's screams for help as her mobile home burned with Mr. Thaut and her children trapped inside. The mobile home is several hundred yards from Mr. Sines' house.

Mr. Thaut and Ms. Breithaupt had been in bed less than 30 minutes when Ms. Breithaupt woke up and discovered the fire. Her screams woke Mr. Thaut.

"I sat up in my bed and all I could see were black clouds all over. I couldn't see an inch in front of my face," Ms. Breithaupt said.

Ryan Thaut, 22 months, was sleeping in the same bedroom with his parents. His sister, Angela, seven weeks old, was sleeping in her bedroom about ten feet away. According to Ms. Breithaupt, when Mr. Thaut woke up he ran to get Angela. While he was getting their daughter, Ms. Breithaupt used her fists to break the window in their bedroom.

"The smoke was so thick I could barely see the window," Ms. Breithaupt said. After she broke the window out she crawled through it expecting Mr. Thaut to hand her the children.

"I jumped out the window and waited for him to hand out the baby, but he never did," Ms. Breithaupt said.

SHE WAS UNABLE TO GET BACK INSIDE THE TRAILER

When Mr. Thaut did not come to the window with the children, Ms. Breithaupt tried to get back into the house. She was unable to pull herself back into the house because the window is more than 5½ ft. above the ground. Ms. Breithaupt said that is when she began screaming for help. It is probably those screams that Mr. Sines heard.

"At first I thought somebody was being attacked when I heard the screams, but when I looked up I saw the fire," Mr. Sines said.

Mr. Sines ran to his house and told his wife, Toni, to call the fire department. He ran back to his car, realized he didn't have his car keys, ran back to the house to get them and then back to his car again. Despite the distance and the slight delay, Mr. Sines was the first person on the scene.

"When I got there she (Ms. Breithaupt) was breaking windows with her bare hands," Mr. Sines said.

Understandably shaken, Ms. Breithaupts' account of what happened next isn't the same as Mr. Sines reported later. One thing she is certain of; when she told Mr. Sines her children and Mr. Thaut were trapped inside, he didn't hesitate before going into the smoke-filled trailer to save them.

"He didn't hesitate a second, he went right through the window into the trailer," Ms. Breithaupt said.

What seems to this point to be a movie script for an Indiana Jones movie departs drastically from what the usual Hollywood fare offers. Instead of facing a wall of flames with plenty of light and air, Mr. Sines said he was swallowed by darkness and suffocated by a wall of acrid smoke.

"The smoke was so thick you couldn't see anything. It practically knocked me down. Then the little boy grabbed me," Mr. Sines said.

BABY HIDDEN IN SMOKE; LEONARD WAS PINNED

After Mr. Sines handed Ryan out to his mother he got down on his hands and knees trying to find the baby.

"It was awful frustrating. I could hear the baby crying but I couldn't find it. I knew it was right in front of me but I couldn't find it . . . it was awful frustrating," Mr. Sines said.

After failing to find the baby, Mr. Sines attempted to lift Mr. Thaut out the window but was unable to move him. He said later he believed he was pinned under a chair so it was impossible to move him. Unable to move Mr. Thaut or find the baby and suffering from smoke inhalation, Mr. Sines climbed out the window to recover.

"The smoke is worse than you can ever imagine. It's pitch black, it's hot, the smell is so bad you can hardly stick your head in," Mr. Sines said.

But he did "stick his head in" a second time.

When Mr. Sines came out the window, a neighbor, Lester Opresik went into the trailer to save the baby and Mr. Thaut. The smoke drove him back.

That is when seven-week-old Angela did something that may have saved her life. She stopped crying. Ms. Breithaupt was convinced when her baby stopped crying that she had succumbed to the smoke.

"When she stopped crying I thought she had died, I got pretty excited," she said.

"When the baby quit crying and her mother got so hysterical, I went back in," Mr. Sines said.

Using a flashlight provided by a police officer at the scene, Mr. Sines was able to find the baby, which was wrapped in a blanket, probably by Mr. Thaut when he grabbed her out of her bed.

Mr. Sines said if Mr. Thaut had not have been able to get the baby to the window before he collapsed from the smoke, he would not have been able to save them.

"I got his upper body up on top of the cabinet then they held on to him while I got underneath and pushed him the rest of the way out," Mr. Sines said.

Mr. Sines followed him out and the danger of someone losing his life in the fire was over.

Mr. Sines, however, continued to help. After recuperating a second time, he moved Mr. Thaut's motorcycle and snowmobile away from the trailer so they wouldn't be destroyed in the fire.

LUNGS, EYES DAMAGED PROGNOSIS NOT CERTAIN

Mr. Thaut, who is 22, is in intensive care on a respirator at Sacred Heart hospital.

"I think they're still in doubt as to how much lung damage he has," Daryl Thaut, Mr. Thaut's father said. "Right now they're concerned with getting the oxygen level in his blood stabilized."

Mr. Thaut's eyes are also extremely sensitive to light, his father said.

"They say his retinas are burned, they don't know how severe that is yet," Daryl Thaut said. He said the damage to his eyes and his lungs was caused by the smoke.

Ryan and Angela were treated and released. Ms. Breithaupt has several stitches around her hand and wrist. She apparently cut herself breaking the bedroom window with her fists.

Daryl Thaut said this Thanksgiving means more to him than any other.

"Jay is the only reason my son and his family are alive today. He made this Thanksgiving for us. It's only through him that it is possible, really," he said.

Ms. Breithaupt said she has been overwhelmed with the concern shown by the community.

"Everyone has helped us so much. They've offered us everything we need, we really want to thank everyone," Ms. Breithaupt said. "Of course, we owe the world to Jay for what he did for us."

SALUTE TO A HERO

There are heroes and heroines among you. You know them, but you do not recognize them as such. Each day they go to work, do their job and, against tremendous odds and in horrible conditions, doggedly provide for their families, their children. They don't fuss or complain; they do their duty. They are heroes and heroines—the grind-it-out, wear-it-out kind.

There is another kind of hero—a kind we seldom meet or know—one who faces the ultimate test. It is not often that any of us, short of war and the battlefield, are asked to put our very lives on the line to help or to save another person. That is the ultimate heroism—to offer your own life to save that of another.

Last week in St. Maries, such a hero performed. Jay Sines offered to give his life to save the life of another. Not just once, but twice, he looked Death in the face, defied Death and saved another life.

Jay piled into a flaming mobile home through a broken window and rescued a child. He got out; got a breath and piled in again. He saved another child. He went back again—and saved a man's life. All through flame and smoke and confusion which would have scared most of us into fear-paralyzed immobility.

One does not often know an "ultimate" hero but here we have one.

All should stand in awe.—Robert Hammes●

COMMEMORATION OF THE MARIAN CATHOLIC HIGH SCHOOL MARCHING BAND

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, it gives me great honor to pay tribute to the members of the Marian Catholic High School Marching Band for their outstanding accomplishments in the realm of interschool competition. The Spartan Marching Band of Marian Catholic High, located in Chicago Heights, IL, has the distinction of reigning as the 1988 Grand National Champion of the nationwide competition sponsored by the Marching Bands of America [MBA] at the Silverdome in Pontiac, MI. This achievement alone would deserve our attention, but it is greatly accentuated by the fact that the Spartan Marching Band has been awarded this honor in 3 of the past 4 years.

This year's competiton in Pontiac, MI was attended by 54 bands from across the Nation. After 2 long days of displaying its talents to an audience of music enthusiasts, Marian High School defended its national champion status with the performance of a lifetime. The victory was made even sweeter by the Spartan's final score of 95.80 points, breaking the alltime record by 2.5 points!

Beyond this year's national competition, the Spartan Band has won the Illinois State Championship in its class for 5 of the past 6 years. Along with the Grand National Championship award, Marian Catholic High School received the trophy as "AA" division champions. First place achievement awards were presented to the band in several categories including: Best use of flags; best coordinated auxiliary; best winds section; and best overall general effect.

Under the direction of Greg Bimm, the assistant directorship of Bob Page, and the auxiliary coordination of Debbie Tulley, Marian Catholic High School Marching Band has provided spectacular entertainment, and has been a great source of pride to its community, the State of Illinois, and the Nation as a whole. All too often we forget the countless hours and the total dedication required to produce an impressive work of art. These talented young men and women who dedicate themselves to a skillfully coordinated and musically replete performance are nothing short of artists with a profound commitment to their craft.

Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will join me in congratulating the Marian Catholic High School Marching Band for its truly impressive and distinguished record of accomplishment, and in wishing the members and the leaders of the band our best for continued success in the years to come.●

FRANK BRUNEEL

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, Frank Bruneel is a successful businessman, husband, and father. The owner of 11 retail tire stores, 2 retread shops, and 1 main warehouse, Bruneel cares about small business and is the chairman of the Idaho Employers Council. He is also a strong member of the Lewiston community, having been a past member and chairman of both the Lewiston School Board and the Lewiston Planning and Zoning Committee.

Bruneel was born and raised in Boise, ID. He and his wife Sharon have 8 children and 13 grandchildren. After moving to Lewiston, he started his first business there in 1966. Bruneel is active in his chosen religion and has held leadership positions in his congregation.

I am proud to count Frank among my friends and was delighted to see the Lewiston Tribune run a feature article on Frank's accomplishments. This newspaper story highlights many of the reasons behind Frank's successes and I ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Lewiston Tribune, Oct. 16, 1988]

A DOZEN QUESTIONS FOR FRANK BRUNEEL, OWNER OF BRUNEEL TIRE & AUTO SERVICE CENTER

Full name: Frank C. Bruneel.

Birth date and place: May 4, 1935, Boise.

Marital status/family: Married: Sharon; eight children, Debra, Lezlie, Vanessa, Craig, Frank, Suzanne, Alison and Zachary.

Education: Graduated Boise Senior High School—1955.

Current employment: Bruneel Tire & Auto Service Center.

Residence: Lewiston.

Responsibilities: Maintain a stable business with satisfied customers and provide growth opportunities for our employees.

Hobbies/outside interests: Working outside at home, skiing, helping my kids achieve their goals.

Goals: Be a good husband and father and raise a family of self-reliant children. Keep in reasonably good physical condition.

Q. 1. Since you decided against trying for another term on the Lewiston School Board, have you considered running for any other elected office?

A. I may in the future, consider running for an office if I am qualified and can manage the time in my personal affairs to do so.

Q. 2. Recognizing that hindsight is always 20-20, would you have voted for or against the school board's decision to run the recent school levy as a permanent one?

A. I would have voted against the levy. I do not believe that the Legislature will have the incentive to fund education adequately as long as districts continue to "Band-aid" the funding process with increased taxes on property owners. I favor broadening of the existing sales tax to allow increased tourism and out-of-state money to help fund our education needs.

Q. 3. While you were serving on the school board, did you feel the Lewiston Tribune covered education at Lewiston fairly and completely?

A. Generally yes, but the Tribune appears to be harsh toward the school board and its position at times. Until you've sat in the seat you don't have full view of all the facts involved.

Q. 4. If your best friend were shopping for tires for his car, would you recommend retreads or new tires?

A. It would depend on which of my friends it is and his or her driving habits, type of vehicle and the funds available. I am a strong proponent of retreads.

Q. 5. Do you have any hidden talents?

A. I am a good cow milker.

Q. 6. In 1986, you were selected as Idaho's nominee for a national small business person's award. What kind of business motto do you work by that you can credit with your success at Bruneel Tires?

A. "We Go the Extra Mile." We hope we treat people honestly and fulfill a need they have, with service and products of value. A business transaction has to be good for both or all parties involved.

Q. 7. With stores in several towns, including a new one opened in the last couple of years at Pullman and the downtown Lewiston store's move to new quarters, Bruneel Tire seems to be enjoying a business boom. Is there any more expansion in store for the business in the next couple years?

A. Yes, we intend to grow in areas that we feel have potential for us and our people.

Q. 8. What are some of the best things about living in the Lewiston-Clarkston Valley?

A. The size of the community and geography of the area. It's great to go to the airport, barbershop, bank, Post Office, City Hall, shopping, doctor,—all within 10 minutes of home.

Q. 9. What are some of the worst things?

A. The political balance of the area. I'd like to see a more balanced party split. I don't believe we have the best or most responsive government when it is so one-sided, be it Republican or Democrat. A one-sided Republican county gets no better candidates than the way we are here. We need good capable leaders to manage our government today as much as ever.

Q. 10. As a former school board member, what do you think about non-traditional school years such as a year-round school year or alternate full days for kindergarteners?

A. I am not a big supporter of kindergarten although I think it is important to be available as a parental choice. I favor the present school year. As a parent, I want my kids to work for their own welfare and to have various work and education experiences. I feel that this can best be accomplished within the traditional school year. As parents, we need time to raise our kids ourselves, to teach them correct values and morals. That is our job—not the school's job.

Q. 11. Did you ever consider any such ideas for Lewiston?

A. No.

Q. 12. As a member of the Lewiston business community, do you agree or disagree with the programs of the Port City Action Corp. and the Main Street program?

A. They may be good for downtown—but time will tell. It is hard to make water run uphill. The downtown area has lost some opportunities in the past. I am not for propping up a plan with "free" tax dollars if the program will not carry itself. I would suggest pooling local funds to provide very low cost or no-charge rent to Fred Meyer or similar stores, and provide 500 car parking. Then all downtown benefits. The Anchor tenant would make money and so would the rest of town as property values would increase rather than decrease.●

COMMON SENSE AND SOUND ECONOMICS

● Mr. SIMON, Mr. President, during the time between our sine die adjournment and the beginning of this session, an article by Herbert Stein appeared in the New York Times that has a great deal of common sense to it and sound economics. I do not agree with every point in the article, particularly a movement at this time toward the value-added tax; but all of us ought to be able to agree to 90 percent of what he says.

I ask that Herbert Stein's article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

TAX THE RICH, THEY CONSUME TOO MUCH

(By Herbert Stein)

Congratulations. The American people have awarded you their highest honor. They have also placed in you their most sacred trust. I would like to offer you some suggestions on the most serious economic problems you will face in discharging your new responsibilities.

The country faces no immediate crisis. There is no need for you to rush a dramatic program into effect in your first 100 days. But the country does face major choices that will affect our security, our incomes and the quality of our lives for years to come. You should take the time to develop a philosophy, a stance, a set of priorities by which you can be guided not just for 100 days but for four years or more. You need to assess the state of the nation and make a candid evaluation of its assets and deficiencies.

STILL A RICH COUNTRY

The United States is a very rich country. On your Inauguration Day the gross national product will almost certainly be running at a rate in excess of $5 trillion a year. In real terms it will be twice as high as it was 23 years go. But we are not using that income well and not getting from it the things we should. Of course, even a rich country cannot do everything, and its natural that some desires are not met. That is not the problem. The problem is that some very important needs are not being met while less important ones are.

Four principal needs are not being adequately meet:

We are now spending about 6½ percent of the G.N.P. on defense. National discussion seems to have gravitated to agreement that defense spending should be held constant in real terms, which would reduce it to 5½ percent of GNP by 1993.

But the agreement to freeze defense spending is not based on any comprehensive, realistic evaluation of our national security situation. The agreement is based on the comfortable but surely false assumption that we "cannot afford" to do more.

In fact the most comprehensive recent review of our national security situation, the Report of the Commission on Integrated Long-Term Strategy, concluded that 3 percent annual growth in real defense expenditures would be required to permit us to "acquire the systems needed to maintain the current world posture, cope with some occassional new threats and retain some needed flexibility" and "also incorporate the capabilities called for" by this review.

Investment in the United States owned by Americans is now about 15 percent of G.N.P.—a much lower proportion than it was 10 or 15 years ago. Total investment in the United States is at a fairly high level, but much of this investment is owned, directly or indirectly, by foreigners. We are fortunate that the rest of the world wants to invest here and should do nothing to discourage the inflow of foreign capital. But that foreign capital will not yield future capital income to Americans. We are not making the same investment in the income of our children as our parents made in our income. That is especially worrisome because productivity has been growing less rapidly than it used to do. While we do not know the causes of this slowdown very well, we do know that one of the most reliable ways to accelerate the growth of the national income is to raise the rate of investment. The importance of speeding up the growth of national income is raised by the fact that we have to look forward to a time, not so far off when the national income will have to support a much larger number of retired people. The main reason for the low level of investment owned by Americans is that a large proportion of private saving is absorbed by the Federal budget deficit.

The proportion of the population with incomes below the official poverty line has leveled off at around 14 percent. That is higher than at any time in the 1970's, although lower than at the beginning of the 1960's.

The 14 percent figure is controversial, but there seems little doubt that the decline in the poverty ratio has at least slowed if not stopped. Also, there is no doubt that the proportion of children living in poverty is especially high, which has ominous implications for the future. The hope that the reduction of unemployment, and supply-side incentives, would soon result in a significant reduction in the poverty rate seems much less realistic today than it did eight years ago. Consumption by poor people, including their medical care, financed by their own earnings and from government assistance, amounts to about 2 or 3 percent of G.N.P.

EDUCATIONAL DEFICIENCIES

There is common agreement that the educational attainment of the American people, although possibly improving, is still in a miserable condition. Much concern with education today relates to its effects on economic productivity. That is important, but much more is involved. As Jefferson said, "Whoever expects to be ignorant and free, in a state of civilization, expects what never was and never will be."

We are in danger of becoming a nation of highly intelligent machines and highly ignorant people. The nation spends about 6½ percent of the G.N.P. on education. Our educational deficiencies are not entirely due to inadequate expenditures, but they will not be fixed without more expenditures.

These four areas—defense, investment, consumtpion by the poor and education—absorb about 30 percent of the G.N.P. To say that they are getting too small a share means that other areas, however worthwhile, are getting too much. Mainly this means that the consumption by people who are not poor, which absorbs about 55 percent of G.N.P.—and their medical care, which absorbs about 10 percent—are getting too much of the G.N.P. Per capita consumption of the non-poor has increased rapidly in the past decade—faster than output per capita—and cannot realistically be called inadequate. And the United States devotes more of its national income to health care than other industrial countries without getting superior results in health conditions as measured by longevity or illness.

NATIONAL OUTPUT

This points directly to what needs to be done. Some part of the national output needs to be diverted from the consumption and medical care of not-poor people to defense, investment, education and the incomes of the poor. But this also points directly to the difficulty. The people who have to make some sacrifice are the large majority of the voters. That is precisely why we have the present misallocation of the national output. It is politically attractive to support the consumption level of the vast majority of middle—and upper—income Americans by transfer payments, subsidies and tax relief at the expense of defense, investment, education and care for the poor.

A great deal was made of patriotism in the Presidential campaign. Now that you have been elected it is time to put some content into that word. It is time to ask the 86 percent of the American people who are not poor to give up some small part of the increase in their consumption in order to fortify the national security, to provide more adequately for the future growth of the national income, to improve the lot of the poor among us.

REDUCING CONSUMPTION

If you choose to follow this course you will need to find a way to reduce the growth of consumption by the non-poor. This means taxes and transfer payments and subsidies for the middle and upper income people. Mainly this means the middle-income people, because there are so many of them and their consumption is so large a part of the total. This taboo may be less rigid than it seems. After all, since the big tax cut of 1981, President Reagan has signed bills raising annual tax revenues by about $175 billion and has retained his enormous popularity and his reputation as a tax fighter. Perhaps it is not so much the taxes that people dislike as the talk about them. But still there are serious political risks and you will have to decide whether to lead the country or run for the next election.

TAX INCREASES

You should ask your Treasury, budget and economic officials to prepare a list of tax increases and expenditure cuts amounting to, say, $100 billion a year that in your opinion would have the least adverse economic effect. That will give you specific options to think about. Specificity is especially important in considering taxes. Thinking about taxes in general leads inevitably to the conclusion that raising taxes is economically harmful and counterproductive. But looking at specific taxes reveals that the harm to production and efficiency is not equal for all, that some would do little harm and that some would be beneficial.

I believe that the list would include the following, among other items: Increase of excises on alcohol, tobacco and gasoline; inclusion of half of Social Security benefits in taxable income; inclusion of fringe benefits, including medical care in taxable income; limitation of the deductibility of home mortgage interest; reduction or elimination of Medicare subsidies, and the reduction or elimination of farm subsidies.

You should not accept balancing the budget as the necessary or sufficient goal of budget policy. The goal for the deficit or surplus should be derived from the goal for investment. In my opinion the goal for the end of your first term should be not a balanced budget but a surplus.

Another way to look at the deficit-surplus issue is to recognize that by 1993 the Social Security trust funds will be running a surplus of about $100 billion a year. That is a rough indication of the amount that needs to be saved and invested to meet the future claims of retired people. But if the unified budget is balanced, the Social Security surplus is not being saved but is being used to finance the deficit in the rest of the Government. The existence of the Social Security surplus points to the need for a surplus in the unified budget.

These suggestions reflect my own priorities. I understand that upon reflection you may conclude that your priorities are different. That is a matter of values and judgments to which no precise and conclusive answer can be given. What is undeniable is that the Federal Government exerts a major influence on the "grand" divisions of the national output. The future of the nation depends on how the Government exercises that influence.

GOVERNMENT'S ROLE

Sixty years ago, in the time of Calvin Coolidge, the Federal Government spent about 3 percent of the G.N.P. In the past 25 years or so we have entered a new era, in which the Federal Government has a critical role in the allocation of the entire national output. It is now spending about 25 percent of the G.N.P., but its influence extends far beyond its own expenditures. Its budget deficit or surplus has a dominant effect on the amount of private investment. Its taxes and regulations strongly affect the amount and character of private consumption and production.

We can argue about whether this influence of the government should be a little larger or a little smaller. It is never going back to being as small as it was even 25 years ago. It falls to you to be the first President to recognize this role explicitly and deal with it systematically.●

911 DISPATCHER'S COOL HELPS RESCUE BABY

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, 911 is a valuable emergency telephone service that most of us have at our disposal. The value of this service recently became very clear to John and Karen Thompson, whose newborn son stopped breathing.

Les Gholson, with the Ada County, Idaho, Sheriff's Department, took the Thompson's emergency call. Less directed John and Karen through the steps of cardiopulmonary resuscitation for an infant, and the baby was breathing by the time paramedics arrived.

Les, through her calm and professional manner, was instrumental in saving this baby's life. She is one of the many unsung heros who are there when we need them.

The story of Les Gholson's lifesaving efforts was highlighted in an article in the Idaho Statesman, which I ask be printed in the RECORD.

[From the Idaho Statesman, Jan. 4, 1989]

DISPATCHER'S COOL HELPS RESCUE BABY

(By Julie Stutts)

Les Gholson said she was just doing her job.

When John and Karen Thompson called 911 to say their baby, who had just been born at home, wasn't breathing, Gholson went to work.

A dispatcher for the Ada County Sheriff's Department, Gholson had Mr. Thompson administer CPR to their newborn son within seconds after he called and minutes before paramedics could arrive.

Tuesday night, the infant was reported in critical condition in the neonatal unit at St. Luke's Regional Medical Center. A hospital spokesman said the Thompsons did not wish to talk about the ordeal.

"The job the dispatchers did was excellent," said Darby Weston, an intensive-care paramedic. "That did as much to save the baby's life as anything that was done."

The baby was born Monday at the home of Thompson's parents in Garden City. A few minutes later, at 12:58 p.m., Thompson called 911.

Told the baby wasn't breathing, Gholson's co-worker, Lindy McPherson, dispatched an ambulance. Then Gholson instructed the couple in cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

"One breath of air and five compressions," she said. "Make sure the head's tilted back a little bit. Now when he does that air, can you see the chest rise?"

Replied Mrs. Thompson: "Yes the chest rose. He (Mr. Thompson, performing CPR) said the chest is moving up and down. He says it's not breathing but it's got a heartbeat."

Gholson reassured her. "OK, we just want to make sure we keep getting air into it. The best thing for you to do is relax as much as you can, help is coming. One breath of air and five compressions."

Gholson said Tuesday she has learned to expect the unexpected in her job.

"I don't know how I kept my voice so calm," said Gholson, a dispatcher for seven years. "My heart was racing 100 mph."

Paramedic Weston said the Thompsons were "just people in a bad situation having a home delivery and things didn't go right."

While the baby was being taken to the hospital, another ambulance was called to take Mrs. Thompson to the hospital, where she was treated and released.

Both paramedics and dispatchers agree that emergencies carry even more stress when they involve children.

"A brand-new baby that's dying is about as much stress as there is," Weston said. "Calls like that are either the ultimate devastation or the ultimate reward. This call worked out; the baby is doing much better."●

ENTREPRENEURIAL SPIRIT OF IDAHO'S JOSE VALDEZ

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, the entrepreneurial spirit is alive and well in Idaho. There are many examples of people who have struck out on their own and done well in business, and the success of a man from my home State of Idaho, Mr. Jose Valdez, is a classic case.

Jose has a family tortilla business, and after 14 years has made his first million. Jose Valdez scrimped and saved. With a $3,000 bank loan and a desire to succeed, Jose has gone out and done just that, succeed.

Jose knew what he wanted to do. He had a dream. He worked hard and he saved. Jose Valdez is proof that Americans can and will continue to succeed as long as we nourish the free enterprise system that allows them to make their dreams come true.

The story of Jose Valdez's success was highlighted in an article from the Idaho Statesman. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

FORMER FARM HAND MAKES $1 MILLION IN TORTILLA BUSINESS

(By Sue Ann Tanzer Roberts)

Fourteen years ago, Jose Valdez, a Wilder hops farm hand, told local bankers he needed $8,000 to start a tortilla business.

Valdez had no capital, a seventh-grade education and had never made a tortilla.

They turned him down.

He put his dream on hold for three years, keeping his job on the farm, scrupulously saving and gradually buying equipment for his tortilla factory. Using his equipment as collateral, Valdez was finally able to secure a $3,000 loan for his first truckload of corn.

Jose Valdez's Casa Valdez corn and flour tortillas just broke the $1 million sales mark this year. Caldwell's Rotary Club has awarded him the prestigious Dave Johnson Rotary Award for "excellence in business and community development."

"I already have plans to throw a party. We could have done it (made a million) years back, but I might not have survived.

"I've taken it step by step. As the years have gone by, I have tried to do what I could handle without too much outside help," says Valdez against the din of whirring stainless steel tortilla making machines.

Not much outside help has meant strong support from his wife, Maria, and four children, all of whom have worked at the plant, son, Joe Jr., 23, as production manager, son Jaime, 20 as stone grinder and apprentice.

Jesse, 14, sweeps the floor, and Jorge, 9, "just comes over and asks for money," Papa Valdez says with a smile. Marie and daughter-in-law Patricia keep the books.

The patriarch's first recollection of tortillas is at age 8 when his family, living in an Edinburg, Texas barrio, fell on hard times.

His father, a bricklayer, couldn't find work.

Every day at noon, Valdez's mother, who had five children, would grind corn on a charcoal grey stone, cook it and ship up a batch of hot tortillas to fill two baskets.

"I went around the neighborhood with a basket selling them to our neighbors for a nickel," the now 44-year entrepreneur recalls.

"I remember my mom cooking the corn in a pail then making the tortillas. She'd make them every day," he says.

Valdez never helped her make the bread substitute, but he knew a good tortilla when he tasted one. And he still has the grinding stones, passed down three generations, in the front office.

After taking migrant worker jobs in Texas, Idaho and Arizona, Valdez ended up back in the Wilder and Caldwell area picking beets, wheat and onions. For 13 years he ran a crew at Ray Obendorf's hops field in Wilder. He trained himself in every aspect of the work so he could run a similar field someday.

"That helped me a lot in the sense that I started to learn how to communicate with and work with people," Valdez recalls.

But Valdez always had a dream bigger than field work.

He had several friends in the tortilla business and knew this is what he wanted to do. He visited their factories in California and decided he could do it as well, if not better.

From the day he opened his doors for business in 1977 in a converted upholstery business at the corner of Chicago and 5th Streets in Caldwell until today, Valdez's business has steadily increased.

In 1977, he processed 300 pounds of corn every other day, yielding 548 dozen tortillas. "When I first started, I hardly had any competition. There was a market for it. We didn't know too much about marketing. We did know that the best thing to do was to start selling tortillas."

He opened the present 80x80-foot beige cinderblock factory and small retail Mexican food outlet adjacent to it about four years later and today about 8,100 dozen corn tortillas and 4,500 dozen flour tortillas roll off the yards of conveyor belts nine hours a day with the help of 18 workers.

Casa Valdez tortillas are shipped to Albertson's, Smith's Food King, M&W, Paul's and most independent groceries in the Treasure Valley, Magic Valley, Eastern Oregon and Idaho Falls.

His tortillas also are eaten by patrons of restaurants like Acapulco in Boise, Charro and El Rinconcito in Nampa and Maria's and Si Bueno in McCall.

Soon, Valdez will expand into the Salt Lake City area, possibly building a tortilleria there.

"There's a good market for tortillas. Mexican food is popular everywhere. Anyone can fix up a dish. It's inexpensive, and it tastes good," says Valdez, supervising son Jaime as he carefully regrooves the grinding surface of a large lava stone used to grind corn.

"It's a touchy business. You've got to have everything right—the oven temperature, the stones . . ." Valdez says.

Valdez has his eye on two markets: the Mexican Market, those who use tortillas instead of silverware, he says, and the Anglo-American Market, where his product is used in other ways.

"The housewife is so creative that she likes to experiment with a tortilla. She'll think about what she likes and puts a tortilla with it," he says.

After 11 years, Valdez will soon offer a new product, tortilla chips, how restaurants already are processing his extra thin corn tortillas.

"I never thought I was going to get this far. It's been a lot of hard work, but it's paid off. Long hours don't bother me. It's a challenge," says the 44-year-old entrepreneur.●

LBO'S AND THE CAPITAL GAINS SOLUTION

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I would like to share an article by my good friend Edson Spencer, the former chairman of Honeywell, which appeared in the Wall Street Journal. I think my colleagues—many of whom have expressed genuine concern about corporate takeovers and leveraged buyouts—will find it of interest.

As my colleagues will recall, the tax code used to allow a 60-percent exclusion for capital gains. After tax reform, capital gains are treated no differently for tax purposes than ordinary income. Any incentive to make long-term investments was eliminated from the code.

As Mr. Spencer points out, the value of some American companies are currently being based, not on their long-term potential and ability to weather business cycles, but rather on their current market price. The use of leveraged buyouts can result in heavily indebted companies.

The best solution to this problem may be quite simple: Promote long-term investment and planning by reducing the capital gains tax. Mr. Spencer supports a proposal which may be one way a capital gains cut could be accomplished. He proposes that marginal tax rates on short-term capital gains be increased as the price for enacting a reduction in long-term capital gains rates.

I have long advocated a capital gains differential which encourages long-term investment and recognizes the risks taken and sacrifices made, by small businesses, farmers, and entrepreneurs. In fact, my bill, S. 444, which I will be introducing shortly, embodies the graduated rate approach. Further, as a founder of the capital gains coalition here in Congress, I am anxious to hear debate on alternative approaches to reducing the capital gains tax. I recommend Mr. Spencer's comments to my colleagues as an interesting approach to an important issue.

Mr. President, I ask that Mr. Spencer's article, "Capital-Gains Shift Could Curb LBO Break-Ups" be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

CAPITAL-GAINS SHIFT COULD CURB LBO BREAK-UPS

(By Edson W. Spencer)

Takeovers are hurting the international competitiveness of American business. Hostile attacks on well-managed companies and the overloading of balance sheets with high-cost debt are weakening U.S. companies and playing into the hands of foreign competitors.

The market may no longer be the best measure of the value of a company. Now Wall Street forecasts break up values to show that companies should be bought by takeover artists and then split into pieces to maximize short-term shareholder gains.

Such break-up scenarios ignore the benefits to shareholders that management has developed over a long period to obtain the synergies from related businesses, not all of which increase earnings at the same time. It ignores the advantages of building a portfolio of businesses that can benefit shareholders over different phases of the business cycle. It ignores new evidence from some LBO's where the crown jewels can be sold at a preminum but the cats and dogs remain to lower the total return on the deal. It ignores the rising number of highly leveraged companies whose debt and the interest charges drive the company toward insolvency. It ignores the impact of junk-bond interest rates on long-term bond holders.

A more serious problem is the limited amount of equity the deal makers put in relative to the high-leverage, high-interest debt left for the surviving company to pay off. Good divisions are sold, generally to competitors. Long-range expenses for marketing, manufacturing efficiencies and research and development are cut. Interest charges eat into profits. The company's ability to compete is severely weakened.

Foreign competitors of U.S. companies are the real beneficiaries of the weakening of corporate America. This is particularly true in the case of Japan and the emerging Asian industrial powers, but it also applies to some extent to West Germany and other European countries. While many companies in those countries also are highly leveraged, they have stable shareholders, strong bank support and use leverage as a lower cost of capital than equity in the expansion of the business.

In those countries, large blocks of shares are held by banks and sister companies interested in long-term gowth of the company rather than in short-term enhancement of share value. There is very limited quarterly-earnings pressure from pension and endowment funds unlike the U.S. where comparisons of the quarterly performance of pension portfolios with peers is the accepted measurement of fund performance.

Accounting rules and practices in other countries favor conservative reserves and high cash flows, while keeping taxes and profits lower than is expected of American managers. This enables foreign competitors to place less emphasis on short-term earnings and more on investments in research and development and in building market share.

Ask a Japanese CEO to rate his stakeholders and he will put his employees first, his customers second and his shareholders third. In contrast, U.S. takover law says that if a business is to be sold, the board's job is to get the highest price, regardless of the effect on employees and customers, or on the communities affected by the sale of a company.

At last Congress appreciates the problem and is discussing remedies, albeit not very good ones. Trying to lower the cost of equity relative to debt by making dividends tax deductible rather than taxing them twice is fine in principle but would result in a huge revenue loss for the Treasury. Imposing a threshold interest rate beyond which junk bonds would pay a penalty is an unnecessary intrusion of regulation and could penalize occasional legitimate users of high-cost debt.

President Bush should expand on an idea from Candidate Bush, and ask Congress to pass a new capital-gains tax. Assets held 12 months or less would be subjected to a short-term capital gains tax of 50%. Assets held one to two years would pay a 30% rate. Assets held two of five years would pay 15%, and assets held more than five years, nothing. The tax should apply equally to pension funds and other non-profits. It would apply to foreign shareholders.

There are many advantages. First the tax could be constructed to be at least revenue neutral, if not revenue positive. Second, it penalizes speculators and arbitrageurs by making takeovers more expensive. Third, it benefits the farmer, the small businessman and the entrepreneur who have built their enterprise over a long period of time from small beginnings to businesses that can be sold at a good capital gain. Finally, a balance will be restored between short- and long-term investments and the decision process that strengthens the future of a competitive America by enabling the owner-share-holder to shift his attention, and that of management, to long-term rewards. This may not completely level the playing field, but it is a shift that will help our international competitiveness.

Management is pressured to make the wrong decisions for short-term reasons.

President Bush needs to introduce a capital-gains tax bill that will turn our attention to building the long-term competitive strengths of America.●

MEL RICHARDSON

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, today, I would like to honor an outstanding Idaho citizen. Mel Richardson has been a political and business leader in southeastern Idaho for 30 years.

Mel concluded his long career with KID radio and TV 2 years ago when he unsucessfully ran for a seat in the U.S. Congress. Now, Mel is heading to Boise as the district 32 State congressmen.

During his career with KID, he interviewed many influential people including Ronald Reagan. Even with this demanding work schedule, he has always found the time to serve his church and his community exceptionally well. In 1966, he became the first mayor of Ammon, ID, currently serves on several community service committees, and has held many administrative positions in his church.

Mr. President, I ask that an article from Idaho Today, in which Mel Richardson's story was illustrated, be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

MEL RICHARDSON THEN AND NOW

(By Kent Baum)

You've just walked into a Southeast Idaho restaurant. Heads turn and the crowd is stirring. Someone recognizable just walked in. Someone that east Idahoans have come to know for 30 years in the forefront of the public eye.

Chances are it's Mel Richardson. In Southeast Idaho, few people have been as noticeable from the Pocatello to Island Park stretch as Richardson.

His warm features and that voice . . . you know that voice, "the Voice of the Vikings, this is KID's 30 minutes, Let's Go Fishing." Mel Richardson's unique style worked in harmony with Southeast Idaho and its residents in a way that put the listener at ease. "Uncle Mel" was the guy that everybody wanted to just sit down and shoot the breeze with.

Today, Mel is a man in transition. After completing a long and distinguished career as the man behind the mike with KID radio and in front of the camera with KID TV, he hoped to cap his public life with the title of U.S. Congressman. A little over two years ago Mel Richardson fell just short of defeating Richard Stallings, the incumbent Democrat from Rexburg.

"The undecided made the difference," said Richardson in retrospect. "Stallings was the incumbent. The undecided usually votes for the man in the office."

Today, Mel is headed once again for legislative aspirations. This time successful, Richardson is the District 32 State Congressman. "While Boise isn't Washington D.C. and the pay isn't as good," reminds Richardson. It signals the rebirth of his presence before the public. Something that started in Idaho in 1958.

Born in Salt Lake City and raised in that area, Richardson pursued the communication field by entering and graduating from a radio school in Burbank, California in 1952.

"I had many job offers to work for larger stations but was told that I should start out with the smallest station I could find," says Richardson. "I started working for a station in Brigham City, Utah." It was there that Richardson became a "jack of all trades" while working as a program director, sports director and as Richardson notes. "I even had to sweep the floors and do anything else that came with the job."

Then Richardson got an opportunity to manage the radio station KLGN in Logan, Utah.

After two to three years of working at KLGN, Richardson found an opportunity to work in television. In 1958, he had an offer to work at a station in Billings, Montana.

Mel and his wife Dixie decided to go up and check out Billings and the station. On their way the Richardsons passed through Idaho Falls. Both took a liking to and decided to check out the local station KID about any job openings.

"They had an opening for me but the pay was not as good as what I would have wished," says Richardson. "After we got up to Billings we liked it, but when we went back home to make our decision we were attracted to Idaho Falls even more when we passed thru it. We stopped into KID again and this time they offered me even more money to work for them. I took that opportunity and that's where we have been for the past 30 years."

Mel and Dixie found a home with KID and Idaho Falls. "We loved the people here," says Richardson. "I loved KID, it was a great organization to work for."

In those 30 years Richardson had many opportunities to leave KID and Idaho Falls for the bright lights of Los Angeles, Seattle, Salt Lake City, etc.

He even had the opportunity to join a radio state in Minneapolis, Minnesota to broadcast the NFL Minnesota Vikings' game of the week. But he and his wife were contented to stay and raise a family in a community the size of Idaho Falls.

"We thought and evaluated the situation (moving) and felt that, everything that we wanted was right here and 30 years later we're still here and we haven't regretted it one bit."

Richardson reflects on many of his friends in media that made different decisions. "They'd say, 'Hey Mel, you got to go with us, we are going to move on to such and such a city' but after a few years they've come back, telling me that I did the right thing by staying here and that it was a dog eat dog world out there and that it wasn't as enjoyable as it was here."

As a sportcaster and Sports Director for KID Radio's AM and FM stations, Mel has been well known throughout eastern Idaho. He has been named "Voice of the Vikings" and was Ricks College's sportscaster for many years. In 1980 Richardson was named "Man of the Year" by Ricks College. He has also broadcasted games for Idaho Falls. Boise State and Utah State Universities as well as many local high school athletic events.

Those opportunities and others have afforded Richardson a chance to meet and interview many famous sports personalities like NBA's Danny Ainge, guard for the Boston Celtics, NFL quarterbacks Danny White of the Dallas Cowboys, Steve Young of the San Francisco 49ers, Robbie Bosco formerly of the Green Bay Packers now an assistant coach of Idaho State University, Gifford Nielson former quarterback of the Houston Oilers, former defensive linemen Rosie Grier, Merlin and Phil Olsen of the Los Angeles Rams, Jason Buck defensive end for the Cincinnati Bengals, Harmon Killibrew of the Minnesota Twins, Dale Murphy of the Atlanta Braves, BYU football coach LaVell Edwards, basketball coaches Ladell Anderson of BYU, and Bobby Knight of Indiana.

Richardson has hosted many of Southeast Idaho's prominent radio and television programs like KID's 30 Minutes, Mel's Sports Scene, Lets Go Fishing, Channel 3 Reports and Probes.

But it hasn't been sports alone that has given Richardson a rather famous circle of acquaintances. Richardson got involved in a program called the "Public Affairs Director" and which gave him the opportunity to interview many famous people. People like President Elect George Bush, Former U.S. Presidents, Harry S. Truman and Gerald Ford, Secretary of State Alexander Haig, Pat Boone, Senator Robert Dole, Lowell Thomas, Jack Klugman, David Kennedy, former cabinet member under President Nixon, Utah Senator Orin Hatch, Keith Nyborg, Ambassador to Finland, Mrs. Richard (Pat) Nixon, all of Idaho's Senators, Governors, and Congressmen that were in office in recent years. And during his own congressional campaign Richardson met briefly with President Ronald Reagan in Washington, D.C.

Richardson not only interviewed the elite of society but he has also talked with the seamier side of our culture. He has visited with drug pushers, terrorists and a frightening and graphic interview with a Black Panther leader.

"A most interesting interview of how that leader spent time with Fidel Castro in Cuba learning on how to become a terrorist and come into the United States to set up bases in the Intermountain West," says Richardson. "He began seeing what their government (Cuba) was doing and how they were treating the prisoners in their prisons. So he left Cuba and traveled all over visiting the different governments of the world and how they operated."

Outside of broadcasting Richardson has been involved in many community, church, and public services. Richardson became the first mayor of the City of Ammon, 1966–1969. He has served several years as the State director for the Heisman Trophy. Richardson is currently a member of the Idaho Centennial Committee, Director for the Bonneville Crime Stoppers, Member of the Board of Directors of the Idaho Falls Child Development Center, Commissioner of the Bonneville County Parks and Recreation Commission, Member of the Governor's on Children and many others.

He has served in many administrative positions in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for the past 30 years.

Mel's wife Dixie, has also been involved in the Idaho scene. She has helped her husband on the campaign trail, been involved with community, church and professional activities, as well as raising a family of five. Currently, she is a staff assistant and Idaho Falls office manager for U.S. Senator Steve Symms.

After years of asking politicians the questions as a journalist. Why did the Richardsons decide to sit on the other side of the Table? "Becoming Mayor of Ammon got me interested in politics," Richardson says.

This company has been marketing the "Easy Vend" candy machines nationally and has generated over a half a million dollars in sales in its first year. They have also been helping other businesses develop their inventions and have been looking at some "fast food" products to market.

Richardson is also the president and owner of another company called "Ameri-Tech" which markets the new "foil" type of insulation called "Radiant Barrier" for homes and businesses.

"It is an exciting new product," says Richardson. "Radiant Barrier is a special foil developed by NASA, that reflects radiant heat. It is good in the summer in that it reflects the unwanted heat away and yet during the winter it reflects the inside heat back in." The 7R group has also been looking at a similar product that has an actual "R" value of insulation.

"The best thing about this marketing company is the ability for me to work with my four sons," says Richardson. "I guess that is the dream of a lot of dads wish to be in. We have gotten along well and it has been a great experience working with them."

Outside of his business endeavors, Richardson is still doing some broadcasting work in his spare time.

About working as a state congressman, Richardson commented: "I'm really excited to go to the Idaho State Legislature in Boise coming this January 8th. I'm impressed with the caliber of people serving in the Legislature. They're not in it for the money nor are they in it for personal gain. They are service minded and are giving of their time."

What is in Richardsons future? Besides heading off to Boise, he has been asked to become a motivational speaker for businesses, banquets, seminars, etc. "That appeals to me. We are trying to develop our company (7R) so that my boys can be involved in it and at the same time I can have time to do the speaking engagements."

"I'm upbeat of what is happening in Idaho," says Richardson. "There is going to be more money in the (state of Idaho) budget this year because of the increased business in this state. There is a good feeling across the nation about our economy and as we put these things together, there is an exciting future for the businessman."

From broadcasting to business, from politics to church work. Richardson is a man who's dared to dream big with accomplishments to show.●

KENTUCKY VIETNAM-ERA VETERANS' BONUS PAYMENTS

● Mr. FORD. Mr. President, on December 9, 1988, the Kentucky General Assembly adopted a resolution urging the U.S. Congress to amend current law to remove the offset provisions of veterans' benefits affecting the Kentucky Vietnam-era veterans' bonus payments. I submit the resolution in its entirety for my colleagues consideration.

The resolution follows:

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION No. 7

Whereas, the Commonwealth of Kentucky has enacted a Vietnam-era veterans' bonus as a token of appreciation for service by its men and women in defense of this great country; and

Whereas, in 1979, the United States Congress enacted into law P.L. 95-588, provisions of which will have the effect of offsetting, on a dollar for dollar basis, the bonuses of some 350 Kentucky veterans who are receiving disability payments for a non-service-connected disability and the bonuses of an additional 350 widows/widowers thereof; and

Whereas, similar veterans' bonuses paid previously by other states were exempted from these offset provisions by virtue of specific language which appeared in all pre-1979 veterans' benefit law: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, the House of Representatives concurring therein:

SECTION 1. The Kentucky General Assembly hereby urges the United States Congress to amend 92 Stat. 2497 with all due promptness to exempt all veterans' bonus payments made by states from these offset provisions.

SEC. 2. The Kentucky General Assembly further orders that a copy of this concurrent resolution be delivered forthwith to each member of the Kentucky Congressional delegation.●

RECOGNITION OF THE LIFETIME ACHIEVEMENTS OF DR. RALPH A. TESSENEER

● Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of one of Kentucky's foremost educators at the close of his career. Dr. Ralph A. Tesseneer has been associated with Northern Kentucky University [NKU] in various capacities for nearly 20 years. For many of us, it is difficult to think of NKU without thinking of Ralph.

At the end of my remarks, I will insert an excellent article which appeared in the Kentucky Post on January 25, 1989, describing Ralph Tesseneer's many achievements. However, a few points bear emphasis at the outset.

Ralph served as acting president of what was then known as the Northern Kentucky State College from 1975 to 1978, a period which witnessed the school's expansion into full university status. Most recently, I have had the pleasure to work with Ralph in his capacity as special assistant to the president and liaison for Federal-State legislation. Ralph has served NKU with great distinction over the decades, and will be sorely missed.

Mr. President, I now ask that the Kentucky Post article be made a part of the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Kentucky Post, Jan. 25, 1989]

NKU's TESSENEER TO CLOSE LONG CAREER

(By Connie Remlinger)

Dr. Ralph Tesseneer, who has been associated with Northern Kentucky University for nearly 20 years and once served as acting president, is retiring effective May 1.

Tesseneer was to announce his retirement today at the university's board of regents meeting.

Tesseneer, who will be 65 on April 23, has discussed his retirement with several people: "I thought if I talk about it with enough people, I wouldn't change my mind. Ordinarily we go until we are 70 years old, but I knew if I waited until then, I wouldn't do anything but retire."

Tesseneer said he plans to go into public relations.

He came to Northern in 1970 when it was known as Northern Kentucky State College and was off Dixie Highway in Covington. The current campus is in Highland Heights.

"The school was not very big then. We had a lot of fun on that campus," said Tesseneer, who was then vice president for academic affairs and dean of the college.

Tesseneer served as acting president from 1973 until 1976 after President Frank Steely left the position amid controversy.

That period was the high point of Tesseneer's career.

"That's the year we got university status and funding for the administration and business and education buildings," he said.

Tesseneer, a native of Russellville, Ala., received his undergraduate degree from Tufts University, Medford, Mass., and his master's degree from Peabody College of Vanderbilt University, in Nashville, Tenn.

He received his doctorate degree from Louisiana State University. Tesseneer was director of the extension services at Murray State in Murray, Ky., before he came to Northern.

At Northern, Tesseneer was special assistant to the president and president of the Northern Kentucky University Foundation from July 1, 1976, to August 1, 1987.

When Tesseneer stepped down as chairman of the foundation, a road leading to the foundation's Research Park was renamed Tesseneer Drive. The honor was in recognition for Tesseneer's dedication to the development of the Research Park and his service to the foundation.

Most recently he has served as legislative liaison for Northern and special assistant to President Leon Boothe.

Said Boothe, "Dr. Tesseneer has been one of the cornerstones of the university in coming in 1970 and in having served in so many important and diverse roles.

"He's been a pillar of the community as well as the university. While we will miss him personally and professionally, we wish him the best as he embarks on a new phase of his life."●

SEVENTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE OF THE UKRAINE

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, last week marked the 71st anniversary of the declaration of independence of the Ukraine. On January 22, 1918, the Irainian Central Council declared its unconditional independence, and proclaimed the establishment of a Ukrainian National Republic. This momentous event marked the third time that Ukrainians had achieved self determination over a period dating back to the ninth century.

The spirit of independence that has survived long periods of foreign domination over the past eight centuries lives on today in the Ukraine, and in Ukrainian communities around the world. Ukrainian language, culture, and political organization attest to the durability of Ukrainians as a people—even as they have suffered under nearly 70 years of Soviet domination. Ukrainians cannot use their native language today in schools or to transact business; Ukrainian culture is muted by the homogenizing strictures of Soviet society; and the Ukrainian people continue to have their futures determined for them by commissars and bureaucrats in Moscow.

The real proof of glasnost will come when Ukrainians and the other subjugated Soviet republics receive the self-determination and independence to which they are entitled.

On this anniversary, Ukrainians dearly appreciate the value of independence.

Mr. President, I am proud to represent one of the most active communities of Ukrainian-Americans in our country. Ukrainians have built active cultural and religious organizations in Ohio, while making a tremendous contribution of their talent and energy to our great State. As is the case with all American immigrant communities, the preservation if Ukrainian heritage enriches our entire Nation every day.

Mr. President, on this anniversary of freedom, I salute the Ukrainians of Ohio and around the world. I know that the fortitude which has preserved them over a millennium will make them thrive long into the future.●

ANNIVERSARY OF UKRAINE'S DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, on January 22, 1989, the people of the Ukraine and Ukrainian Americans celebrated the 71st anniversary of Ukraine's Declaration of Independence and the 70th anniversary of the Unification of the Western Ukrainian National Republic with the Ukrainian National Republic. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Ukrainians wherever they may be on this occasion.

On November 7, 1917, the Ukrainian Central Rada issued the Third Universal announcing the creation of a sovereign Ukrainian state. It outlined the rights of all Ukrainian citizens including the freedom of speech, press, religion, assembly, and minorities, the same freedoms as found in the Bill of Rights. Within 4 weeks of the Central Rada's proclamation of the Third Universal, the Bolshevik-controlled Moscow Council for People's Commissars declared war on the Ukraine National Republic. In response the Central Rada on January 22, 1918, issued the Fourth Universal, an unconditional Declaration of Independence for Ukraine.

Three years of war and terror followed which resulted in the loss of those freedoms. After 1920, an independent Ukrainian National Republic ceased to exist.

Since that time, Moscow has tightened control to suppress the spread of nationalism and the outlawed Ukrainian Catholic Church. The repression of demonstrations has been especially harsh in the Ukraine, where party officials have tried to break up the Popular Front and other democratic groups.

The present situation in the Ukraine must improve. It is one of several important tests of Mr. Gorbachev's glasnost and his declared policy of greater freedom for all Soviet citizens.

On this occasion I would like to express my hope and concern that in the near future the Ukrainian people will be permitted to express their religious and political views openly and without fear.●

CABINET-LEVEL DEPARTMENT FOR EPA

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support for S. 276, a bill to raise the status of the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] to a Cabinet-level department.

Perhaps more than any other Federal agency, EPA bears responsibility for protecting and improving the quality of life of every American citizen. Since its creation in 1970, when EPA dealt with such pressing national issues as raw sewage and industrial wastes in our rivers and lakes, the number and significance of environmental problems has grown significantly. EPA's domestic regulatory efforts range from controlling the content of household cleaning fluids to automobile emission standards, to chemical and powerplant waste management.

On the basis of the range and complexity of these national issues alone, EPA warrants Cabinet-level status, so that environmental concerns will be placed directly before the President of the United States.

There is an established tie between the health of our environment and the health of our citizens, Mr. President. If CFC's are not regulated, for example, and there is even a modest growth in their use, EPA estimates that over the next four generations of Americans, the resultant depletion of the ozone layer will cause 153 million cases of skin cancer, over 3 million deaths, and over 18 million cases of cataracts.

A comparably alarming statistic is the effect of lead in our air and drinking water. Despite a 94-percent reduction in lead air emissions over the last decade, the Public Health Service estimates that almost one in five of urban preschool children have high levels of lead in their blood, which causes lower IQ's and developmental problems. EPA estimates that over 42 million Americans have excess lead in their drinking water, causing hypertension among 130,000 middle-aged men, lowering the intelligence of 240,000 children and increasing the risk of miscarriage and problem pregnancies among 680,000 women.

Obviously, an efficient, effective EPA can mean the difference in life and death. Yet the agency too often finds its perogatives given a low priority by others. In Pennsylvania, for example, the Army used property it later sold to Fairview Township in York County to landfill a wide variety of substances—including hazardous ones. The Army failed to inform the EPA or local officials of the potential danger, and for 7 years Marsh Run Park was used by 600 children as a soccer field. When EPA finally was apprised of the danger, it withheld the information from the public.

It is hard to avoid drawing the inference that EPA was at best going along to get along with the Secretary of Defense, and at worst, intimidated by the Cabinet ranked department. Equal status could prevent future Marsh Runs.

Mr. President, the EPA's role as environmental watchdog has expanded in another critical direction over the past 18 years. Issues like global warming, ozone depletion, biological diversity, or pesticide-contamination in the food chain are international issues requiring Presidential commitment and involvement that can be supported only by a Cabinet-level Department of Environmental Protection. For example, felling virgin forests in the Amazon ultimately can hurt farmers in my home State of Pennsylvania and throughout America. With only agency status behind it, the EPA can do little more than point a warning finger; with a Cabinet position, it could shake a Federal stick in international negotiations on global warming.

The EPA deserves credit for almost two decades of progress in cleaning up our environment. Despite substantial growth in our economy and the number of automobiles, air and water pollution are down an average of 40 percent since 1970. For example, industrial water pollutants have decreased by roughly 70 percent.

What is frightening, Mr. President, is the changing nature of the enemy in our battle for the environment. It is now international in scope and more subtle in substance. Ten years ago we fought uncontrolled air pollution that made people sick and darkened noontime skies. Today, we face threats we cannot see, smell, nor in some circumstances, abate or mitigate, especially without full national and international cooperation. We cannot see the depletion of the ozone layer or the buildup of toxics in the food chain, for example. Yet these silent killers stalk every nation on Earth.

I look forward to working with the cosponsors of this bill and my colleagues on the Government Affairs Committee to make EPA a Cabinet-level department and to ensure that environmental issues are placed directly before the President and receive the priority policy position they deserve.●

LOVE NEWARK—A COMMUNITY TAKES PRIDE IN ITS CITY

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I would like to call my colleagues' attention a successful community effort in Newark, NJ, called Love Newark. Originally titled, "Love Newark, Keep It Clean" it was initiated about a decade ago as an antilitter campaign by the city of Newark and the Greater Newark Chamber of Commerce in response to the urban dilemma of inner city cleanup problems.

Today, the Love Newark Committee has expanded from an antilitter program to a full-scale civic endeavor with the involvement of all citizens taking pride in the community. The Love Newark Committee works year round coordinating cleanup efforts. To make a clean city a reality, a 5-year master plan was developed. In addition, a successful media campaign was waged. Clean up programs and recycling activities were encouraged, and the "Gold Broom" Award Program was developed for businesses, institutions and residents that keep their property clean.

All segments of the community are involved: city government, schools, churches, volunteers, residents of neighborhoods. Businesses and labor unions provide financial support and many volunteers throughout the city provide their services. This endeavor has contributed greatly to public awareness of the importance of pride in a clean city, achieved not just by Government, but by the combined efforts of all citizens working together.

On February 10, the Love Newark Committee will host its second annual fundraising dinner in honor of this effort. I extend best wishes to Arthur Ashe, this year's guest speaker and congratulations to this years honorees: The Honorable Henry Martinez, president of the Newark Municipal Council; Arthur Guida, manager of external affairs for New Jersey Bell and immediate past chairman of Love Newark; Barbell Bell, executive director of the Boy's and Girl's Club of Newark; and to Msgr. William Linder, chairman of the New Community Corp.

I commend Richard Levine, chairman of the committee, and Mayor Sharpe James for their roles in promoting this outstanding project. The city of Newark has been beautified by the tireless efforts of these individuals and many volunteers and citizens. May this successful community beautification continue for years to come.

THE PRESIDENT'S REMARKS TO THE SENIOR EXECUTIVE SERVICE EMPLOYER

● Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, in his first speech outside of the White House, President Bush addressed 3,700 employees in the Senior Executive Service last week at Constitution Hall. This meeting between the Chief Executive and the Senior Executive Service was a first for two reasons. The occasion was the first time that the Senior Executive Service was ever brought together as a group and the first time that a President, while in office, has called together and addressed this group.

The Senior Executive Service serves as an interface between the President's 3,000 political appointees and the 2.2 million civil servants asked to carry out the policies of the President. The desire and the willingness of the Chief Executive to address this group so early in his administration sends a clear message that the Bush administration realizes the worth and the importance of the Federal work force.

President Bush emphasized three major points in his remarks: the importance of an ethical commitment from both career and non-career employees, the need for all appointees to build a spirit of teamwork between political and career officials, and the view that the Senior Executive Service is a valuable asset and one of our great resources in Government today.

President Bush's words of appreciation will go a long way toward educating the public about our dedicated public servants as well as gesturing to Congress on the importance of major issues in the civil service area before us.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the President's speech be reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The text is as follows:

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT TO SENIOR EXECUTIVE SERVICE EMPLOYEES

Thank you so much. All right, here we go. Thank you so very much. Mr. Vice President—thank you for that very warm welcome, Mr. Vice President and members of the Cabinet and designees and ladies and gentlemen. Let me first recognize especially the recipients of the Presidential Distinguished Rank Award who are with us here today.

And it's great to be here with all of you, the men and women whom I regard as certainly among America's finest. You're the first group that I am addressing as President outside the White House and you're one of the most important groups I will ever speak to.

And you know, I wanted to be fully briefed before I came so I asked one of my staff, "When does open season begin?" (Laughter.) And he says, "for you, sir, it begins as soon as the honeymoon ends." (Laughter.)

We're all wise in the ways of Washington, especially you who have served this country with such distinction. And we know there are ups and downs. But I must say, there is a nice feeling around today in the country. I think people, when a new president comes in, do root for him regardless of partisan politics. That comes up tomorrow. But for today, why, I think there's a good mood out there and I thank you for that welcome to me and to the members of my Cabinet and designees and others that are here with us on this platform. Pundits agree, regardless of party, that of all the candidates I had the best Form 171. (Laughter.) I—but seriously—(applause.)

But really what we do have in common is that each of us is here to serve the American people. Each of us is here because of a belief in public service as the highest and noblest calling. And each one of us, on our first day, took, a solemn oath: We pledged to defend the Constitution of the United States, and that is exactly what we shall do.

And our mandate comes from the people, because as Abraham Lincoln said, "No man is good enough to govern another man without that other's consent." And so now that the people have spoken I'm coming to you as President and offering my hand in partnership. I'm asking you to join me as full members of our team. I promise to lead and to listen; and I promise to serve beside you as we work together to carry out the will of the American people.

Our principles are clear—that government service is a noble calling and a public trust. I learned that from my mom and dad at an early age, and I expect that that's where many of you learned it—there or in school. There is no higher honor than to serve free men and women; no greater privilege than to labor in government beneath the Great Seal of the United States and the American flag.

And that's why this administration is dedicated to ethics in government and the need for honorable men and women to serve in positions of trust. Yesterday, I appointed a commission—bipartisan commission, headed by Judge Wilkey and former Attorney General Griffin Bell, to develop ethics reform proposals which will include all branches of the federal government. The guiding principle will be simply to know right from wrong; to act in accordance with what is right and to avoid even the appearance of what is wrong. Our duty is to serve, and my strong conviction is that we must do it only for the right reasons, as you do, out of a sense of service and love of country. Government should be an opportunity for public service, not private gain.

And I want to make sure that public service is valued and respected because I want to encourage America's young to pursue careers in government. There is nothing more fulfilling than to serve your country and your fellow citizens and to do it well. And that's what our system of self-government depends on.

And I've not known a finer group of people than those that I have worked with in government. You're men and women of knowledge, ability, and an integrity. And I saw that in the CIA, I saw that when I was in China, I saw it at the United Nations. And for the last eight years I saw that in every department and agency of the United States government. And I saw that commitment to excellence in the federal workers I came to know and respect in Washington, all across America, and indeed around the world. You work hard, you sacrifice, you deserve to be recognized, rewarded, and certainly appreciated. I pledge to try to make federal jobs more challenging, more satisfying, and more fulfilling. I'm dedicated to making the system work and making it work better.

Starting eight years ago I led a task force to remove unnecessary regulation of the private sector, to free up the energies of the American people. But I think we also need to continue to remove unnecessary and counterproductive regulation of federal workers and senior executives. I believe that there is tremendous pent-up energy in the federal government, a powerful force for good, that needs to be released, and I want to be the President to do that, to release the federal manager from bureaucratic bondage so that together we can, as I said on the steps of the Capitol, use power to serve people.

I think Connie Horner has done an outstanding job at OPM, at the Office of Personnel Management. And I'm delighted that my new Director of OPM will be Connie Newman. She is an outstanding executive. I have great confidence in her, and I think she's learned a few things on her way up since 1962. That's the year she began in federal service as a clerk-typist at the Department of the Interior. And just as the award winners here today represent the best and brightest, I think in choosing Connie I found one of the best and brightest, as well.

Now, as the Cabinet secretaries staff their agencies, particularly the senior position, they'll be looking for ability, for people committed to fulfilling the mandate we received from the American people and to doing it with excellence. And if we find that the best choice for an appointment is a career government executive, I am for that and I hope that my selection of Tom Pickering to be our Ambassador at the United Nations is underlining that point.

I have a conservative vision of government; I ran and was elected on those terms. And I see no strain or tension between those values and the values of a professional civil service whose highest principle is one of patriotism, whose foremost commitment is to excellence, whose experience and expertise is in itself a national resource to be used and respected. I urge all my appointees to build a spirit of teamwork between the political and career officials.

And each of you has a special role to play here. You've reached the top of your profession and you're skilled managers, knowledgeable in your fields, respected by your colleagues. And I'm asking you to join with our political appointees not only in setting an example of cooperation but, again, one of excellence as well.

To those who work outside Washington, I would send a special message. At times it may be frustrating when it seems that the head office is thousands of miles away and the message is not getting through. But if I may, I'm going to issue a verbal executive order: We're going to listen. Because the heart of our government is not here in Washington; it's in every county office, every town, every city across this land. Wherever the people of America are, that's where the heart of our government is.

And since, in any organization, so many of the best ideas come from the bottom up, I hope the people in this room will listen, listen closely to the people who work for you. The civil servants on the front lines know what works because they're right there. Whether they're working with disadvantaged children, promoting American exports, or managing our public lands, they are in touch with the American people.

And there's much we need to accomplish for America. There is a mandate to fulfill. And there are problems to solve. We have work to do in promoting education, protecting the environment, and certainly in fighting crime. We have work to do in our cities and on our farms, and we have a war on drugs to win. We must provide for the common defense, strive for a lasting peace, and we must keep our economy growing so it can keep producing jobs and opportunity. Above all, we have a compact with the American people; they pay for excellent government and they deserve to receive it. And together we can assure that that is done.

And there's one more thing we need to do. The government is here to serve, but it cannot replace individual service. And shouldn't all of us who are public servants also set an example of service as private citizens? So I want to ask all of you—and all the appointees in this administration—to do what so many of you already do—to reach out and lend a hand.

Ours should be a nation characterized by conspicuous compassion, generosity that is overflowing and abundant. And you can help make this happen outside of your workplace, in your communities and your neighborhoods, in any of the unlimited opportunities for voluntary service and charity where your help is so greatly needed.

Well, I'm honored to be with you, to work with you—you here in Washington, your colleagues in the federal service around the nation. They're some of the most unsung heroes in America. The United States is the greatest nation in the world because we fulfill that mission of greatness one person at a time, as individuals dedicated to serving our country.

And as we embark on this great new chapter in our nation's history, I want to tell you, came over here to tell you that I am proud of you and very glad that we will be working to write this chapter together.

Thank you all and God bless you in your important work. Thank you very, very much. (Applause.)●

MAY IS OLDER AMERICANS MONTH

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I am extremely pleased to join in sponsoring legislation to designate May 1989 as "Older Americans Month." This designation, a tradition for more than a quarter of a century, pays tribute to the invaluable contributions older persons make to their families, their communities, and our Nation.

I am happy that Older Americans Month is celebrated annually in Maryland and throughout our country. Each May, senior organizations, community groups, and state and local governments join together to focus on the importance of older citizens in our society and to express appreciation and respect for the achievements of older Americans and their continuing role in the life of our Nation.

In the last two decades, the older population has grown more than twice as fast as the rest of the population. In 1986, one in five was at least 55 years old, and one in eight was at least 65. In my own State of Maryland, those aged 65 and over comprise more than 10 percent of the State's population. This represents an incredible resource to our society as older citizens continue to contribute their skills and talents in all aspects of our Nation—business, government, community, artistic, and scientific.

Older Americans who have contributed so much to our country throughout their lives seek to live in dignity and independence during their retirement years. It is my firm belief that we as a society have an obligation to ensure that they can achieve that goal. To that end, I have strongly supported programs vital to the health and well-being of older citizens such as Social Security, retirement programs, Medicare, and the Older Americans Act. Older citizens are contributing an immeasurable amount of their time, energy, and experience to our Nation. It is only right that we, in turn, work hard to ensure that they are able to meet their health, nutrition, housing, and energy needs.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution designating May as "Older Americans Month" and look forward to the celebration in May honoring the valuable contributions that older citizens make to our country.●

RETIREMENT OF JUDGE DOUGLAS K. AMDAHL

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in a salute to one of the greatest, most determined legal minds ever to come out of the great State of Minnesota. The date February 1, 1989, marks the retirement of Douglas Amdahl, who has served for 7 years as the chief of the Minnesota State Supreme Court.

His contributions to the State's legal system are many. Indeed they reflect the wisdom of a brilliant mind that has held a position in the State's judicial system since 1961. His years of service in the Hennepin County district court, on the State's sentencing guidelines commission and on the supreme court contain the Amdahl tradition of taking the tough stand when necessary, yet ultimately instilling in his decisions and words the compassion and responsibility he learned as a young boy, growing up in rural Minnesota.

At this time, I submit for the RECORD a sketch of Judge Amdahl's career, as it was written by Dan Oberdorfer, of the Star Tribune:

The material follows:

AMDAHL TO LEAVE BEHIND A LONG-LASTING LEGACY

After almost three decades on the bench, Douglas K. Amdahl will take off his black robe at the end of this month and head straight for the small back-yard woodworker's shop he dearly loves.

As he retires to make way "for someone with new ideas and more enthusiasm than I have left," the 69-year-old chief justice will leave a state court system that has undergone historic changes under his seven-year stewardship, years when Minnesota's once cumbersome system of justice leaped into the computer era.

Amdahl, the son of a harnessmaker turned small-town shoe repair shopkeeper—he says he might have become a shoe repairman himself but for the things farmers step in—is stepping down after an illustrious career as one of Minnesota's most respected jurists.

Amdahl's legacy as chief justice will be long-lasting because of the creation of the Minnesota's new Court of Appeals, the ground-breaking for a new judicial building near the state Capitol, the unification of county and district court benches throughout Minnesota and the completion of a court computer system that is now being sold around the world.

Although Monday he will reach 70, the mandatory retirement age for judges, he has yet to complete plans for what he will do after Jan. 31, his official last day. He wants to ensure time for fishing and hunting, two favorite pastimes he has missed in the crunch of work the past few years. And Amdahl is considering what he calls interesting offers to teach law, fabulous offers from large corporate firms, and the opportunity to continue to serve the people as a retired judge.

But where will such an acclaimed chief justice spend the majority of his time after leaving the state's highest court?

"I'll be down in the little barn," he said with a smile, point to a shed in the back yard of the small home along Minnehaha Creek where he and his wife, Phyllis, raised their two children.

It is in that shed, which Amdahl built himself, that he makes the mosquito houses that have become his trademark—tiny replicas of bird houses that he gives friends.

Last week, wearing jeans and a plaid flannel shirt that bulged slightly around the middle—from a string of testimonial dinners he has attended recently, he said—Amdahl scrambled down to the shed for a few hours during the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday. The chief discovered that for the first time in eight years he had no pressing judicial chores, and he wanted to finish the tiny walnut carts he'll fill with cookies and give to court employees before he leaves.

The people who know him best say Amdahl has brought a unique combination of talents to the high court. He lacks any of the stuffiness associated with the ornate offices of the high-ceilinged court, yet he is comfortable standing his gound during tense negotiations with the high and mighty.

Jack Davies, for years the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee where he was known for stubbornly defending his positions, said he was dead set against the creation of the Court of Appeals. A few sessions with Amdahl turned him around. "He convinced me the Supreme Court was being destroyed, that it could not survive without help." Davies said.

Now a full-time professor at William Mitchell College of Law, Davies added: "Amdahl is very businesslike in his approach to the problems of the judicial system. He never uses fancy language. We were never, in any way, misled by Amdahl. He has only the appropriate kind of ego, the kind that causes him to do his job as well as he can."

Said Ramsey County District Judge David Marsden, who served with Amdahl on the Minnesota Sentencing Guidelines Commission. "He is the total opposite of pomposity. He is very humble. He has taken on tough, controversial issues and assumed personal responsibility for them to an unusual extent."

Probably Amdahl's most visible contribution to the judiciary is the state Court of Appeals. He personally lobbied for it, in the process drawing criticism and eventually an investigation by the state judicial ethics panel, which probed his fund-raising efforts for the court and for the Minnesota Constitutional Bicentennial Committee. The panel formally rebuked him for the bicentennial fund-raising, saying it was inappropriate for a judge.

The appeals court has vastly speeded the process of justice in Minnesota. Before the Court of Appeals was created, only the Supreme Court heard appeals. It was swamped, and half of its cases took more than 15 months to decide, even though many cases were answered with yes/no decisions.

Now, even though there has been an explosion of litigation handled by the appellate courts, less than five months elapses between filing and decision in the typical appellate case. And, while the appeals court is pumping out decisions with astonishing rapidity, the Supreme Court is able to sit back and issue carefully considered opinions that serve as guideposts for attorneys working with the ever-changing law.

As he leaves the court, Amdahl suggests that the challenge facing his successor, Associate Justice Peter Popovich, is to fine-tune the internal operations of the court. Amdahl said the court's decision-making process could be streamlined, and the assignment of duties could be improved.

Although Amdahl has been a judge since 1961, he came to the profession almost by accident.

Considered a pragmatic jurist who adheres to common sense principles, not dogma, Amdahl began his legal career in night law school after serving in World War II. When the war ended, he wanted to be a teacher, but after just a short time teaching business in Mankato, he became disillusioned by the size of his classes. He could handle 10 students, not 50.

Amdahl said he observed that law was playing a greater role in business and enrolled in what is now called William Mitchell College of Law. After graduation, Amdahl went into private practice with George Scott, later a Supreme Court justice himself, forming the firm of Amdahl and Scott.

In 1955, Scott, then an assistant attorney general, sought to be appointed Hennepin County attorney. According to Amdahl, the county board was split evenly, and the swing vote agreed to throw his support behind Scott if Amdahl would join the office as the civil division chief, providing the county board with legal advice. Among his projects was the Hennepin County Government Center, still barely on the drawing boards.

On Saturdays, assistant county attorney Amdahl invited questions from townships that had legal problems. Some Saturdays the office looked like a dentist's waiting room. "I'd hate to have someone check to see if we gave the right answers," Amdahl said, "but we certainly gave a lot of answers."

In 1961, he applied for, and received his first appointment to the bench. For 19 years he sat as a Hennepin County district court judge, years that he described as "much, much, much more fun" than his time on the Supreme Court. He liked the job, he said, because he was dealing with people directly, and because he often saw the effect of his decision immediately.

In that time, also, Amdahl served on the Sentencing Guidelines Commission, and was one of the key people in developing statewide guidelines for the time offenders should serve behind bars.

When Gov. Al Quie elevated Amdahl to a Supreme Court associate justice in 1980, Amdahl quickly found himself reading briefs and writing decisions and rarely interacting with others. "Terribly lonely job," Amdahl said.

The next year, however, Quie named Amdahl to be chief justice, a job more to Amdahl's liking. The chief justice's position, as the steward of the state justice system, involves much more contact with outside groups.

Looking back, Amdahl's main regrets are his failure to write dissenting opinions in a few cases before the Court of Appeals was created. Refusing to identify the cases, he said he had been hoping similar issues would arise, so he could correct his error.

Uncharacteristically, the legal community speaks almost in a unified voice praising the job Amdahl has done as chief justice. Only in private do a handful of lawyers say he made a better district court judge than chief justice, and that Amdahl's court was too prone to side with the prosecution over the defense in criminal cases, not a view shared universally among defense attorneys.

Quie, the Independent-Republican former governor, said Amdahl represents one of the remaining legacies of his governorship, and Gov. Rudy Perpich, Quie's DFL successor, follows with equal praise. The state judiciary is "a much better system because of Amdahl," Perpich said. "He doesn't respond to political pressure. He does what is best for the state."●

ANNIVERSARY OF UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, last week marked the 71st anniversary of Ukraine's declaration of independence. On January 22, 1918, Ukraine was established as an independent and sovereign nation. Under the leadership of the Ukrainian Central Rada (Council) in Kiev, an autonomous Ukraine became reality for the first time since the late 18th century. A year later, in 1919, a union was established between the Western Ukrainian National Republic and the Ukrainian National Republic. Unfortunately, Ukrainian independence was a short-lived reality.

No sooner did Ukraine proclaim its independence than the young state was attacked from every direction: From the west by Poland and Romania; from the south by the White Guard Russians of General Denikin; and from the north by the Red Army of Lenin and Trotsky.

By 1922, the Soviets had established control over Ukraine. In subsequent years, the Soviet Government sought to eradicate the national identity, culture, and religious traditions of the Ukrainian people. Even today, attempts to assert Ukrainian independence are met with punishment.

The resilience of the Ukrainian people after almost 70 years of Soviet domination should serve as an inspiration to all those who cherish freedom. The people of Ukraine insist on the right to practice the religion of their forebears, and to speak their national language. Many have risked imprisonment and even their lives courageously resisting the Russification of their culture.

The Ukrainian Helsinki Monitoring Group is one of the strongest human rights organizations in the Soviet Union despite the fact that its members have spent time in Soviet prisons, asylums, and concentration camps.

On this anniversary of the independence of a great nation, we should all pay special tribute to the brave men and women who, at great personal risk, have maintained the struggle for freedom and dignity. For the Ukrainian people the dream of freedom is still alive.●

HEARINGS BY THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

● Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, yesterday the Special Committee on Investigations of the Select Committee on Indian Affairs began several weeks of hearings to inquire into the allegations of fraud and mismanagement of the Federal Government's trust responsibility for Indian people and their resources. We anticipate that these hearings will result in legislative proposals to ensure greater accountability in the management of Federal funds and tribal trust assets. Because of the importance of these hearings, I want to take this opportunity to share my opening statement with the other Members of the Senate.

I ask that a copy of my statement be printed in the RECORD.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR JOHN MCCAIN

Mr. Chairman, the Special Committee on Investigations was established during the 100th Congress in response to public allegations of fraud and mismanagement of the federal government's trust responsibility for Indian people and their lands and resources. I believe that Senator Inouye best described the purpose of the Special Committee when he stated that:

"I think that we would all agree that those who are charged with the responsibility of administering Indian programs and services, be they federal instrumentalities, state agencies, or tribal governments, must be accountable—first, to those for whom a trust responsibility has been established—the Indian people—as well as accountable to the Congress and the American people. This accountability must be achieved, and I believe, can best be realized, by Indian people working with the Congress and with federal agencies to identify the need for change, and to initiate reform where it may be necessary. The establishment of a Special Committee on Investigations, I believe, will provide us with the capacity to more effectively and expeditiously realize this objective."

As we begin these public hearings I believe that it is very important to reflect upon the purpose of the Special Committee and to bear it in mind as we proceed. In many respects, the work of this committee is a continuation of previous federal efforts to address the problems which confront Indian people. During this century there have been numerous task forces and commissions established by both the Congress and the President to examine the status of Indian affairs and make recommendations for improvements. In some instances, important laws and policies have been developed and instituted as a result of these prior inquiries. However, it is clear to even the most casual observer that more can and must be done to ensure that the administration of the trust responsibility at all levels of government is carried out in a way that most effectively serves the beneficiaries of the trust—the Indian people—within the available resources of the federal and tribal governments.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to take some time to place the work of this Committee in historic perspective. Our constitution confers on the Congress the ultimate authority and responsibility for the relations between the federal government and the tribes. With this authority and responsibility comes the duty to ensure the fulfillment of the trust. These are not passing whims or fancies of the day. They are solemn legal and, I believe, moral obligations which are deeply embedded in our history as a nation. The renowned scholar, Felix Cohen, perhaps said it best:

"Like the miner's canary, the Indian marks the shifts from fresh air to poison gas in our political atmosphere; and our treatment of Indians, even more than our treatment of other minorities, reflects the rise and fall our political faith * * *."

The very 1st Congress spent much of its time in 1789 and 1790 enacting legislation relating to Indians. During that Congress, the War Department was established and was delegated substantial responsibility over Indian Affairs. The Northwest Ordinance was enacted with the famous pledge that "the utmost good faith shall always be observed toward Indians." The first of several Trade and Intercourse Acts were enacted to prohibit the acquisition of Indian lands by non-Indians without federal approval. During this same period, Secretary of War Henry Knox advised President Washington on the military necessity for negotiating treaties with the Indian nations that occupied and possessed the territory which now comprises the United States. Secretary Knox recommended and the President and the Congress adopted a policy of negotiating with tribes as nations. Knox believed that this policy was also necessary to distinguish the national character of the new American government from the previous conduct of the British colonial government toward the Indian nations. Secretary Knox stated that:

"But, in future, the obligations of policy humanity, the justice, together with that respect which every nation sacredly owes to its own reputation, unite in requiring a noble, liberal, and disinterested administration of Indian affairs."

For most of the next one hundred years, the Congress and the President exerted considerable effort to negotable, ratify and implement treaties between the United States and the Indian Tribes. In 1832, the responsibility for Indian affairs was shifted from the Department of War to the Department of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs became responsible for negotiating the treaties and implementing their provisions.

The treaties between the United States and the Tribes all vary in some particulars. However, they all also contain some common principles and provisions. The underlying concept of every treaty was that the tribes agreed to cede vast land areas to the United States while reserving to themselves a permanent homeland. In return for the ceded lands, the United States promised to provide protection against encroachment by non-Indians. Tribes were assured that they could continue to govern their own affairs free from interference by local authorities. Many of the treaties promised federal assistance in the development of agriculture, education, health and various economic pursuits.

The treaty era formally ended in 1871 when the Congress declared that the United States would no longer negotiate treaties with the Tribes. Soon thereafter, in 1887, Congress enacted the first of a series of allotment acts. Under these laws, the reservations were to be broken up into parcels owned by individual Indians. The intent of Congress was to encourage Indian people to become farmers and promote the non-Indian concept of individual ownership of land. Much has been written about both the purpose and the effects of the allotment acts. It is not my purpose here to revisit the controversy which surrounds these laws. However, it is important to understand the consequences of the allotment era if we are to understand the situation of Indian people today.

When the allotment process began in 1887 there were about 138 million acres of land in Indian ownership. When the allotment era ended in 1934, there were 52 million acres of land left in Indian ownership. In less than 50 years, 86 million acres of land passed out of Indian ownership. Perhaps of even greater significance was the fact that the allotment program devastated Indian cultures and traditional forms of governance. The legacy of the allotment era is with us today in many forms. Checkerboard jurisdictions and fractionated land ownership are but two consequences of the allotment era which hinder proper management of Indian resources and the exercise of Tribal self-governance.

The allotment era was replaced with a renewed federal emphasis on tribal self-governce with the enactment of the Indian Reorganization Act in 1934. Tribes were encouraged to adopt constitutions and reassert control over their internal affairs. Some federal efforts were made to consolidate the tribal land base and to improve the management of tribal natural resources. Most tribes expended great effort to reassert their inherent sovereign powers of self-governance and to once again take control of their reservations.

During the 1950's federal policy shifted again. Congress began the era of termination with the adoption of House Concurrent Resolution 108. Although the Indian Reorganization Act was not repealed, it became official federal policy to terminate the existence of federally recognized tribal governments. Like the allotment policy of an earlier era, the termination policy led to disastrous results. President Nixon best summarized the situation in his 1970 Special Message to the Congress on Indian Affairs:

"* * * The removal of Federal trusteeship responsibility has produced considerable disorientation among the affected Indians and has left them unable to relate to a myriad of Federal, State and local assistance efforts. Their economic and social condition has often been worse after termination than it was before * * * The very threat that this [trust] relationship may someday be ended has created a great deal of apprehension among Indian groups and this apprehension, in turn, has had a blighting effect on tribal progress. Any step that might result in greater social, economic or political automony is regarded with suspicion by many Indians who fear that it will only bring them closer to the day when the federal government will disown its responsibility and cut them adrift.

"In short, one extreme policy, forced termination, has often worked to produce the opposite extreme: excessive dependence on the federal government. In many cases this dependence is so great that the Indian community is almost entirely run by outsiders who are responsible and responsible to federal officials in Washington, D.C., rather than to the communities they are supposed to be serving."

The termination era officially ended when House Concurrent Resolution 108 was finally repudiated and repealed during the 100th Congress. Our current federal policy of tribal self-determination came about in 1975 as a result of the proposal contained in President Nixon's Special Message to Congress in 1970. The goals of the self-determination policy are to reduce federal domination of Indian programs and services while strengthening tribal capabilities and capacities for self-governance. As we know from the hearings held on the Self-determination Act during the last Congress, the policy has generally worked and has been enthusiastically embraced by the Tribes.

Mr. Chairman, I have gone on at some length here and I have not even touched upon the substantial body of law relating to Indian affairs which has been developed by the federal courts. I do want to say that the courts have been much more consistent in their handling of Indian affairs than has been the case here in the Congress. The courts have been extremely diligent in their protection of the inherent authority of the Tribes to regulate their own affairs. They have also been consistent in their view that the Congress possesses the ultimate authority and responsibility for Indian Affairs.

As we exercise our authority and seek to discharge our responsibility, I believe it is important that we avoid the mistakes of the past. In this regard, it is abundantly clear that abrupt swings in federal policy toward Indians have always produced negative results. I believe that many of the situations which we will examine in these hearings are a result of prior inconsistent federal policies. Caution and careful deliberation are necessary if we are to formulate effective policies for the efficient administration of the federal trust responsibility. Our purpose here is to ensure that all levels of government possess the integrity, accountability and capability to meet the needs of Indian citizens. We must make certain that the Indian people are receiving the full benefit to be derived from their trust lands and resources as well the full benefits of programs and services which are intended for their assistance and well-being. Our work in this Committee should ultimately lead to recommendations which further these purposes. Our overriding goal should be to strengthen and improve the capacity of the federal and tribal governments to effectively and efficiently provide necessary programs and services to the Indian people.

I am hopeful that these hearings will lead to positive recommendations for improvements for consideration by the full Congress.●

LEGAL CHALLENGE TO TOSHIBA-KONGSBERG SANCTIONS

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, suit has been filed in the Court of International Trade in New York challenging the constitutionality of the so-called Garn amendment which I sponsored in the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988. Oral arguments were heard on January 10 in the case of Arjay Associates, Inc., and other versus Ronald Reagan and the United States of America. This suit, filed by nine U.S. distributors of Toshiba Machine plastic injection molding machines, argues that the amendment is a bill of attainder. A final decision is expected by the end of February.

I cannot say that this challenge is unexpected. During consideration of this issue in the Senate, I acknowledged that some had raised constitutional questions about the portion of my amendment that would impose sanctions against Toshiba and Kongsberg for their part in selling controlled technology to the Soviet Union. I also recognized that any provision of law that placed a direct and substantial financial burden on companies would be challenged regardless of the merits.

What I do take issue with in this case is that the complaint argues not only that the provision is unconstitutional but that I urged its enactment while recognizing its "likely unconstitutionality" and with no other purpose than to punish two individual firms. I would therefore like to set the public record straight on my intentions and the intent of Congress on these two issues.

On the first point, it is true that when I proposed my amendment I acknowledged that constitutional questions had been raised about the retroactive portion of the legislation. However, I did not act nor did the Congress finally adopt the amendment in the belief that these sanctions were unconstitutional. In the first place, they are very much in keeping with the traditions of U.S. trade law and export control policy in which denial of import or export privileges is routinely applied as a trade remedy or penalty for violation of law. Furthermore, my colleagues and I received an analysis prepared by the American Law Division of the Congressional Research Service at the request of the Senate Banking Committee which concluded that the amendment was constitutional. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD following my statement.

The CRS memorandum argued that the "Commerce clause" and the "power of the purse" assigned to Congress in the Constitution provide ample legal basis for the sanctions imposed by my amendment. The memorandum finds no "due process" flaw in the amendment and notes that while the focus of congressional power over foreign commerce "on two specified companies may appear analogous to constitutionally prohibited legislative adjudication, it is actually similar to the trade embargoes which are currently in place against a number of countries." While I have repeatedly admitted that I cannot adequately judge the legal merits of these arguments, we in the Congress acted with advice in hand that the amendment derived its authority from "explicit and expansive powers" in the Constitution.

The plaintiffs also argue "the sanctions imposed upon TMC [Toshiba Machine] serve no rational, nonpunitive purpose, and Congress never made any pretense that they would." On this point, I believe the facts demonstrate that the sanctions serve a clear public policy objective and that the Congress intended that they should.

The broad objective of U.S. export control policy and of these sanctions is to protect our national security by controlling the sale of militarily critical technology to the Soviet Bloc. The United States and her allies have pursued multilateral cooperation to control these technologies since World War II through a coordinating mechanism knows as the Coordinating Committee for Multilateral Export Controls or COCOM. Agreements reached in COCOM are implemented through the laws and regulations of individual participating nations.

The U.S. system, while certainly not flawless, is most rigorous and imposes tough criminal and administrative penalties on violators. Some other countries take a more relaxed approach to regulation and have substantially weaker penalties. This asymmetry in the COCOM Network holds the potential for incidents like the Toshiba-Kongsberg sale involving foreign technology or diversion of U.S. technology through other countries. This weakness in the system has been recognized as a serious problem during the 15 years that I have dealt with export controls in the Senate. For this reason, successive administration and the Congress have pursued efforts to strengthen the COCOM system.

Over the last 4 or 5 years, Congress has focused on the remedy of imposing restrictions on foreign violators in the form of denial of U.S. trading privileges as a means of toughening eforcement of COCOM rules, akin to the sanctions in the Garn amendment. In 1985, the Congress provided the President with discretionary authority to impose trade penalties for foreign violators in an amendment to the Trade Expansion Act of 1962. However, the President's ability to impose sanctions was effectively barred by a requirement for negotiation and agreement on sanctions within COCOM.

To ease these restrictions, the Banking Committee included a second sanctions provision in its amendments to the trade bill during legislative markup of trade-related matters within the committee's jurisdiction on May 19, 1987. This provision gave the President full discretion to impose Government procurement sanctions on foreign export control violators for up to 5 years. Even as this effort was underway, the Banking Committee was exploring the full details of the Toshiba-Kongsberg incident. It was the policy debate over this case at a June 17, 1987, committee hearing that triggered my efforts to pass the Garn amendment.

The first reason for taking even stronger steps was the unprecedented severity of the violation which set a new standard for illegal sales. Toshiba Machine and Kongsberg Trade shipped extremely sophisticated machine tools to the Soviets capable of fabricating very quiet ship and submarine propellers. The companies knew that the machines were far in excess of allowable COCOM limits and took deliberate steps to evade detection of their crime. Most importantly, despite clear evidence of a flagrant violation, little action was evident on the part of the U.S. or foreign authorities to deal effectively with the technology loss.

I became convinced that if credible enforcement action was lacking in even a case as severe as this one, the international business community could never take COCOM export controls seriously. Therefore, I proposed legislation that became the "Multilateral Export Control Enhancement" section of the new trade law. It rewrites U.S. export control policy to require substantial trade penalties against foreign persons guilty of severe violations of multilateral export control rules.

As is clear from the pending case, section 2443 of the trade law specifies that certain companies be sanctioned, including Toshiba Machine. However, I think the public record also clearly shows that such sanctions were intended to put teeth into the multilateral control regime in the same way that penalties ranging from denial of export privileges to fines and jail terms apply to violators of U.S. law. In fact the primary reason that sanctions against specific companies were placed in a separate section 2443 was to isolate the broader policy from legal challenges likely to be aimed at any provision, regardless of its merits, that imposes costs on U.S. firms.

Let me close by restating that my intent was always to make sanctions a central element of a revised export control policy that would protect U.S. national security by stopping serious control violations by foreign firms. When such sanctions are imposed, they inevitably have collateral impact on innocent U.S. and foreign firms in the form of lost sales and supply disruptions. I am sorry this is so. Certainly the trade conferees labored long and hard to limit that impact while achieving our broader policy objectives, but some costs remained as the unfortunate side effect but the legitimate cost of designing a policy to stop technology leakage to our adversaries.

I believe these sanctions are already working. They have certainly gotten the attention of Japan, Norway, and the rest of our COCOM allies. In fact, more has been done to tighten export control laws and improve enforcement throughout COCOM since I proposed this amendment than happened in the previous 14 years I have worked on this issue. I hope that the court finds that the advice on which we acted was correct and that broader public policy objectives are served by this legislation so that the sanctions may remain part of U.S. national security policy.

Subject: Analysis of Congressional Power to Impose Sanctions Upon Corporations Based on Actions Taken by Subsidiaries, and the Application of Such Power to Foreign Corporations.

This memorandum is in response to your request to analyze the criminal or civil liability of a corporation for actions taken by a subsidiary, and to analyze the application of sanctions to a foreign corporation based on actions taken by a subsidiary, when such actions were not deemed prohibited by United States law at the time of their commission. Specifically, this memorandum will address constitutional issues which are raised by those provisions of the Senate Omnibus Trade Act, H.R. 3, 100th Cong., 1st Sess. (1987) which provide for sanctions against the Toshiba Corporation and Kongsberg Vaapenfabrik (KV) based on their alleged diversion of submarine-related technology to the Soviet Union.

On June 30, 1987, the Senate passed by voice vote an amendment to the Omnibus Trade Act, S. 1420 (now H.R. 3), which, under a perfecting amendment offered by Senator Garn (hereinafter Garn amendment), provides for sanctions against the Toshiba Corporation, KV (companies incorporated in Japan and Norway respectively), and any other firm found to have violated export control regulations issued by a country pursuant to agreements of the Coordinating Committee (hereinafter COCOM), where the violations have the result of substantially enhancing Soviet or Eastern Bloc defense capabilities.[1] The Garn amendment prohibits for two to five years, at the discretion of the President, the importation into the United States of products manufactured by Toshiba Corporation or KV, and any parent, subsidiary, affiliate, or successor companies. The amendment also debars these firms from contracting with the United States Government.[2]

Although the Garn amendment specifies Toshiba Corporation as subject to the sanctions to be imposed, the diversion of submarine technology to the Soviet Union may have been performed solely by a subsidiary of Toshiba Corporation called Toshiba Machine. Toshiba Machine, established in 1938, is a private company, incorporated in Japan, engaged in the production of, among other products, machine tools and numerical controllers, which were involved in the diversion.[3] The Toshiba Corporation owns a controlling 50.1% interest in Toshiba Machine, but it has denied having directed or of having knowledge of its subsidiary's illegal activities. While the subject technology diversion appears to have violated Japan's regulations implementing COCOM rules, no allegations have been made that Toshiba Machine or the Toshiba Corporation have violated any United States laws by their actions. Concerns have been raised that for the Congress to impose sanctions on the Toshiba Corporation for activities that were not previously barred under United States law may be a violation of the Constitution. Specifically, Senator Garn himself expressed concern that a "retroactive" ban on the importation of Toshiba products and Toshiba's debarment from government procurement opportunities might not withstand constitutional scrutiny.[4] This statement would suggest a concern that the Garn amendment would be interpreted as an ex post facto law, or as a bill of attainder.

Concerns have also been raised about the imposition of sanctions on the Toshiba Corporation without a showing that some officer, director, or employee knew of the diversion by Toshiba Machine. An argument might be made that without sufficient constitutional nexus, application of sanctions to Toshiba Corporation for the actions of Toshiba Machine was a violation of due process. The appearance that this amendment is an enforcement of another country's laws, and problems of extraterritorial jurisdiction under United States law also raise concerns. There is also a question whether the imposition of sanctions, even if constitutional, is not a departure from established U.S. precedents in criminal and tort law regarding the liability of a parent corporation for violations by a subsidiary.

ALTERNATIVE CONSTITUTIONAL BASES FOR THE GARN AMENDMENT

1. Congressional Power To Regulate Commerce and To Enter Into Contracts

The U.S. Constitution provides that the Congress shall have the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states.[5] This power has been used by the Congress to regulate many aspects of international trade, and as trade assumed increasing importance to the United States, the commerce power of the Congress was expanded accordingly.[6] Today, the commerce clause has become the basis for far-reaching regulation over a variety of areas, and the courts have been reluctant to find that Congress has over-stepped the limits of its power under the clause.[7] There is reason to believe that the courts are even less likely to restrict congressional power over foreign commerce than over interstate commerce.[8]

The question of whether congressional power over foreign commerce is broad enough to cover prohibitions in the importation of products from a particular source was settled early in the history of the United States.[9] The power of the Congress to prohibit specific articles from importation has also been well established.[10] The commerce power of Congress is "complete in itself and may be exercised to its utmost extent" consistent with due process of the law.[11]

The proposed prohibition on the importation of specified products manufactured by Toshiba appears fully consistent with the powers of Congress to regulate foreign commerce, and there appears to be no "due process" defect in the application of the proposed "sanctions" to both the Toshiba Corporation and Toshiba Machine. To fulfill the due process requirement, the Congress must have a rational basis for any deprivation of life, liberty, or property caused by the imposition of the sanctions.[12] The legislative history of the Garn amendment indicates that the importation ban is intended to serve U.S. economic and military needs by discouraging companies from exporting or failing to prevent subsidiaries from exporting technology in violation of COCOM.[13] Further, as per the discussion on page six supra, there appears to be no right to import into the United States or right to contract with the United States Government.

The debarment of Toshiba from government contracts would appear to be based on the congressional appropriations power or "power of the purse". Rooted in Congress's authority to pay debts and provide for the general welfare,[14] the appropriations clause provides that no monies may be expended without congressional approval.[15] Congress has broad discretion to determine the purpose of appropriations, as well as the terms and conditions under which they are made.[16] Debarment of a company from the U.S. Government contracting authority has substantial precedent, and courts have indicated that it is not a right but a privilege to enter into contracts with the U.S. Government.[17] Consequently, there would not seem to be a bar to prevent Congress from declining to appropriate monies to award Toshiba future contracts.[18]

2. Congressional Power to Enact Criminal Legislation

Questions have been raised whether the Garn amendment as applied would be covered by the constitutional prohibition against bills of attainder or ex post facto laws,[19] which are historically prohibitions on abuses of the criminal law system. A bill of attainder is an act of the legislature which inflicts punishment upon persons supposed to be guilty of crimes without any judicial proceeding.[20] This prohibition, which is essentially an implementation of the separation of powers between the two branches, was intended to prevent the Congress from sitting as a criminal court. Similarly, ex post facto law are criminal and penal statutes which are retroactive in application.[21]

Although the amendment sponsors refer to the provision of the amendment as "sanctions", there is a question as to whether the bills provisions can be considered to arise from the powers of the Congress to legislate against criminal activity. The Constitution only expressly authorizes criminal punishment for certain specified offenses such as conspiracy, felony on the high seas, treason and counterfeiting. The ability of the Congress to create, define, and punish crimes is generally considered to be derived from the "necessary and proper" clause.[22] The amendment, however, does not appear to regulate an activity which fits into the traditional categories of a federal "crime".

Unlike traditional federal crimes, the Garn amendment imposes sanctions on activities which appear to involve neither federal property, United States citizens, nor crossing United States state or federal borders. Further, a key element of the offense is that the diversion is done in violation of the COCOM regulations of the country which has jurisdiction over the alleged violation. It would appear unusual for a United States crime to be based on the language and interpretation of a foreign country's export laws.

There would also appear to be serious questions whether the "crime" of diversion is subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. Where a prohibited criminal act is performed by an alien outside the United States, courts have held that the crime must be intended to produce substantial harmful effects within the U.S. jurisdiction, or threaten the U.S. state's security.[23] Further, the activity must be generally recognized as a crime or tort in countries with reasonably developed legal systems, or the impact of the activity must be directly foreseeable. It is beyond the scope of this memorandum to examine whether the courts would enforce a law preventing the transferral of Japanese technology to the Eastern Bloc by a Japanese company, utilizing no instrumentalities of the United States, but it would appear that the amendment's jurisdictional basis could be brought into question.

3. Analysis of Competing Basis of Constitutional Authority

Although the Garn amendment would appear to have alternative constitutional bases, the commerce power offers an explicit and expansive power on which the amendment can derive its authority. Congress, in determining what is in the interests of the national welfare, is presumably aware of the actions of other sovereign nations and their citizens, and the impact that these actions have on the United States. In considering how to exercise its power over foreign commerce, the Congress must necessarily consider past acts which have affected the economy or security of the United States, and exercise its power accordingly. While the focusing of that power on two specified companies may appear analogous to constitutionally probibited legislative adjudication, it is actually similar to the trade embargoes which are currently in place against a number of countries.[24] Consequently, the prohibitions against retroactive or overexpansive enforcement of the criminal law would not appear to serve as a bar to the enforcement of the amendment's provision.

APPLICATION OF SANCTIONS AGAINST PARENT COMPANIES BASED ON ACTION OF SUBSIDIARY

As noted above, the application of an importation ban and debarment of a foreign company appears within the powers of the Congress under the Commerce and appropriations clauses. It has been suggested, however, that application of the proposed sanctions against the Toshiba Corporation absent evidence that its officers, directors, or employees were aware of the diversion by the subsidiary Toshiba Machine, is inconsistent with the manner in which corporate responsibility would be allocated in the United States criminal or civil proceeding.

It appears, based on state and federal caselaw, that there is a limited set of circumstances under which a court is required to hold a parent company liable for the actions of its subsidiaries. In cases involving "wrongful acts" by the subsidiary or "torts", liability may attach under theories of actual complicity by the parent corporation, or by a showing that the subsidiary was a mere instrumentality or agent of the parent company. Criminal liability appears to require similar bases, although courts have appeared willing to allow the Congress to impose a stricter duty of liability on parent corporations for violations of criminal statutes based on facts indicating that the subsidiary was acting as an agent for the parent corporation.

1. Civil Liability of a Parent Corporation for a Wrongful Act of its Subsidiary Generally, the mere fact that a parent corporation owns a majority of the stock of a subsidiary corporation is not sufficient to impose liability on that company for wrongful acts performed by the subsidiary corporation.[25] However, if the separate identity of the subsidiary is determined to have been abused by the parent corporation, and a court finds that the parent corporation has exercised a degree of control beyond that normally necessary to maintain a parent-subsidiary relationship, then a court may "pierce the corporate veil" and hold the parent corporation liable.

The issue of excessive control by a parent company is separate from a determination that a parent corporation was itself a tort-feasor, and subject to suit. In a suit for tort filed against a subsidiary, a parent company could be joined as a codefendant under traditional theories of joint liability. Thus, if evidence exists that a tort was the result of concerted action between a subsidiary and a parent company, the parent company may be liable for the tort of the subsidiary.[26] Express agreement is not necessary, and knowledge of the joint tortfeasors actions may be used as evidence of a "tacit understanding".[27] Mere knowledge of the commission of a wrong may not itself be sufficient to impart liability absent some legal duty to prevent the tort.[28]

A finding that codefendants were under a common duty and failed to exercise care in the execution of that duty may also be the basis for finding a joint liability. For example, the failure of two defendants to keep jointly owned property safe may lead to joint liability for damages caused thereby.[29] Further, if there is a master-servant relationship between two entities for the purposes of the transaction in question, a master may be vicariously responsible for the tort of a servant.[30]

Absent some finding that the parent company was involved in the commission of the tort, the alternative basis for liability of the parent company would require evidence that the parent corporation has controlled the subsidiary to such a degree as to make it a mere instrumentality and that the tort was an act of the parent corporation accomplished through a controlled agency.[31] The factors which would tend to prove a theory of instrumentality are acts imposed upon the subsidiary which are beneficial to the parent corporation and indicate a degree of control beyond that normally necessary to maintain the relationship as a stock-holder.

Generally, stock ownership is insufficient to constitute a subsidiary as an alter-ego or instrumentality of a parent.[32] However, other intercorporate connections in addition to stock ownership have been considered in determining that a subsidiary was acting in a parent company's shoes. Among the factors that have been considered are (1) the presence in both corporations of the same officers or directors; (2) common shareholders; (3) financial support of the subsidiary's operations by the parent corporation; (5) the fact that the subsidiary was organized with a grossly inadequate capital structure; (6) a joint accounting and payroll system; (7) the subsidiary lacks substantial business contacts with any except the parent; (9) the property of the subsidiary is used by the parent corporation as its own; (10) the individuals who exercise operating control over the subsidiary exercise it in the interest of the parent; (11) failure to observe the formal requirements attributable to the operation of the subsidiary.[33] If the parent exercises an extensive measure of control over a subsidiary, so that the latter is merely a business conduit or if the parent causes wrong through the subsidiary, then the parent corporation may be held liable for the torts of its subsidiary.

2. Criminal Liability of a Parent Corporation for Wrongful Acts by a Subsidiary

A corporation may be held liable for the acts of its agents if the conduct which comprises the criminal act is undertaken within the scope of the agent's authority.[34] The agent need not have been authorized to commit a crime, but he must be acting within the scope of his real or apparent authority.[35] When a subsidiary of a corporation is acting as an agent for the parent corporation, the corporation may be liable for crimes committed by the subsidiary based on the same rules as regards agents generally.

Although it is clear that a corporation may be charged for willful criminal violations of its officer, directors, employees or agents,[36] it would appear to be within the power of Congress to expand a corporation's responsibility for criminal acts beyond traditional notions of agency. For instance, Congress may constitutionally impose criminal liability upon a business entity for acts or omissions of its agents within the scope of their employment, even if the acts were contrary to express instructions.[37] Courts have imposed criminal liability upon a corporation for acts undertaken by employees which benefited the employees, and were done without the actual or constructive knowledge of the rest of the corporation, based on prevention of injury to the public interest.[38] Further, the failure of a corporation's officers to detect an on-going conspiracy which it had unwittingly become involved as a result of a merger was held sufficient basis to hold the corporation criminally liable.[39]

Where a company was in the business of developing potentially harmful products for distribution in interstate commerce, it was held that the company could be held responsible for the acts of a distributor who adulterated the product to be shipped. In United States v. Parfait Powder Puff Co.,[40] the Seventh Circuit held that the liability of the defendant, a manufacturing company, was imputed from the violations by a distributor of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act, which penalizes anyone who commits certain acts or "causes" them to be committed.[41] The court disregarded arguments whether the distributor was an agent or an independent contractor, and noted that the defendant had engaged in the distribution of the article into commerce. The fact that the defendant had used another company as an "instrumentality" would not relieve the farmer of the burden of being held responsible for the criminal violations.[42] The court noted that Congress had, in balancing hardships, preferred to place the burden upon those who had the best opportunity to inform themselves of the conditions that existed.[43]

3. The Hypothetical Application of Criminal or Civil Penalties to the Toshiba Corporation

As noted previously, there would appear to be problems characterizing the sanctions which are proposed by the Garn amendment as founded in congressional powers to create criminal or civil penalties. However, the hypothetical question may be raised whether a United States company with the characteristics of Toshiba Corporation, with a relationship similar to the relationship between the Toshiba Corporation and Toshiba Machine, would be held liable for illegal technology diversion by the subsidiary. This inquiry is beyond the scope of this memorandum. However, it would appear that some activities between the two companies that would justify "piercing the corporate veil" would have to exist before either civil or criminal penalties would attach under existing court precedent and United States law. The caselaw would appear to indicate, however, that Congress could impose a positive duty upon a company to prevent illegal technology diversion by subsidiaries, and consequently could hold a U.S. parent company criminally or civilly liable for the action of its subsidiaries.

PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO PROTECT INTEREST EARNED ON STATE AND POLITICAL SUBDIVISION BONDS FROM FEDERAL TAXATION

● Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support as an original cosponsor for Senate Joint Resolution 28, a proposed constitutional amendment that will restore constitutional protection from Federal taxation of interest earned on bonds issued for a public purpose by States or their political subdivisions.

The Supreme Court on April 20, 1988, struck down, in South Carolina versus Baker, a number of earlier decisions upholding the tax-exempt status of State, city, county, school district, and other political subdivision bonds.

I believe, as many others, that this decision was not correctly decided and that such bonds are tax exempt under the 10th amendment to the Constitution and the doctrine of federalism.

The power of the individual States to raise revenue by their own means apart from the Federal Government is consistent with our Constitution. Yet, the recent Supreme Court decision continues an all too apparent erosion of the doctrine of federalism and expands the power of the Federal Government beyond that which is allowed under our Constitution.

The proposed constitutional amendment would prohibit the Congress from imposing taxes on interest earned from bonds issued for a public purpose by the States or their political subdivisions.

Although we believe that the current language will resolve the situation, Senator ROTH and I are open to suggestions from our colleagues and others which will improve upon this proposed constitutional amendment.

Mr. President, this proposed constitutional amendment will allow the States and their political subdivisions to continue the practices of issuing bonds as an important fiscal tool and free from Federal intervention. These bonds provided much needed revenues for the construction of schools, hospitals, roads, and other worthy public projects.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution and its swift passage so we may submit it to the States for their ratification.●

RECOGNIZING THE DISTINGUISHED SERVICE OF COL. DAVID L. DONLEY

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to express my regard and respect for Col. David L. Donley, who after 29 years of distinguished service is retiring from the U.S. Air Force. Colonel Donley served his country as the Deputy Chief of Staff of Aerospace Sciences in the Headquarters Air Weather Service at Scott Air Force Base in Belleville, IL. Colonel Donley was responsible for directing Air Weather Service programs for improving the quality and accuracy of weather support provided by seven weather wings to Army, Air Force, and other DOD operations worldwide. Those who know him and worked with him will miss his hard work and strong effort in this capacity. I know that Colonel Donley can look with pride upon his years of service and I wish him well in the future.●

RECESS UNTIL 2 P.M., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1989

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 2 p.m. on Thursday, February 2, 1989.

The motion was agreed to and, at 6 p.m., the Senate recessed until 2 p.m., Thursday, February 2, 1989.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 31, 1989:

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

TEACHING VALUES

HON. TONY P. HALL
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing, with bipartisan support, legislation to create a commission on Values Education to help determine how we can better prepare people to become productive members of society. The purpose of this legislation is to examine the issues associated with the teaching of values in the schools, and to identify the consensus of basic values that Americans want promoted in the schools.

Over the last year, I have spoken to parents, teachers, school administrators, students, and people in different professions and of many backgrounds who support teaching civic values in our schools. I am convinced that Americans want to promote our common values, values like honesty, integrity, tolerance, self-respect, and respect for others. A set of common values were practiced by our Founding Fathers and are at the roots of our democracy.

Mr. Speaker, an estimated 3,000 hate-related crimes against persons of a particular race or religion have been documented by the Center for Democratic Renewal. More than 130,000 teachers are assaulted by their students each school year. In the last 15 years, the rate of teen suicides has gone up by 50 percent. By the end of high school 61 percent of our students will have used drugs in some form at some time.

In addition, more than 100 high level government officials have faced allegations of questionable activities, and business ethics scandals are being compared to the reckless 1920's. Our country has faced Watergate, Abscam, and Irangate.

I fear that our Nation is plunging into a national moral recession. We are raising a generation of children who have lost sight of the common values that help distinguish between right and wrong. A mastery over academic subjects alone will not prepare the next generation with the tools necessary to carry on our society's basic ethical values.

Mr. Speaker, our Founding Fathers practiced values that are timeless. Our country's past struggles and equality, justice, and tolerance and the lessons learned should not be ignored. The 1960's and 1970's saw a move toward "values free" teaching in which students were given the options but no guidance toward answers. Now, many educators agree that schools should teach civic values and take clear positions on right or wrong behavior.

While family, churches, and synagogues should be the primary source of one's values, schools should help prepare students to distinguish between right and wrong, and to make tough choices when there are gray areas or when values seem to conflict.

Recently, many public officials have called for a return to our basic values, but very little is said about how to do this. My bill can start the process by creating a bipartisan national Commission on Values Education to examine what people are saying and what local school districts are doing. While education should remain a local concern, the Federal Government has always played a support role, and it should develop a coherent Federal policy to stimulate local action with respect to values. The Commission will report back to Congress and the President within a year with its recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of our colleagues, I submit the following bill:

H.R. 733

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Commission on Values Education Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. PURPOSE.

The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to establish a commission to examine the issues associated with the teaching of values in elementary, secondary, and post-secondary schools, and in institutions of higher learning;

(2) to recommend to the President and to Congress how the Federal Government, through executive action and legislation, can promote the teaching of values in American schools, including (but not limited to) encouraging the offering of independent courses on values, and the integration of values in existing courses;

(3) to explore and assess a variety of approaches to teaching values;

(4) to identify those values supported by a consensus of Americans as essential to a complete education and preparation for becoming productive members of society, and which may be appropriately endorsed and promoted by the Federal Government; and

(5) to identify the ways in which judgments of values and of right and wrong are implicated in matters of public and private concern.

SEC. 3. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) many Americans no longer make determinations of right and wrong as to their own actions or the actions of others, and this phenomenon crosses economic, social, religious, and age lines, and is evident in matters of both public and private concern;

(2) institutions of education, which have traditionally played a role in assisting students to make such determinations, have abdicated this responsibility;

(3) this abdication is evident in a national epidemic of incidents in which people have failed to consider the ethics governing their behavior, in governmental and political activities, scientific research, and business and commerce;

(4) statistics show alarming increases in the incidence of teenage pregnancy, drug and substance abuse, and suicide among both young people and adults;

(5) polls reflect that Americans overwhelmingly prize values such as honesty, but believe that people are less honest today than in the past;

(6) this national moral recession has impaired the proper functioning of our system of democratic government;

(7) leaders across a wide spectrum of political, social, and religious beliefs believe that education for democracy must extend to education in moral issues, and have called for strengthening the teaching of democratic values; and

(8) while education remains the responsibility of local and State government, the Congress and Federal Government may appropriately provide assistance to educational agencies and institutions attempting to include values education in their curriculums.

SEC. 4. ESTABLISHMENT.

There is hereby established a Commission on Values Education, hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Commission".

SEC. 5. DUTIES.

The Commission shall—

(1) consider the widest range of values for inclusion in the consensus of values that should be taught, including traditional Judeo-Christian values, honesty, integrity, tolerance, self-discipline, self-respect, civility, importance of family, justice, equality, the rule of law, individual rights, the common good, love of country, love of knowledge, responsibility and accountability, protection of oneself and others from degradation and abuse;

(2) conduct interviews, meetings, hearings, and conferences in various regions and localities in the United States to gather the opinions of a wide variety of individuals, including educators and educational administrators, students, parents, philosophers and theologians, civic, religious, and professional leaders, social service professionals, political leaders, persons prominent in the arts, entertainment, and sports, and concerned citizens;

(3) report its findings and recommendations to Congress and the President not later than one year after the enactment of this Act;

(4) include in such report its recommendations for specific legislation or executive actions, as well as broad policy goals and objectives;

(5) include in such report a recommendation as to the establishment within the Federal Government of a clearinghouse for current programs and ideas on values education;

(6) include in such report a recommendation to Congress as to the appropriateness of institutional changes in the House of Representatives and the Senate, including the establishment of a Select Committee on Values Education;

(7) seek the cooperation, advice, and assistance of the Department of Education and such other Federal, State, and local agencies, and private and religious organizations, institutions, and associations, as may be helpful in carrying out its purposes and duties;

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

(8) recognize those individuals and institutions which have demonstrated outstanding success in teaching values; and

(9) identify the potential of values education for reducing the incidence of such problems as those mentioned in section 3(4) of this Act.

SEC. 6. MEMBERSHIP AND APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION.

(a) MEMBERSHIP.—The Commission shall be composed of 17 members as follows:

(1) Seven members each appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the majority leader of the Senate, in consultation with the respective minority leaders, from among individuals who are broadly representative of, but not restricted to, the following groups:

(A) professional educators and educational administrators;

(B) parents of students at elementary, secondary, and postsecondary levels;

(C) students at secondary and post-secondary levels;

(D) philosophers, theologians, and religious leaders;

(E) State and local elected and appointed government officials, including members of State and local boards of educations;

(F) persons prominent in sports, the arts, and entertainment;

(G) persons active in business, the professions, or civic activities;

(H) social service professionals; and

(I) the general public.

(2) One member each of the House of Representatives and the Senate, designated by the Speaker of the House and the majority leader of the Senate, respectively.

(3) The Secretary of Education or his designee.

(b) VACANCIES.—A vacancy in the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

(c) TERMS.—Members of the Commission shall be appointed for the life of the Commission.

(d) CO-CHAIRS OF THE COMMISSION.—The Speaker of the House and the majority leader of the Senate shall each designate one of their appointees as co-chair of the Commission.

SEC. 7. COMPENSATION.

(a) PAY.—Members of the Commission shall serve without compensation.

(b) TRAVEL EXPENSES.—Members of the Commission shall be allowed reasonable travel expenses, including a per diem allowance, in accordance with section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, when performing duties of the Commission.

SEC. 8. POWERS.

(a) MEETINGS.—The Commission shall first meet not more than 30 days after the date on which members are appointed, and the Commission shall meet thereafter upon the call of the chair or a majority of the members.

(b) HEARINGS AND SESSIONS.—The Commission may hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, and receive such evidence as the Commission considers appropriate. The Commission may administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses appearing before it.

(c) ACCESS TO INFORMATION.—The Commission may secure directly from any Federal agency information necessary to enable it to carry out this title. Upon the request of co-chair of the Commission, the head of such agency shall furnish such information to the Commission.

(d) EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR.—The co-chairs of the Commission shall select an executive director of the Commission, who shall be paid at a rate no greater than that payable for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule.

(e) STAFF.—The executive director shall appoint such staff members as may be necessary to perform the work of the Commission. In allocating authorized, appropriated, and contributed funds, priority shall be given to those activities, such as hearings and conferences, designed to elicit the broadest public participation in the Commission's deliberations, rather than to the payment of professional staff.

(f) GIFTS AND BEQUESTS.—The Commission is authorized to accept, use, solicit, and dispose of donations of money, property, or personal services to perform the duties hereinbefore described. No donation may be accepted which prescribes or limits the purpose for which it may be used, or which exceeds $25,000 in the case of an individual donor, or $100,000 in the case of a corporation, partnership, association, or other organization or business association.

(g) USE OF SERVICES AND FACILITIES.—Upon the request of the Commission, the head of any Federal agency may make available to the Commission any of the facilities and services of such agency.

(h) PERSONNEL FROM OTHER AGENCIES.—Upon the request of the Commission, the head of any Federal agency may detail any of the personnel of such agency to assist the Commission in carrying out its duties.

SEC. 9. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title $300,000 for fiscal year 1989, and such sum as may be necessary for fiscal year 1990. Amounts appropriated pursuant to this section are authorized to remain available until expended.

SEC. 10. TERMINATION.

The Commission shall terminate 30 days after the date of the submission of its final report to the Congress.

SEC. 11. CONGRESSIONAL HEARINGS REQUIRED.

Within 90 days after the submission of the Commission's report to the Congress, the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate shall conduct hearings on such report and the recommendations contained therein and shall report to their respective houses on the results of those hearings within 30 days after the completion of the hearing.

DOE APPLIANCE RULE

HON. CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Ms. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues well know, we are faced with a formidable list of environmental concerns such as acid rain, urban smog, ozone depletion, and the global greenhouse effect. It is incumbent upon us to seek ways to alleviate these problems while at the same time spurring economic productivity.

One clear area of opportunity is in establishing appliance efficiency standards. As you know, this body overwhelmingly passed the National Appliance Energy Conservation Act in the 99th Congress. I am sorry to report that the Department of Energy's first proposed rule mandated by the NAECA is woefully insufficient.

On January 30, 1989, I submitted the following comments to the Department of Energy on behalf of myself and 53 of my colleagues in the House of Representatives.

Re Department of Energy's "Three Products Rulemaking," Docket No. CAS-RM-87-102.

DEAR SIRS: This Proposed Rulemaking is the first major DOE action in response to the National Appliance Energy Conservation Act of 1987 (NAECA). This law mandated the setting and periodic review for increasing minimum appliance efficiency levels for refrigerators, freezers, televisions and small furnaces. This rulemaking is of utmost important for alleviating major environmental problems like acid rain and the global greenhouse effect, for reducing energy consumption and foreign oil imports, and for saving consumers billions of dollars. A more realistic rulemaking would achieve more than 14,000 Megawatts of power savings or the equivalent of 14 large coal or nuclear plants, or over $15 billion in consumer savings as well as significant reductions within the decade of ozone-depleting chlorofluorocarbons used in refrigerators.

Moreover, the outcome of this rulemaking establishes a significant precedent for guiding the future process by which energy efficiency standards for other appliances will be set.

Given the multiple benefits which follow from a well-crafted rule, we are dismayed at the failure of DOE's rulemaking to adhere to the mandate established by Congress. DOE correctly notes on page 48799 that "any new or amended standard is required to be designed so as to achieve the maximum improvement in energy efficiency that is technologically feasible and economically justified." The proposal simply does not meet its own legal mandate.

The Notice of Proposed Rulemaking is fundamentally flawed in three important ways: (1) its failure to base the proposed rule on the supporting analysis; (2) its refusal to evaluate all commercially feasible technologies as the basis for establishing appropriate standards; and, (3) the use of biased economic parameters that make reasonable applicance efficiency improvements appear less beneficial than they really are.

In the case of both refrigerators and television sets, DOE's own analysis shows higher levels of technologically feasible and economically justified energy efficiency than those subsequently found in the proposed rule. This is in direct conflict with the legislative mandate. DOE has arbitrarily set weaker standards than those specified. In order to do the minimum to obey the law, DOE is obligated to set standards for refrigerators and freezers at "Engineering Design Level" 11, which is between its "Standard Levels" 4 and 5. However, DOE's proposed rule sets a range of possible standards from "no change" to "Standard Level" 3, with a "no standard level" for televisions. The results of this ruling will create a loss of at least 4.6 quads of savings over the next 23 years or 2800 megawatts annually of lost energy due to inefficiency.

The second major shortcoming of the proposed rule is DOE's refusal to give fair consideration to numerous energy efficient technologies, particularly those that eliminate dependence on ozone-depleting chlorofluorocarbons (CFC) The notice dismissed many of these available technologies with unsubstantiated and cursory remarks. Savings due to the use of new technologies has been predicted to exceed 14,000 megawatts worth of electric power, including 1 billion barrels of oil and gas equivalent, approximately the amount of yield expected to be gained from the proposed California coast drilling project. This failure is particularly egregious given the detailed responses provided to DOE through the Advanced Notice of Rulemaking.

The third major failing of the notice is the arbitrary selection of 7% as the forecasted discount rate for the next twenty five years. The inflated estimate is not purely a harmless exaggeration. It seriously biases the economic analysis against energy efficiency improvements in favor of new energy supply.

While we agree with DOE recommendations for small furnaces, we find the proposed rule unacceptable for refrigerators, freezers and televisions. This is a matter of precedence and must be taken seriously. The legal mandate calls for maximum efficiency that is technologically feasible and economically justified. This mandate must be fulfilled through rulemaking calling for the higher efficiency standards noted above.

MEDICARE TRAUMA CARE AND EMERGENCY SERVICES QUALITY ASSURANCE ACT OF 1989

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing legislation to amend Medicare to provide for the creation of trauma networks in every State.

There has been great improvement in the quality of emergency care in the United States, but not enough attention has been given to the very specialized problems of trauma. One out of every 12 deaths in the U.S. is from trauma and it is estimated that 80 percent of the severely injured never get appropriate care.

In fact, only 10 percent of American communities are served by an effective trauma system.

Trauma is not an age-specific disease. Severe injury affects all age groups. Trauma is the No. 1 killer of children under 14 and is responsible for four-fifths of the deaths that occur between ages 15 and 24.

Seniors, as well, are especially vulnerable to deaths and handicaps from accidents. Approximately 30,000 persons age 65 or older die of injuries each year. Patients over age 65 have two to three times the risk of dying from their injuries than those under age 65.

When treating trauma victims, time is of the essence. The key word is "prompt." Trauma experts speak of the "golden hour" after injury during which the victim's life could be saved by proper treatment, but too often is not. Immediate treatment saves lives and restores the victim to an optimal functional level.

Today, unfortunately, prompt treatment for trauma is not the norm. Due to the lack of an organized structure in which to deliver effective and efficient treatment, appropriate trauma care is often delayed. Preventable death or disability is a common outcome.

Trauma centers are hospitals with highly-skilled surgical teams on duty around the clock. Patients suffering life-threatening injuries are rushed to these centers where the trauma team's quick response can save their lives.

Trauma systems organized on a regional basis have been shown to reduce preventable deaths from injury and to improve patient outcomes. For example, in Orange County, CA prior to the organization of the trauma system, preventable deaths reached 34 percent; following organization of the system, preventable deaths dropped to 15 percent. Similar examples are available from around the country.

The treatment of trauma victims is expensive. Given the rapid growth in charity care to the poor and uninsured and tight reimbursement by private and public payers on behalf of the insured, hospitals have found that being a trauma center is less an honor and a mark of distinction than it is an invitation to red ink.

For example, the trauma systems in Los Angeles County, CA and in my own area of Alameda County, CA are under severe stress due to the increasing indigent care loads which the trauma system brings to the hospitals. I am also reintroducing today legislation to deal directly with this problem entitled the Hospital Indigent Care Assistance Act of 1989. In addition, the trauma legislation calls for a study to determine the adequacy of Medicare's payments for trauma, with particular emphasis on outlier payments.

I believe that an up-to-date regional trauma care system is within our grasp. In my view it is entirely appropriate for the Medicare program to insist that the elderly are treated for trauma in the appropriate setting. The only way this can happen is for each State to develop such a system and to require hospitals to participate in it based upon the role the system sets out for them. That is what the legislation I am introducing today would do and I commend it to my colleagues' attention.

A summary of the bill follows:

MEDICARE TRAUMA CARE AND EMERGENCY SERVICES QUALITY ASSURANCE ACT OF 1989

SECTION-BY-SECTION DESCRIPTION

I. Reductions in Medicare Payment for States Without Trauma Plans.

Provides that the Medicare weighting factor under the prospective payment system for trauma-related cases in hospitals in states without and trauma and emergency services plan will be considered to be zero. This will have the effect of reducing payment to zero but the hospital will still have an obligation to provide the service.

A hospital in a state with a plan will be required to provide evidence satisfactory to the Secretary that it complies with the standards and guidelines of the plan.

II. Development of Statewide Trauma and Emergency Medical Service Plans.

A trauma plan must provide for designation of hospitals as trauma centers, specify standards for pre-hospital care and emergency transport, and specify standards for inter-hospital transfers.

The plan must be developed by an agency of state government designated by the Governor.

The plan must establish standards and criteria for the designation of Level I, II, and III trauma centers, taking into account geography, transport system capabilities, trauma center distribution, and population density.

III. Grants to States for Development and Implementation of Statewide Trauma and Emergency Medical Services Plans.

The Secretary shall make grants from the Medicare Part A Trust Fund to states to develop and implement statewide trauma and emergency medical services plans.

Each state may receive up to five cents per capita under this authority subject to a matching requirement of 60 cents in State funds for every 40 cents in Medicare funds.

IV. Study and Report.

The Secretary is required to study and report to Congress by March 1, 1991 on the adequacy of payment under Medicare for trauma discharges including payment for outliers.

TRIBUTE TO BAKERSFIELD COLLEGE

HON. WILLIAM M. THOMAS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an educational institution in my 20th District of California, Bakersfield College, whose football team last month won the coveted Potato Bowl and emerged as community college national champions. The runnin' Renegades secured the No. 1 ranking with the last-ditch 30-to-24 victory over another Golden State 11 from Fullerton College.

There is something particularly noteworthy about this momentous achievement for coach Carl Bowser and his players. Much attention in this country is paid to the big, major college football teams where players are given scholarships covering their tuition and boarding costs. For many of these players, football is an all-consuming passion leaving little room for the academics for which these colleges exist.

This is not the case at Bakersfield Community College, where the students are on their own and taking the initiative in getting an education that will help them later in life. That is the goal of community colleges, and it is with that spirit of independence and seriousness that the Renegades won the national championship. It is a testament to this team that they embody in its purest sense the term "student-athlete."

The Renegade victory is particularly pleasing to me inasmuch as I taught for 9 years at BC and am currently on leave as a professor in the political science department. I am extremely proud of the team, its coach, and its loyal fans. This was a total effort by a group of young people who are well aware of the ingredients for success on the football field and in life.

KEEP NEW JERSEY SHORE PROTECTED

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn the attention of my colleagues to a fellow Member, Mr. BILL HUGHES, to commend Mr. HUGHES for speaking out and bringing attention to a problem which concerns all of us in the New Jersey delegation. That problem is the preservation of the Jersey shore.

The shoreline of our great State has taken a beating lately, and those of us from New Jersey have had to fight to keep it beautiful. I was pleased to join Mr. HUGHES as he spearheaded the effort to curtail sewage dumping, and was likewise grateful to have his support and involvement in controlling the problem of medical waste which plagued our beaches this past year.

Now, once again, it seems our shoreline may face another threat, and that is the intrusion of offshore oil drilling. This threat cannot go unnoticed, and I would like to ask that the following editorial of December 23, 1988, from the Gloucester County Times of Woodbury, NJ, be included in this RECORD.

DON'T RISK ADDING OIL TO N.J. SHORE MESS

New Jersey beaches have been fouled by medical wastes, sewage, rotting lumber and other assorted forms of garbage in recent months—but not by oil.

Let's keep it that way.

The lack of oil contamination could be interpreted as a tribute to the care taken by companies that drilled for oil and gas in the Atlantic Ocean off the New Jersey coast.

The fact is there's been no drilling in the area since 1983; so there's been no chance of an accident that could cause environmental damage. Some people in the federal government would like to renew the drilling. Others, quite rightly, oppose the renewal of the offshore gas and oil exploration program.

Last year, the Interior Department published an inquiry in the Federal Register to assess industry interest in again leasing and exploring in the offshore area from Rhode Island to North Carolina. Several oil companies responded.

The Interior Department is now working on an environmental impact statement that is to be completed early next year. When that is ready, the agency could again lease tracts to companies interested in drilling exploratory wells.

There are valid economic and environmental grounds for halting further exploration for oil in the Mid-Atlantic region.

Tourism is a major industry in New Jersey. For our state, maintaining a clean environment is far more than an elitist concern for nature. It is a dollar-and-cents issue that affects jobs and investment.

The seafood industry, which has been badly hurt by pollution of the ocean, bays and wetlands, also is important to New Jersey's economy.

If major oil resources were located off the New Jersey coast, perhaps—under a national policy of energy conservation and self-sufficiency—new offshore exploration could be justified. That is not the case. We lack a national energy policy, and evidence indicates only meager oil and gas deposits in the area.

Between 1976 and 1983, 32 exploratory wells were drilled in the mid-Atlantic region. Only five produced oil or gas, and none in amounts sufficient to be profitable.

Why risk further environmental damage to our shores when the probable benefits are so small?

"The ecosystem is certainly as stressed as it can possibly be without being in serious jeopardy from offshore drilling," said Cindy Zipf, coordinator of Clean Ocean Action, a coalition of environmental groups.

Rep. William Hughes, D-2d Dist., also has spoken out against the Interior Department's plans. He says the new five-year program is too heavily weighted toward drilling in environmentally sensitive areas, and does not provide enough protection for marine and coastal resources.

A lot of effort is going into making sure New Jersey has no repeat performances of last summer's episodes of ocean and beach contamination. More needs to be done, including preventing development at the shore from ruining the very features that draw people to it. We do not need the additional threat of contamination from an accident at an offshore oil well.

THE RESCUE OF THE FREIGHTER SHIP, "YARRAWONGA"

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the heroic actions of the three United States squadrons stationed in the United Kingdom who performed an extraordinary rescue mission under the most extreme weather conditions in the North Atlantic.

On January 14, 1989, crewmembers from the 21st Special Operations Squadron [SOS], the 67th Special Operations Squadron, and Det 4, 1730 Pararescue Squadron stationed at RAF Woodbridge, UK rescued 32 sailors in the North Atlantic Ocean, 500 miles off the coast of Ireland. The Cypriot registered freighter, Yarrawonga, was in imminent danger of breaking up due to hurricane-force winds, high seas, and its inability to maneuver because of lost boiler power. The 827 foot freighter had already sustained holes as large as 200 square meters due to the weather conditions.

On the afternoon of January 13, 1989, British and United States rescue coordination centers requested that MH-53J Pave Low helicopters from the 21 SOS and HC-130 helicopter refueling tankers from the 67 SOS, rescue the Yarrawonga's crew. These two squadrons, part of the 39th Special Operations Wing at Eglin AFB, FL, and the Air Force Special Operations Command—also known as 23d Air Force—at Hurlburt Field, FL, are specially trained for night, adverse weather flying over extended distances. The 67 SOS had to call HC-130 tankers to refuel the helicopters. No other foreign or domestic resources could have effected this mission.

The crews were forced to postpone the operation until the morning of January 14, 1989, to let the storm abate. The day of the rescue the winds were still blowing approximately 50 to 60 knots with 30 to 40 foot waves. The helicopters were met at the freighter by an HC-130 tanker from Iceland—the freighter was 720 NM south of Iceland—to refuel before attempting the pickup. The MH-130 could not land on the ship, so pararescuemen [PJ's] were lowered onto the ship to aid the sailors. Amidst the gusting winds and wet, heaving deck, the PJ's proceeded to put three people at a time on the hoist to be lifted into the helicopter. Extreme caution and concentration was required during the extraction to preclude slamming the victims into the ship while the freighter and the helicopter were being buffeted by the wind and seas. The Pave Low helicopters were then refueled by a second HC-130 tanker this time from RAF Woodbridge, and flew to Shannon, Ireland.

The heroic effort by these special operations crewmembers saved 32 human lives in extremely dangerous weather conditions. They are to be commended for their actions and the pride and honor they have brought to themselves and to the United States of America. These crewmembers were:

TRIBUTE TO PARAMEDIC ANDREA CAMERLO

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, in Armstrong, Westmoreland, Butler, and Allegheny Counties, Andrea Camerlo, Paramedic II of the Freeport Volunteer Fire Co. and Ambulance Service, is regarded as one of the best paramedics assisting other ambulance services. She assists other services at least twice a week. There is almost never a day that she is not involved in some type of activity for the Freeport Ambulance Service.

The senior citizens in the Freeport, PA area call her their "Guardian Angel" because of her frequent trips to their senior citizen apartment complex in emergency situations and because of her calm manner in attending them.

She is the only paramedic in Armstrong County to be awarded the "Paramedic of the Year" award twice, in 1985 and again in 1988. She has also received the "Most Active Ambulance Personnel" award of the Freeport Ambulance Service where she is assistant ambulance corps commander, and one of the most active each year.

Andrea has paid for her own training as an E.M.T., Paramedic I and II. She is also qualified in intubation, a complicated procedure involving the introduction of tubes into the body. She is a paramedic preceptor for the Freeport Ambulance Service and other local services and volunteers to help train new paramedics in the field.

Andrea joined the Freeport Ambulance Service in 1982. She heads the ambulance billing committee which provides most of the funds needed for day to day operation, spending at least 10 to 12 hours per week doing billing and paper work. She handles the scheduling of routine ambulance transfers through Rainbow Control.

Despite being hospitalized and ill for over a month this year, she has participated in over 240 civic activities. Freeport and the Allegheny Kiski Valley of the Fourth Congressional District are fortunate to have a volunteer of her caliber.

GAS TAX

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, Congress will soon be heavily involved in budget negotiations and in searching for ways to address the deficit. One of the proposals for reducing the deficit has been to increase the gas tax—a proposal that should immediately be rejected.

Gas taxes have been used for years to fund transportation projects. The pay-as-you-go approach helped to build the interstate highway system that we are so proud of today. This approach makes sense, so that those who use our transportation systems, most, pay for what they use.

Expanding the use of the gas tax to raise revenue for the general fund, and thereby reduce the deficit, would not only be extremely regressive, but also has the potential of damaging our economy and reducing the amount of gas tax revenues available for the individual States to use on their own transportation projects.

The deficit is a problem that must be addressed by this Congress, this year. But the answer does not lie in a tax that unfairly penalizes those people who live in rural communities or those involved in industry dependent on the availability of motorfuels.

My own district covers 16 counties, including a great deal of rural farmland. My constituents don't have the choice of utilizing mass transit—they are forced to drive to get to work and carry out their daily lives. They should not be forced to make up for the overspending that has occurred in many other areas of government.

Recently House Resolution 41, a resolution expressing opposition to the notion of a gas tax, was introduced in the House of Representatives. I hope all of my colleagues will join in cosponsoring this resolution.

We need to find a fair and equitable way of solving the deficit problem, and increasing the gas tax is not the answer.

MID-VALLEY UNIT ACT

HON. RICHARD H. LEHMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, today I am joined by my California colleagues, the Honorable CHIP PASHAYAN, TONY COELHO, and BILL THOMAS in introducing legislation to authorize the construction of the Mid-Valley Canal as an integrated unit of the Federal Central Valley project. Once constructed, the canal will transport up to 500,000 acre-feet of surface water to help reduce ground water overdraft in the Mid-Valley service area.

The 2.8 million acres in Fresno, King, Kern, Madera, Merced, and Tulare Counties that make up the Mid-Valley service area is one of the most productive regions in the world, producing a wide variety of crops. Although a significant portion of the acreage is planted to permanent crops, a variety of other crops are also produced. For several decades, both ground water overdraft and stored surface water supported the irrigated agriculture practices required in the semiarid region. Through the use of sophisticated irrigation technologies and conservation practices, the Mid-Valley service area has maximized the efficient use of the supply that is now available.

However, recent hydrological studies of regional groundwater aquifers indicate that there could be as much as 440,000 acres of this productive farm land forced out of production despite efforts to conserve. In fact, ground water overdraft is estimated to be 1.5 million acre-feet annually. Only additional surface water can prevent the economic loss that such acreage reductions will bring.

The Mid-Valley unit, in addition to some new construction, will rely primarily on existing facilities and transfer agreements as a means to transport additional surface supplies available in the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta.

The Bureau of Reclamation has been performing the necessary feasibility studies and is expected to release that report early this year. The status report released in 1987 provided the opportunity for a field hearing and it is anticipated that further hearings will be scheduled to coincide with the release of the feasibility study.

The following is the text of the bill:

H.R. 738

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Mid-Valley Unit Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) there is need for a federally constructed project to serve approximately 4 million acres of irrigated agricultural lands located in Merced, Madera, Fresno, Tulare, Kings, and Kern Counties, California;

(2) there is presently an overdraft of groundwater in these counties that would be alleviated by providing irrigation, municipal, and industrial water supplies;

(3) a federally constructed project would facilitate optimum conjunctive use and reuse of surface and underground water supplies enhancing the agricultural stability of the San Joaquin Valley; and

(4) fish and wildlife resources and outdoor recreation opportunities would be enhanced by construction of a project.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION.

(a) AUTHORIZATION.—The Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary"), acting pursuant to the Federal reclamation laws (Act of June 17, 1902, 32 Stat. 388, and Acts amendatory thereof supplementary thereto), is authorized to construct, operate, and maintain the Mid-Valley Unit as an addition to and an integral part of the Central Valley Project, California, upon completion of a favorable Planning Report/EIS on the San Joaquin Valley Conveyance Investigation.

(b) PRINCIPAL WORKS.—The principal works of the Mid-Valley Unit shall consist of pumping plants, pumping generator plants, power plants, power transmission facilities, canals, channels, levees, drains, flood control works, pipelines, regulating reservoirs, off-stream and on-stream storage reservoirs, deep wells and pumps, and distribution systems and facilities consistent with the recommendations of relevant planning documents. The Secretary is authorized and directed to utilize, whenever feasible, existing water supplies and conveyance and storage facilities.

(c) PROVISION OF WATER.—The Secretary is authorized to provide water supplies for the irrigation of approximately 4 million acres of land in Merced, Madera, Fresno, Tulare, Kings, and Kern Counties, as identified in the Planning Report/EIS on the San Joaquin Valley Conveyance Investigation.

SEC. 4. FISH AND WILDLIFE ENHANCEMENT AND RECREATION.

The conservation and development of the fish and wildlife resources and the enhancement of recreation opportunities in connection with the Mid-Valley Unit shall be in accordance with the provisions of the Fish and Wildlife Coordination Act (16 U.S.C. 661 et seq.) and the Federal Water Project

Recreation Act (79 Stat. 213; 16 U.S.C. 4601-12 et seq.).

SEC. 5. WATER DELIVERY AND STORAGE AGREEMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized and directed to—

(1) execute a contract with the State of California or other persons for the wheeling, delivery, exchange, and storage of water through the facilities of the State Water Project of California or other facilities for use in the Mid-Valley Unit; and

(2) execute contracts with the State of California or other persons for the construction or enlargement of conveyance and storage facilities for joint use.

(b) COSTS.—For the purposes of allocating the costs associated with the contracts referred to in subsection (a)—

(1) the portion of any facility utilized pursuant to a contract referred to in subsection (a)(1) shall be treated as an integral part of the Central Valley Project and the costs associated with such utilization shall be treated as operation and maintenance costs of a component of the Central Valley Project; and

(2) the portion of any facility constructed or enlarged pursuant to a contract referred to in subsection (a)(2) shall be treated as an integral part of the Central Valley Project and the costs associated with such construction or enlargement shall be treated as a reimbursable capital repayment obligation of the Central Valley Project.

SEC. 6. LOCAL COST-SHARING AGREEMENTS.

The Secretary may enter into agreements with the Mid-Valley Water Authority, a California Joint Powers Authority, for the provision of all or any portion of the authorized distribution facilities as the local contribution to the cost of the project.

SEC. 7. STATE AND LOCAL PUBLIC INTEREST.

In locating and designing the works and facilities authorized for construction by this Act, and in acquiring or withdrawing any lands as authorized by this Act, the Secretary shall give due consideration to relevant reports by the State of California, and shall consult with local interests who may be affected by the construction and operation of the works and facilities or by the acquisition or withdrawal of lands, through public hearings or in such manner as in his discretion may be found best suited to a maximum expression of the views of such local interests.

SEC. 8. AUTHORIZATION OF FUNDS.

There is authorized to be appropriated for construction of the Mid-Valley Unit as authorized in this Act, the sum of $, plus or minus such amounts, if any, as may be justified by reason of ordinary fluctuations in construction costs as indicated by engineering cost indices applicable to the type of construction involved herein.

PUERTO RICO: A MAJOR BUYING POWER FROM THE UNITED STATES

HON. JAIME B. FUSTER

OF PUERTO RICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. FUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I am certain that my colleagues are aware of the special relationship that exists between Puerto Rico and the United States—a form of political association called commonwealth that benefits both San Juan and Washington. But my colleagues may not be aware that Puerto Rico, with a population of only 3.3 million, is one of the leading markets for American goods in the world.

These are some comparisons, as compiled by my good friend Scott Runkle, whose Washington-based public relations firm disseminates constructive information about the ongoing progress of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico:

Puerto Rico bought $7,344 million from the U.S. in 1987.

This exceeds the combined purchases of Brazil, Argentina, Colombia and Chile—leading American customers in South America, with an aggregate population of 228 million.

It also tops the combined purchases from the United States of Italy, Austria, Portugal and Greece, whose total population is 85 million.

Puerto Rico buys more from the U.S. than all the Near East Arabic countries, including oil-rich Saudi Arabia.

It buys more American goods than all the African countries combined, whose population is reported (by the U.N.) to be 645 million.

The island Commonwealth's ability to purchase so much from the United States reflects its rapidly expanding economy. Puerto Rico had a per capita income in 1940 of only $121 and was called the "poorhouse of the Caribbean". Now its per capita income of over $5,000 is the highest in the Hemisphere, excepting only the United States and Canada. Its GNP grew by 10% over the last two years—5.1% in fiscal year 1987 and 4.9% in fiscal 1988 (ending last June).

The industrial sector, with over 2,000 manufacturing plants, provides 42% of the island's net domestic income of $22.5 billion. It is the powerhouse of the economy, seconded by booming tourism trade which generated over $1 billion gross income last year. New industrial investment totaled $3 billion over the last three years; last year alone, 249 new industrial plants and projects were promoted to expand the island's manufacturing base.

Economic statistics alone do not reflect the enormous change in Puerto Rico. Students enrolled in higher education courses totaled 12,497 in 1950; in 1987 this figure reached 158,620. In a few decades, a new generation of well-educated, middle-class Puerto Ricans have become industrialists, bankers, engineers and professionals, a far cry from the bare-footed cane cutters of 40 years ago. In industrial plants, 90% of managers are now Puerto Ricans, and Puerto Rico has trained so many graduate engineers that NASA has recruited and employed 145 of them. Life expectancy soared from 46 years in 1940 to 74 years today.

PUERTO RICO'S OUTREACH TO AID DEVELOPMENT IN CARIBBEAN

Nor is Puerto Rico concerned only about its own progress. It has also launched an ambitious, far-reaching program to aid Caribbean and Central American countries to expand their own economies and train their personnel in a wide range of skills. This outreach has already made Puerto Rico the "keystone" of the Caribbean Basin Initiative, according to the U.S. Department of Commerce's spokesman, who adds: "We have our hats off to Puerto Rico." In two years, Puerto Rican promotional efforts have led to creation of 54 new industrial plants in 11 Caribbean Basin countries, with an investment of more than $55 million and creation of nearly 10,000 badly-needed jobs.

VIC FAZIO: A MEMBER'S MEMBER

HON. THOMAS J. MANTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call to the attention of my colleagues an article that appeared in this week's edition of National Journal regarding our colleague, VIC FAZIO. The article, which is entitled "Trouble Shooting Insider," details VIC's many tasks and accomplishments during his 10 years in the House. All of us who have had the pleasure of working with VIC know he is a skilled legislator. VIC knows how to extend the realm of the possible in politics and yet still achieve a result which is sound public policy. In this era, that is a talent which is rare indeed.

Mr. Speaker, I commend this article to my colleagues and ask that it be reprinted in the RECORD at this point.

TROUBLE-SHOOTING INSIDER

Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., has been a leading congressional spokesman for the proposed 50 per cent pay raise for top federal officials, including Members of Congress. As a result, he was ready for the considerable criticism directed at him by some constituents, columnists and Washington-based interest groups.

What bothers Fazio, however, is the impression that he regularly does the congressional leader's dirty work. Whatever the appearance, many Members would gladly change places and fill Fazio's role as one of the House's chief dealcutters and facilitators.

Unlike some influential lawmakers who select an issue and carefuly nurture it, Fazio is a trouble-shooter who usually deals with several at a time. That reflects both his self-starting propensity and his committee assignment—Appropriations, where members deal with the nuts and bolts of government and have little time for lofty policy debate. His activities there stem chiefly from his chairmanship of the Legislative Branch Subcommittee, which dishes out the $1.8 billion congressional budget, along with a variety of funds that affect California, notably defense and public works projects. His expertise in internal House matters also includes the subject of ethics, in which he is a leader in developing the reform package that the House is expected to consider in the coming weeks.

Fazio's skill in managing tasks has made him a popular resource for House leaders and rank-and-file Members alike. "He's Mr. Insider who understands the outside," said Majority Whip Tony Coelho, D-Calif. "Vic is the one who brings home the bacon for California. . . . People like him and go to him for their needs." The two are close friends, and Fazio was Coelho's campaign chairman in his 1986 bid for Whip.

One of many times when Fazio has helped his home state score a major victory at the Appropriations Committee came last year, when he led the effort to impose a one-year moratorium on California offshore oil drilling. The proposal has been strongly opposed by Louisiana Members, who argue that each energy-producing state should produce its fair share.

Pamela A. Barry, director of the California Democratic Congressional Delegation, said Fazio has succeeded because "he is a quick learner, he has an incredible grasp of information and he works both sides to find an effective compromise." Although the reach of the state's delegation—the largest, by far, in the House and still growing—sometimes offends other Members, California's voting strength makes the delegation difficult to ignore.

When his state's interests and the House's institutional problems are at stake, Fazio is willing to work with Republicans. But he also plays a leadership role on partisan fronts. He leads the fund-raising efforts of a committee of House Democrats from California and is working with colleagues to prepare for the state's critical 1991 House redistricting. And he has been active nationally in helping Democrats prepare for redistricting; with the backing of Speaker Jim Wright of Texas, Fazio heads "Impact 2000," a House Democratic group that raises money for, among other things, targeting legislative races in key states.

Perhaps to keep open his contacts with all sides, Fazio plays down his political partisanship. "I don't feel comfortable in being a strong ideologue," he said in a recent interview. "I'm a cementer. My comfort is working with people to attain a goal once the task is defined."

RELIEVING THIRD WORLD DEBT IN U.S. INTEREST

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, the terrible effect of crushing debt on many of the nations of Latin America is by far the most serious problem we face in this hemisphere. I never agreed with the enormous, negative consequences which President Reagan saw in the Sandinista government's continuation in power. But as I think about his assertions of our interest in combating the spread of radical, antidemocratic, regimes in the hemisphere, of the exacerbation this would cause of our immigration problems, of the undermining of democracy that would result, and of the terrible conditions in which people in Latin America would be forced to live, it seems clear that the role which Ronald Reagan mistakenly ascribes to the Sandinistas in fact is being played by the crushing debt burden of Argentina, Brazil, Mexico, and many other Latin America countries.

It is essential that the U.S. Government take the lead in reducing this debt burden. As long as the countries of Latin America are forced by a variety of pressures—including that of our own Government—to try to keep up full payments on this debt, the result will be increased poverty, destabilization, and a discrediting of democracy. The Baker plan did little to alleviate this situation. It is essential that our Government now take the lead in working with the banks that hold this debt to bring about a substantial reduction, recognizing the reality that it will not all be repaid, and taking affirmative steps so that the economies of our neighbors to the south do not continue to be devastated by the efforts to do what we all know cannot—and should not be done.

While our reasons for relieving this debt burden are many, and include I would hope a humanitarian impulse to prevent the continued lowering of living standards that this debt helps inflict on many of the poorest people in our hemisphere, there are self-interested reasons of a legitimate sort for America in reducing the debt burden. The people who are burdened by this debt in Latin America are among our natural customers in the world. And if their economies are free to begin once again to grow and to consume in a reasonable way, American growers, producers, and workers will be among the prime beneficiaries. For instance, the American Soybean Association recently sent to all of us in the Congress a thoughtful letter calling for a "conditional write-down of debt engaging the participation of industrialzed nations, lending institutions, and debtor developing countries." The American Soybean Association correctly pointed out that U.S. soybean farmers are especially hard hit by the debt crisis."

I cannot think of a more pressing case where enlightened self-interest requires a change in our policy. Instead of continuing to act as a collector for large—and now profitable and secured—commercial banks, our Government should be working with these banks to press them to accept reality, and write down the debt for a variety of strategic, commercial, and humanitarian reasons.

Mr. Speaker, as one example of the need for this, I ask that the American Soybean Association letter on the subject be printed here.

AMERICAN SOYBEAN ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, January 17, 1989.

Hon. BARNEY FRANK,
House of Representatives
Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE FRANK: The Third World debt crisis deserves and is receiving international attention. Leaders from Japan and France have separately forwarded relief proposals, Soviet leader Gorbachev addressed the issue in his U.N. speech, and leaders of indebted Latin American nations have met to discuss possibilities for an effective resolution. U.S. soybean farmers are also concerned about the problem of Third World debt. We urge the U.S. to assume the leading role in organizing an innovative, long-term solution.

The debt crisis has intensified a myriad of problems around the globe. The foreign debt of developing nations like Brazil has led directly to tropical deforestation. Forest burning and clearing is in turn responsible for a significant percentage of the global warming trend. This greenhouse effect has dangerous implications for the U.S. agricultural sector, including greater frequency of droughts and major crop losses.

In addition to these environmental threats, the debt crisis threatens our national security. Third World nations burdened with unpayable debt cannot develop economic or political stability. Infant democracies are endangered, and human rights are violated. Resentment and unrest are growing trends in many crucial Latin American political circles.

The need to acquire foreign exchange for debt payments encourages rash, destructive measures. Indebted developing nations are forced to adopt an "export at all costs" philosophy that curbs imports and ignores the malnourished of the Third World in favor of export earnings. U.S. farmers lose a potential marketplace for their goods and face greater competition in third-country markets from heavily subsidized exports of the Third World.

U.S. soybean farmers are especially hardhit by the debt crisis. Two of the largest debtors, Brazil and Argentina, are also our largest competitors. Even though both nations have widespread poverty and malnutrition, they must export their production of soybeans to gain the foreign exchange to service their foreign debts. Brazil and Argentina's debt-induced export dumping of their production causes U.S. farmers to lose more and more markets abroad.

The problem will not be successfully resolved without intervention. Third World nations cannot and will not repay the staggering amount of debt owed. The United States should develop and help implement a satisfactory solution. We believe that a reevaluation of the Baker plan is in order.

We maintain that the most effective plan for resolving the crisis includes a conditional write-down of debt engaging the participation of industrialized nations, lending institutions and debtor developing countries. Debt forgiveness and future lending plans are essential and must require recipient countries to pursue sound environmental, political and economic policy if the crisis is to be managed effectively.

International, multilateral cooperation is necessary to effect a long-term resolution.

Now is the time for concerted action by governments, religious groups, environmentalists, humanitarians, and the agricultural sector. We urge the 101st Congress and the new Administration to begin work toward an expedient solution.

Sincerely,

JAMES ADAMS,
President.

THE INTRODUCTION OF A BILL TO PROVIDE FOR THE DISPLAY OF THE NATIONAL LEAGUE OF FAMILIES POW/MIA FLAG AT U.S. DIPLOMATIC OR CONSULAR POSTS AND U.S. MILITARY BASES WORLDWIDE

HON. LEON E. PANETTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation to require each U.S. diplomatic or consular post and U.S. military base to fly the National League of Families POW/MIA flag until a sufficient accounting of our missing men in Indochina is made. Our country is still suffering from the scars of Vietnam. However, for most of this suffering is a memory that we tend to forget about when going about our busy lives. The stark memories of Vietnam are brought back to us at certain times, such as, a visit to the popular Vietnam Memorial in Washington, DC, or by movies and television shows depicting the Vietnam war. However, for one group of Americans the suffering and pain of Vietnam is not just a faded memory. It is a daily pain that they must endure because their father, son, husband, or brother is missing and unaccounted for in Vietnam, Cambodia, or Laos. Over 2,000 Americans are still listed as missing in action. These families live with a constant stream of questions about the location and welfare of their loved ones.

To its credit, the Reagan administration took a fairly active position on the POW/MIA issue. During the dedication for the Unknown Soldier from the Vietnam war, President Reagan declared "an end to America's involvement in Vietnam cannot come to an end before we've achieved the fullest accounting of these missing in action" and again rededicated this task as a "highest national priority." Since 1982 the administration has held high level negotiations with the Governments of Vietnam and Laos. As a result of these talks, remains of some Americans the Vietnamese listed as "died in captivity" in South Vietam have been returned. These are the first remains to be returned since the end of the war. Continued efforts are needed until all of the soldier are accounted for. It is my hope that the Bush administration will continue the efforts of the Reagan administration in this endeavor.

I introduced this measure to provide a symbol to the world that we have not forgotten those brave individuals who sacrified for our country. The flying of the National League of Families POW/MIA flag over Federal buildings is not unprecedented. In fact on POW/MIA Recognition Day, it flies over the U.S. Capitol, the White House, the Departments of State and Defense, and the Veterans' Administration. While military bases are already encouraged to fly the National League of Families POW/MIA flag on appropriate days, it would be more powerful if the flag was to fly at all times.

Strong bipartisan support for continued pursuit of the POW/MIA issue has been formed in Congress. To this end, Congress has passed legislation directing the President to secure a full accounting of Americans missing in Southeast Asia. In addition, in order to keep the issue of POW-MIA's current in the minds of the administration and the American people, Congress has passed legislation designating "POW/MIA Recognition Week". I believe that this legislation, which I am introducing today, will add to the past congressional efforts.

While such measures can do little to relieve the pain for American families that have suffered the loss of a loved one, I believe they represent an appropriate expression of our unending commitment to answering the MIA question. I urge my colleagues to join me on this measure which will provide a constant international reminder that there are still Americans unaccounted for in Indochina and that our commitment to them remains.

The following is the text of the bill:

H.R. 742

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DISPLAY OF POW/MIA FLAG.

The National League of Families POW/MIA flag shall be displayed at each United States diplomatic or consular post and military installation until the President determines that there has been the fullest possible accounting of the Americans who are imprisoned, missing, or unaccounted for as a result of the conflict in Southeast Asia.

SEC. 2. MANNER OF DISPLAY.

The National League of Families POW/MIA flag displayed pursuant to section 1 shall be displayed in such size and place as the Secretary of State or the Secretary of Defense may determine consistent with section 3 of the Joint Resolution entitled "Joint Resolution to codify and emphasize existing rules and customs pertaining to the display and use of the flag of the United States of America" (36 U.S.C. 175).

DEALING WITH COMMEMORATIVES

HON. CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Ms. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, in the 100th Congress I introduced legislation to establish a commission to advise the President of the United States on the enactment of commemorative events. Representative Whitehurst introduced this same bill in both the 98th and 99th Congress. This legislation attracted a bipartisan group of over 200 cosponsors in the 100th Congress. I and my colleagues who supported this legislation want to establish a more efficient, fair, and cost-effective procedure for considering commemorative events.

The present system for dealing with commemoratives consumes too much of the valuable time of Members and their staff. Given the large Federal budget deficit, the growing number of failing savings and loans, and costly environmental cleanup programs, Congress has more than enough work to do in the coming 2 years without having to deal with an inordinate number of nonsubstantive pieces of legislation.

I do not believe the present system best insures the impartial review of commemorative proposals. Under the current system of designating commemorative days, weeks, and years, Members or staff who are sufficiently persistent can often obtain the requisite number of cosponsors to pass commemorative legislation. While I do not feel qualified to judge the value of commemorating "National Dairy Goat Awareness Week," an independent commission would insure that all groups would gain an impartial hearing, and that the commemorative events endorsed by our Government would represent the values that we as a people feel are important.

The present system is not the most cost-effective system for considering commemoratives. I estimate that the proposed commission would cost 30 percent less than the present system. This would result in savings of several hundreds of thousands of dollars. During these times of budget crunches, all wasteful procedures should be reexamined and made to be more cost effective.

Fifteen years ago during the 90th Congress, only one-twentieth of the total number of bills enacted were commemoratives. During the 100th Congress, over one-third of the bills passed were commemoratives. The time has come to rationalize the procedure for dealing with commemoratives.

HOSPITAL INDIGENT CARE ASSISTANCE ACT

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I am today reintroducing the Hospital Indigent Care Assistance Act. This is a bill to provide critical financial support to the Nation's safety net hospitals burdened by the costs of uncompensated care.

Between 35 and 37 million Americans are without health insurance. When illness strikes, these individuals are often unable to receive physician care in the community. Instead they must either receive emergency or outpatient care from a hospital or delay care until they must be treated as an inpatient. In either care, the hospital ends up footing the bill.

A recent Robert Wood Johnson Foundation study on access to care found that access to care for these uninsured Americans has declined since the foundation's last study in 1982. This decline was particularly harsh for the poor and minorities. Thirteen and one-half million Americans reported not receiving medical care for financial reasons.

In 1986 U.S. hospitals provided approximately $8 billion in uncompensated care. Virtually all of that care was given by public and not-for-profit hospitals.

While public hospitals have about 21 percent of all hospital beds, they provide 55 percent of all charity care. In large metropolitan areas these hospitals account for only 6 percent of beds, but provide 22 percent of charity care.

However, this is not simply a question of support for public hospitals. Slightly less than half of the Nation's 100 largest metropolitan areas have public hospitals. Most of the Nation relies upon voluntary, not-for-profit hospitals to act as the safety net for the poor and uninsured.

The problem is that the ability of these hospitals to cope is stretched to the breaking point. Medicare and Medicaid have attempted to reduce the dramatic rates of increase in hospital payments incurred by those two programs. Private payers have pushed for discounts and rate reductions as part of their cost containment efforts.

And although these policies make sense in isolation, they do make it ever more difficult for the safety net hospitals to discharge their responsibilities to the uninsured.

Signs of this stress are increasing. For example, virtually every week brings an article from the Los Angeles Times indicating that another hospital is closing its emergency room or pulling out the trauma network. This is often characterized as an emergency care problem, but it isn't; it is an indigent care problem. The reason these hospitals are taking this step is because the trauma system brings them more indigent patients than the hospital can handle financially.

Clearly, the whole system of health care financing demands reform. I have introduced legislation, the "Employee Health Benefits Improvement Act," which would require every employer to provide health insurance to their employees. It is also clear that the Medicaid program which provides health care to less than half the poor requires reform and significant expansion. However, I do not expect either of these actions will occur overnight.

We need to act quickly to assure the financial stability of the Nation's safety net hospitals. We must act to assure continued access to necessary medical care who cannot afford it. The Hospital Indigent Care Assistance Act of 1989 will direct critical care to the hospitals which have demonstrated their commitment to care for the less fortunate in our society.

A summary of the bill follows:

HOSPITAL INDIGENT CARE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1989

SUMMARY

I. Hospital Indigent Care Trust Fund

The Trust Fund is funded through a one percent excise tax on the amounts paid by employers for health benefits. The tax would provide approximately $1.5 billion to the fund in 1990.

II. Hospitals Eligible for Support

A. Hospital Eligibility:

A hospital is eligible for support if:

i. more than 10% of inpatient days are attributable to Medicaid, or more than 10% of total charges are uncompensated care charges; and

ii. the hospital has patient care revenues less than patient care operating expenses.

B. Allowable Indigent Care Costs:

Indigent care costs are defined using existing Medicare allowable cost definitions and methods plus labor and delivery service charges and costs.

III. Adjustments for State and Local Support of Indigent Care

Allowable indigent care costs are decreased for hospitals that receive state or local tax support for patient care by one half of the dollar amount of the tax support.

For hospitals in a state with a Medicaid program that provides benefits above the national average, the allowable indigent care costs are increased in proportion to the Medicaid program's contribution to reducing hospital uncompensated care.

IV. Distribution of Funds

Each eligible hospital receives up to fifty percent of allowable indigent care costs in the first year. Thereafter, the percentage is adjusted to reflect available funds in the fund. No eligible hospital will receive more payment than is necessary to assure that the hospital breaks even on patient care.

V. Study

The bill provides for a two-year study of indigent care.

SALUTE TO THE KERN COUNTY ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY CORP. [KCEOC]

HON. WILLIAM M. THOMAS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute the Kern County Economic Opportunity Corp. [KCEOC], which is in its 25th year of dedicated service to the low-income community in Kern County. The KCEOC motto—"Helping People to Help Themselves"—is devoted to promoting self-sufficiency and to the continuing battle against the cycle of dependency engulfing those in poverty in America.

The KCEOC was established in Kern County as a private nonprofit corporation and given the responsibility for planning, developing, and implementing programs designed to encourage maximum participation of Kern County's low-income communities.

The agency is involved with a diverse set of programs designed to meet community needs, including emergency homeless assistance, emergency crisis intervention, low-income home energy assistance, Head Start, and women, infants, and children; and also operates a medical facility, the Family Health Clinic.

The KCEOC Board of Directors is the policy-making body of the agency and current board members are: Andre Binns, John Nilon, Fuchsia Ward, Doris Cruz, Lisa Green, W.G. "Gus" Davidson, Joel Heinrich, Barbara Bartenstein, Michael Worthing, Lois Stott, Annette Thompson, Christine Morris, Sheila Alexander, Jonathon Webster, Carmen Torres, Bea Wren, Johnnie Hunt, Peggy Rangel, Dick Noreen, and Lottie Woodruff.

I want to congratulate this group of constitutents and let my colleagues know that the determination to make the world a better place to live is alive in Kern County today. With dedication and hard work, the KCEOC has made a difference in the lives of many Kern County residents.

FLORIO HONORS NICHOLAS A. VIRGILIO

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the life and work of an outstanding poet and individual, Nicholas A. Virgilio.

Nick Virgilio, born and raised in Camden, NJ, was a master of Haiku poetry, as well as one our our Nation's most beloved Haiku poets. He graduated from Camden High School in 1946, spent 2 years in the U.S. Navy, and graduated from Temple University in Philadelphia in 1952.

Virgilio spent several years as a disc jockey before accidentially discovering Haiku poetry in 1962 at the Rutgers University library in Camden. Working diligently in his basement, Virgilio perfected his art to the point where he was considered among the world's best writers of Haiku. His most famous poem is:

Lily: out of the water . . .

In 1987, this poem appeared on the cover of the New York Times Book Review, has been translated by the Crown Prince of Japan and is unequaled in the English language.

Like Camden's most famous poet, Walt Whitman, Nick Virgilio produced only one book, entitled "Selected Haiku." In it he manages to capture both the beauty and hardness of life. As is stated on the back cover of his book:

These are haiku that call you back repeatedly to events and people who deserve remembering, to moments when something rare and special happened, even if the rest of the world passed it by. Sometimes they are moments of grief or bitterness; sometimes they offer a fleeting beauty, or a gust of comedy, or an abiding tenderness.

On January 3, 1989, Nick Virgilio died suddenly. His passing represented a great loss, not only for our community, but for admirers of poetry and literature throughout the world. At his funeral, in Camden's Sacred Heart Church, he was eulogized as someone who brought honor to Camden, as well as to the entire Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain that my colleagues would join me in paying tribute to Nick Virgilio, a great American poet whose work will continue to inspire generations to come.

CATHOLIC SCHOOLS WEEK

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to recognize the outstanding work that the many Catholic schools across the United States do in educating children of the Catholic faith. Education grows increasingly difficult in our country, as our youth face more and more distractions that compete with learning in the schools. The dedication and devotion of the teachers, the principals, and the administrators of our Catholic schools should be admired, as these individuals strive to help children gain a good education as well as learn about Catholic values and faith.

As many Catholic schools across the country celebrate Catholic Schools Week from January 29 to February 4, I would like to add my congratulations and admiration for the effort that Catholic schools are putting into education today. Education is the cornerstone on which our country has been built and continues to grow, and I salute all those involved in Catholic education for their contributions to this most important of all work.

TRIBUTE TO PENNSYLVANIA ELKS STATE ASSOCIATION

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to two events being honored by the Pennsylvania Elks State Association: the 175th anniversary of the Battle of Lake Erie, and the Elks National Patriotism Week held February 13 to 17, 1989.

September 10, 1988 marked the 175th anniversary of the Battle of Lake Erie, which was of great significance because it was the first time in 500 years that a British fleet was defeated in a major engagement. This battle also ensured that the United States would maintain control of Detroit and the Great Lakes. The only surviving vessel of this victorious battle was the U.S. brig Niagara. This year she is to be dismantled, rebuilt, refitted and floated to her new dock in Erie Harbor, PA to receive recognition. Please join me and the Pennsylvania Elks State Association in remembering this significant battle and its sole surviving ship, the U.S.S. Niagara.

I also ask my colleagues to join me and the 1.5 million Elks in the United States in celebrating Elks National Patriotism Week. During this week, the Elks are asking Americans to fly our Nation's flag to promote pride in our country. The Elks are committed to preserving our heritage and they ask all Americans to join with them in assuring that the fires of patriotism burn forever in this Nation.

TRIBUTE TO MR. RICHARD L. HUMMEL

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join the Ohio Young Farmers Association in honoring a gentleman who retires this year from his position as executive secretary-treasurer of the Ohio Young Farmers Association. Mr. Richard L. Hummel has spent much of his life serving the farmers of Ohio in many capacities. At this time I would like to share with my colleagues the contributions this man has made to Ohio agriculture.

Mr. Hummel served on behalf of his Nation in the Army during that great fight for humanity, World War II. Upon returning to his country, Mr. Hummel found his way to the Ohio State University, from where he graduated in 1950 with a bachelor of science degree in agriculture education. This degree created the foundation upon which much of his work in agriculture was built. In 1967, Mr. Hummel returned to OSU to receive his masters degree. Education is as important in agriculture as in any other profession, a fact Mr. Hummel acknowledged for the next 15 years. During this time, he taught vocational agriculture in Spencerville, OH. The students benefited from his commitment to agriculture, learning from him the many skills necessary to succeed in this highly competitive and dangerous area. The excellence of his teaching was recognized by his election as vice president of Ohio Vocational Agriculture Teachers Association [OVATA] in 1961, and as president of OVATA in 1962.

As an educator and a proponent of Ohio agriculture, Mr. Hummel continued to serve the farmer after achieving this position. He became the executive secretary-treasurer for the Ohio Young Farmers Association in 1966, a position he has held until this year. Surely the longevity with which he has held this position is a tribute both to his commitment to his work as well as evidence of the rock solid faith his fellow farmers have in him and his abilities. At the Ohio Young Farmers convention to be held this February, Mr. Hummel will be honored for the work to which he has dedicated so much of his life. His many years of work in agriculture education as well as his devotion to the young, new farmers of Ohio ensures that Ohio agriculture will continue strong and well into the next generation. Although his shoes will be difficult ones to fill, I join his devoted colleagues in wishing him a long, enjoyable, and prosperous retirement.

AMENDING THE STOCK RAISING HOMESTEAD ACT OF 1916

HON. RICHARD H. LEHMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing "Rancher's Rights" legislation from the 100th Congress to amend a little-known, but very important law known as the 1916 Stock Raising Homestead Act. The rights that my bill will provide to split-estate private land owners are simple and fair.

The old 1916 law, which my legislation will address, has created a unique land ownership pattern where the surface is privately owned and the subsurface rights are retained by the Federal Government. In an attempt to promote settlement of the West, the Federal Government encouraged the homesteading of 70 million acres nationwide under the old 1916 act. However, the Government retained the subsurface mineral rights.

Most of the land claimed under the 1916 act is now used for rangeland grazing. However, it is clearly impossible to mine subsurface minerals without disturbing the privately owned surface. In this situation the surface owner is left virtually unprotected from loss of productive range due to legal hardrock mining operations. Under existing law, private landowners have few, if any of the surface protections that the Federal Government gives itself when it is a surface owner.

My bill will clarify the ranchers rights by amending the Stock Raising Homestead Act in the following manner:

First, the bill will require a written notice to the private land owner prior to entering property for the purpose of prospecting; and

Second, the bill will require the posting of a bond, to be held by the Secretary of the Interior, to ensure the compensation for damage to grazing operations should that occur; and Third, the bill will require a plan of mining operations, including a program for reclamation and mitigation of surface damages, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The plan may also include a negotiated agreement between the miner and the surface owner.

Fourth, finally, the bill will require the Secretary of the Interior to simplify the procedures by which the private surface owner may also acquire title to the subsurface.

Mr. Speaker, my legislation will give private split-estate landowners some very basic rights. The right to be notified if their property is entered and the right to compensation for damage to their surface property. While the majority of miners respect the private landowner's property, a few do not. The Federal Government recognizes this and has reserved these same rights for itself and others.

Mr. Speaker, my bill is a fair one which merely balances the need for mineral exploration with the unmet needs of the private owner of split-estate lands. I urge my colleagues to support my legislation.

H.R. 151

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, on January 3, I introduced H.R. 151, legislation which is designed to impose additional limitations on the use of tax-exempt bonds to provide residential rental housing. In general, the bill requires that housing so financed meet certain low income set-aside requirements in the case of bonds used by nonprofit 501(c)(3) organizations. The legislation also limits the ability of State or local governments to issue bonds used to finance residential rental housing within their jurisdiction. As expected, the legislation has generated an enormous amount of controversy; especially controversial is the legislation's effective date. As drafted, it generally applies to bonds issued after the date of introduction.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that I am somewhat mystified over the hue and cry which has arisen over the January 3 effective date. Yet I am told that my bill has essentially shut down segments of the municipal bond market; bond counsel are hesitant to give an opinion that a bond is tax exempt with my legislation pending. This is so even though the Committee on Ways and Means has not, since I have been a Member of the House of Representatives, chosen a retroactive date for a bond provision that reaches back to a point in time of introduction of legislation by a junior member of the committee. In fact, I would expect that the committee would follow that tradition. Absent evidence of any abuse or a rush to market, I further expect that I would not oppose a change in the effective date to the date of committee action on my legislation.

The Congress, in the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 [TAMRA], provided that a bond used directly or indirectly to provide residential rental property for family units would not qualify as a 501(c)(3) bond. However, three exceptions to this rule were provided. Under these exceptions, such bonds could still qualify as 501(c)(3) bond if they: First, were used to provide residential rental property for family units as the first use of such property; second, meet the low income targeting rules of section 142(d) of the Code, or; third, provide certain substantially rehabilitated property.

Section one of H.R. 151 would provide a technical correction to the 1988 act. The correction provides rules for property financed with taxable debt—or equity—which is later refinanced with tax-exempt debt. The provision is generally effective for obligations issued after October 21, 1988. To the extent that this effective date may be unfair to issuers, I intend to offer, at the appropriate time, an amendment to change the effective date to obligations issued after January 3, 1989. No inference would be intended as to the proper treatment of bonds issued between October 21, 1988 and January 3, 1989.

Section two of H.R. 151 provides that to be a qualified 501(c)(3) bond proceeds generally must be used to provide residential rental projects which meet the low income requirements of section 142(d). An exception is provided in the case of an issue by a general purpose governmental unit which is primarily secured by the full faith and credit of such unit. Except as expressly provided in the legislation regarding continuing care facilities, the bill follows present law definition of housing (see, e.g., Treas. Regs. 1.103-8(b)(8)(i)).

Section three of H.R. 151 would treat as an arbitrage bond any bond used for the development of residential rental property located within the jurisdiction of the issuer if the yield on the property over the term of the issue is materially higher than the yield on the issue. Where the yield on the property is lower than the yield on the bond over the term of the issue then the arbitrage bond restrictions will not apply. For example, if rents fall short of debt service, operating and maintenance costs—as evidenced by some form of subsidy—the yield on the property will be below the yield on the bond. Even where the yield on the property is materially higher the restrictions will not apply where the property meets the low income targeting requirements or where the bond is issued by a general purpose governmental unit secured by the full faith and credit of the issuer.

The amendments made by sections two and three of the bill are effective for bonds issued after January 3, 1989. A transitional exception is provided for property where construction, reconstruction or rehabilitation of the facility began before that date—or where a binding contract to incur significant expenditures for these purposes was executed before that date—and was completed after January 3, 1989. In addition, the facility must have been described in an inducement resolution or other similar document before that date. Under the transitional exception, bonds must be issued by December 31, 1991 and the property placed in service by December 31, 1992.

The purpose of the January 3 effective date was to put bond issuers on notice that I think the committee should legislate in this area. A prospective date might well have caused a rush to market of the very types of issues which I feel are inappropriate. A retroactive date would penalize issuers who already completed transactions which were acceptable under the law at the time of issue. In this same concern, I provided transitional relief for those transactions that were well along in the pipeline though not yet issued by the January 3 date. The main theory behind transition relief is to hold harmless those who have acted in substantial reliance on the law as it stood at the time of their action.

It has come to my attention that some issuers which may have acted in such reliance may not qualify for transiton relief as provided in H.R. 151. Therefore, I am announcing today that I would offer an amendment to my proposal to expand transitional relief to such individuals. However, I would not accept a relief provision which grants such a blanket exception that any nebulous plan or plan which had been considered even only on an informal basis would be able to escape application of the new restrictions.

For example, where the issuer of a bond had incurred at least 30 percent of the total projected issuance costs with respect to the issue on or before January 3, I feel transition relief should be granted. In contrast, a general discussion of investment in a project by the board of a 501(c)(3) organization which is unaccompanied by substantial cost incurred by that board would not qualify the project for relief.

Following are five discrete factors which would justify expansion of the transition relief already provided in H.R. 151. If any one of these five criteria were met as of January 3, transiton relief should and will be extended. These five criteria are:

One, in the case of 501(c)(3) bonds, the board of directors—for other comparable governing board—of the 501(c)(3) organization approved the project;

Two, in the case of governmental bonds, the issuer of the bonds—or an agency or instrumentality of the issuer—approved the project or the issue of the bonds;

Three, the project had been described in an inducement resolution—or other comparable document of preliminary approval—or the issuer had taken other similar official action (see, Treas. Regs. 1.103-8(l)(5)(v)) with respect to the project to be financed by the bonds;

Four, the issuer of the bond had incurred at least 30 percent of its total projected issuance costs with respect to the issue of the bonds, or;

Five, the issuer of the bonds or the 501(c)(3) organization on whose behalf the bonds were to be issues had incurred more than 50 percent of the total design expenditures for the project (i.e., architectural fees, etc.).

To qualify for transition relief, the project financed by the bonds would have to be placed in service by December 31, 1992.

To summarize, then, if a bond is issued after January 3, 1989, and meets at least one of the five tests specified above, and the project is placed in service by December 31, 1992, I do not intend for sections two and three of my legislation to apply to that bond issue. If H.R. 151 is considered by the Committee on Ways and Means, I would immediately move to expand the transition rule currently in the bill as described in this statement.

In closing, I would note that I fully expect the full cooperation of the Committee on Ways and Means in consideration and refinement of this legislation. This bill is an attempt to improve the efficacy and efficiency of tax-exempt bonds in this area. I fully expect that further modifications may be offered during consideration to eliminate or reduce the unnecessary issuance of 501(c)(3) bonds for certain residential rental housing.

VETERANS FUNERAL BENEFITS

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, Friday I reintroduced legislation which seeks to restore much-deserved furneral benefits previously afforded to all our veterans.

As many of my colleagues are aware, prior to 1981, a burial allowance of up to $300 was provided in all cases where a veteran died: first, of service-connected disability; second, if he was a veteran of any war; third, if he was discharged for a disability incurred or aggravated in the line of duty; or fourth, if he was in receipt of—or entitled to except for receipt of retirement pay—disability compensation.

Under the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1981, the veterans' burial benefits were decreased significantly by limiting funeral benefits to veterans receiving pension or compensation benefits, or was in a VA-supported health facility at the time of death. That reduction mistakenly placed an economic value on a benefit that was given by Congress to ensure that all veterans would be buried with dignity and respect, regardless of their income or social standing at time of death. It is also in direct violation of a longstanding principal held by the American Legion which calls for equal benefits for equal service.

My legislation restores the pre-1981 eligibility for veterans for the purposes of receiving funeral benefits, increases the amount of those benefits from $300 to $400, and increases the plot allowance from $150 to $300.

The death of a loved one is always a difficult, trying time. Whether that individual suffered from a long illness or was taken suddenly, it is extremely difficult for families to prepare emotionally and financially for such a loss. In these times, the cost of a burial has increased dramatically, often becoming a tremendous financial burden on the families of these veterans during their time of grief. The average cost of a funeral, not including a casket, headstone, or grave, is approximately $2,000. It is my sincere hope that my legislation will help defray a portion of these burdensome costs.

It is only right therefore that we restore these benefits and fulfill the obligation that we made to our Nation's veterans at the time of their induction into the service of their country, to provide them with reasonable compensation for their funeral costs. Reinstating these deserved benefits to our veterans is essential to fulfill our obligation to all those who have fought and risked their lives to protect the ideals and people of our great Nation.

Following is the full text of the Veterans' Burial Benefits Act of 1989. I hope my colleagues will share this bill with the veterans groups in their congressional districts, and I invite them to cosponsor this important legislation.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Veterans' Burial Benefits Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. ELIGIBILITY FOR BURIAL ALLOWANCE.

Subsection (a) of section 902 of title 38, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Where a veteran dies—

"(1) of a service-connected disability; or

"(2) who was—

"(A) a veteran of any war;

"(B) discharged from the active military, naval, or air service for a disability incurred or aggravated in line of duty; or

"(C) in receipt of (or but for the receipt of retirement pay would have been entitled to) disability compensation;

the Administrator, in the Administrator's discretion, having due regard to the circumstances in each case, may pay a sum not exceeding $400 to such person as the Administrator prescribes to cover the burial and funeral expenses of the deceased veteran and the expense of preparing the body and transporting it to the place of burial. For the purpose of this subsection, the term 'veteran' includes a person who died during a period deemed to be active military, naval, or air service under section 106(c) of this title.".

SEC. 3. INCREASE IN THE BURIAL PLOT ALLOWANCE.

Paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 903(b) of title 38, United States Code, are amended by striking out "$150" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$300".

THE STORY OF THE PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to commend an article to my colleagues which appeared in the Christian Science Monitor last fall. The piece explains how the Pledge of Allegiance came to be written by Francis Bellamy in 1892.

Barbara Bellamy Wright, who is the granddaughter of Francis Bellamy and a relative of mine, wrote the article. She has worked long and hard to teach anyone who would listen about the origins of the pledge and its meaning. This article is only the most recent of her many efforts.

As we all know, the Pledge of Allegiance received a great deal of attention during the recent Presidential election. Now that the clamor over it has subsided, it seems a good time for all of us to reflect on the true meaning of the pledge and its significance for our Nation. I hope my colleagues enjoy the piece as much as I did.

The text of the article follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor, Oct. 6, 1988]

A PLEDGE FOR COLUMBUS DAY

(By Barbara Bellamy Wright)

The pledge of allegiance was written in 1892 by my grandfather, Francis Bellamy. It was written for a nationwide public school celebration of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America—Columbus Day.

On that day in every schoolhouse in the land there would be a flag-raising ceremony and the schoolchildren would salute their flag. Let's see how the pledge came to be written in 1892. . . .

The time was ripe for a reawakening of patriotism, and the leaders of this movement felt it should begin in the schools with a national public school celebration. This plan was launched in the editor's office of the Youth's Companion—a magazine read from cover to cover by every schoolchild. Bellamy was appointed chairman of the celebration, and he went to Washington to persuade President Harrison to proclaim Columbus Day a national holiday. Harrison gave this presidential proclamation in 1892:

"I, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Friday, October 21, 1892, the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus, as a general holiday for the people of the United States. Let the American flag fly over every schoolhouse in the land and the exercises be such as shall impress upon our youth the patriotic duties of American citizenship."

For this national holiday—Columbus Day—there needed to be a flag-raising ceremony at every schoolhouse in America. A salute to the flag was needed. This salute was written by Bellamy. Here, in his own words, is the story of how the pledge to the flag was written:

"It was a warm evening in August 1892 in my office at the Youth's Companion in Boston that I sat down to write the words of the Salute to the Flag. I worked on it for three hours and threw into the wastebasket many attempts.

"The first words I decided on were "I pledge allegiance to my flag.' I felt that pledge was a better school word than vow or swear. Then, should it be 'country,' 'nation,' or 'Republic'? Republic won because it distinguished the form of government chosen by our founding fathers. So I added 'And to the Republic for which it stands.'

"Then I felt that I must describe the Republic so I added one line 'one Nation, indivisible' for the Civil War between the States had settled that the States could not be divided. Then we should close by a line telling what the big united idea of the American people was—so I included that in the last line 'With liberty and justice for all.'

"As the final line, it seemed to assemble the past and to promise the future.

"And there is the story of how I wrote the pledge. The first time I heard it was on Columbus Day 1892 when 6,000 high school boys and girls in Boston, roared it out together. It thrilled me."

What happened to the original pledge of 23 words? In 1924, adding the words "to the flag of the United States of America" seemed a logical addition, since after the turn of the century there were thousands of immigrants arriving at U.S. shores, taking their oath of allegiance to their new country as they became American citizens. This ceremony included the pledge to the flag, and it was important that when they were saluting the flag they were not saluting the flag of their country which they had left behind. This was done with the approval of my grandfather.

In 1954, the second change occurred long after he died. By an act of Congress the pledge was changed. "One Nation, indivisible" became "one nation under God, indivisible." My grandfather would have objected strongly to this change, as it changed the fundamental meaning. He had considered that "one Nation, indivisible" conveyed the deep meaning that after the Civil War our nation could not be divided.

In his early years, Bellamy had been a Baptist minister, and he remained always a man of religious character. The "under God" addition tampered with the original meaning of the pledge as well as spoiling its rhythmic cadence.

Francis Bellamy was born May 18, 1855, in Mount Morris, N.Y., son of a Baptist minister, the Rev. David Bellamy. He graduated from the University of Rochester in 1876, then attended Rochester Theological Seminary, where he was ordained in 1879. In 1891 he gave up his Baptist ministry in Boston to devote his time and energy to young people. He then joined the staff of the Youth's Companion in Boston and immediately became active with the editor, James Upham, whose campaign was to revive patriotism among the youth of America.

In his later years, he moved to Tampa, Fla, with his wife. In his last speech to the Tampa Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution on Flag Day 1931, he reminded them:

"The pledge was not a thing to which I could attach my name by copyright. It was a free contribution of my brain and heart for the awakening of ardent love of the Flag and a stirring duty toward the Republic for which it stands. It was born out of my own love for the flag and for all the lofty Americanism it represented." It was a "Creed of patriotism."

THE CONGRESS SHOULD VOTE ON FEDERAL PAY INCREASES

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, as everyone knows, nothing short of the inauguration of a new President has attracted as much public attention as the proposed pay increases for Members of Congress and other top Federal officials.

I would like to share with you, and other Members of the House, a letter from one of my constitutents that represents the kind of circumstances we in Congress must be guided by.

Middle America simply cannot understand why Federal officials should have salaries that are far above ordinary incomes.

This widowed constituent must get by on $6,000 a year—in many ways because the Congress failed to prevent her being unfairly reduced to poverty by her husband's medical bills. Over half of the households in Penn Hills, one of the largest communities in my district, have incomes under $12,000. The Congress could make a difference for the better in their lives. But, in a very real sense, we have not.

Mr. Speaker, now is not the time for large increases in pay. If the budget had been brought into balance; if we were not reducing support for college education; if we had done something more than just ignore the unfair Social Security cuts of notch babies; if we had distributed the cost of catastrophic health care coverage more fairly instead of hitting a small group with a whopping tax increase; if those on minimum wage had not lost nearly one-third of their purchasing power with no adjustment for inflation over the last several years; if the 4 percent Social Security cost-of-living increase was not simply given with one hand, and then taken away by another through increased Medicare fees * * * There is a long list of grievances that Congress should be fixing—but we are not.

As a Representative from western Pennsylvania, it is absolutely clear that allowing large salary increases to go into effect with no opportunity for the Congress to vote puts all Members of Congress in the position of looking as if they are just "playing the public for all they can get." That is certainly not why I have spent my time in public service and I, and many others, object to being put in that position.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that the rules that bind you as Speaker do not give you power to simply "schedule" a vote in the House on any issue as is so easily done by any Member in the Senate. But I urge you to use all the influence of your office with others in leadership, both Republican and Democratic, to bring this question to the floor for a vote. Nothing short of a vote will clear the air in the eyes of my constituents. I would like to make the following letter from a constituent from my district part of the RECORD.

Dear Congressman, the enclosed article from the Pittsburgh Press states very clearly how I feel about the 50% salary increase you are about to receive. I am not against a pay raise but it should be restricted to a "cost-of-living increase just as the rest of us have to make do with. I pay for everything just as you do. So I do without important things such as dental work (which I've needed for two years). I pay for my Medicare and Blue Cross supplemental insurance ($61.50 per month) but I cannot get the care I need because many specialists won't accept it. There is no help to get into a Senior Citizens Apartment building supposedly built for low income people like me because the waiting list will take years to work through.

I didn't ask to be in this situation. When my husband died I paid all his Medical bills (he was ill for three years) and raised my children. I'm now trying to manage on $534.00 Social Security and am paying $300.00 of that each month for rent. That doesn't leave much does it?

Do you realize how well I could do on the $12,000.00 you received last year? I wouldn't have to debate how to pay my bills and eat until the 3rd of next month. I feel so sorry for the families trying to live on minimum wage—even with both parents working—why won't the government raise it at least to $4.00 per hour—even that isn't enough.

Why am I angry about your 50% salary increase? You should take "cost-of-living" the same as the rest of us and tighten your belt as I do every month. I am not alone in this feeling—there are many of us.

The government can no longer afford the "cheese and butter" program which did help out a little. Where is it finding the money for your salary increase? What more are you going to deprive us of? It doesn't balance out does it?

If you insist on letting this happen then please have the decency to vote on it.

PRENATAL CARE FOR THE POOR IS INADEQUATE

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, one of the most moving writers in the health field today is journalist Peter Aleshire, whose columns appear in the Oakland Tribune. On December 6, 1988, he wrote a column entitled "Prenatal Care for the Poor is Inadequate."

It is an excellent description of why we must not endure 4 more years of Reagan-era health "policy."

The article follows:

[From the Tribune, Dec. 6, 1988]

PRENATAL CARE FOR THE POOR IS INADEQUATE

(By Peter Aleshire)

Yvonne Baker, two days old, is beautiful—despite everything.

She's a heartbreaker squinting at the world through blue-black eyes. Her tiny, wrinkled hand can't quite encircle my little finger.

She smiles, too, timeless as the first light of day.

She's so beautiful. But then, I'm a sucker for babies—especially babies that almost didn't make it.

Still, there's something terribly wrong here. I feel like I've wandered into a grim Gary Larson cartoon where everything is turned on its head.

You see, because her mom couldn't find a doctor to take care of her until the last possible moment, Yvonne missed being born dead by the smallest of chances.

Oh, you mutter, another column about the growing lack of prenatal care in the richest, most medically extravagant country in the history of the planet.

I'm sorry to nag, but I'm morbidly fascinated by the contradiction of the nation with the most expensive medical system having a higher infant death rate than 16 other countries.

It's largely because nearly a third of the women in the United States giving birth each year receive little or no prenatal care—which raises the risk of a dead baby eightfold.

And it's getting worse, partly because of a sharp rise in the number of Americans without medical insurance and partly because welfare programs now cover only 40 percent of the families in poverty.

Even so, I'd probably quit harping, except that I keep coming across people like Yvonne and her parents—Clayton and Laura Baker.

Laura is 41. She moved to Arizona from Colombia 16 years ago. Last year, she married Clayton, 52, a New York City bus driver.

Her English was almost as limited as his Spanish, but somehow they hit it off. They're one of those seemingly ill-matched couples that convince you that love really will save us after all.

Clayton decided to take his early retirement, and move out West with his new bride. He has medical coverage through his pension plan. Laura is disabled because of previous medical problems, so she is covered by Medicare.

Clayton thought he was sterile because of a case of mumps in adulthood, so when Laura missed her period, began to feel listless and developed skin rashes, they didn't figure she was pregnant.

They went to a doctor who told them she had a orange-sized tumor in her uterus.

A month later, she was back at the doctor—who said her tumor was now the size of a grapefruit.

But because Laura could now feel her "tumor" moving, she told the doctor she thought she was pregnant.

Stunned, the doctor referred her to an obstetrician.

Sure enough, she was pregnant.

The obstetrician refused to take care of her because Medicare pays only about half the average $1,800 rate for prenatal care and delivery.

She went to another obstetrician. He said he'd take Medicare, but only if the couple paid an extra $250 a month—which was about 15 percent of their income. They offered $100. He told them to go away.

They were also rejected by a health clinic because Clayton made too much money.

Fortunately, a nurse there referred them to another doctor who did agree to take them.

Almost too late. A week after the appointment, Laura's water broke. The doctor was able to keep her going for another month—despite the high risk of an infection.

At 34 weeks, the baby quit moving. Because the doctor had warned her what to look for, Laura rushed to the hospital. The baby was delivered Cesarean section.

Like I said, she's beautiful.

But it could have been a disaster. Had Laura not, just barely, found a doctor, Yvonne would have been dead, or one of those $400,000 intensive care babies with lifelong handicaps.

You see why I can't drop it?

Besides, I made the mistake of holding Yvonne. Her whole head fits in the palm of my hand. She looked right at me.

How could I not write this?

ANNIVERSARY OF THE ENGLISH BILL OF RIGHTS

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, shortly before the Christmas holidays I had the distinct pleasure of attending a ceremony marking the 300th anniversary of the English Bill of Rights.

Great Britain's Ambassador to the United States, Sir Antony Acland, spoke at this ceremony, noting that the American Bill of Rights was modeled after the English Bill of Rights and expressing hope that the ideals embodied in these documents will be preserved. As we celebrate the Bicentennial of our Constitution, I ask that Sir Antony Ackland's remarks be recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

REMARKS BY HIS EXCELLENCY SIR ANTONY ACLAND, AMBASSADOR, GREAT BRITAIN

Secretary Marsh, Chief Justice Burger, General Vuono, Ladies and Gentlemen, I am greatly privileged to be able to participate in these splendid and moving ceremonies this afternoon, and I feel greatly honoured to have been asked to be reviewing official. May I begin therefore by thanking all those involved in the planning of this event and I congratulate each and every one on parade for their quite extraordinary smartness and precision. For all of us present it will remain a most memorable occasion.

You, Secretary Marsh, and you, Chief Justice Burger, have explained as does the programme of events why we are here. The immediate reason of course is, as you have said, that 300 years ago today there began the final act of a drama that lead a year later on 16 December 1689 to the proclamation of the English Bill of Rights. Some may ask, however, what relevance a 300 year old document has today in a world preoccupied by nuclear weapons, by the challenges of our global economy, by war, by revolution or by natural disaster.

The answer is that that 300 year old document still enshrines the common ideals and interests which Britain and America continue to share. The English Bill or Rights was a precursor of your own Declaration of Independence from the Government of the British King George III, and of your own Bill of Rights.

Your President Woodrow Wilson, when speaking to another King George—George V—put his finger on what it is that really unites our two countries: "You must not" he said to the King "speak of us who came over here as cousins, still less as brothers; we are neither. Neither must you think of us as Anglo-Saxons, for that term can no longer be rightly applied to the people of the United States. Nor must too much importance be attached to the fact that English is our common language. No, there are two things which can establish closer relations between your country and mine. They are community of ideals and of interests."

That is a good phrase—community of ideals and of interests—and that is the key to why we are celebrating the English Bill of Rights today. The principles which it enshrines and which we later incorporated into the American Constitution and the American Bill of Rights (which included the first ten amendments to the Constitution enacted 102 years after the English Bill)—those principles are still the basis on which our two societies are founded. The idea of a compact between ruler and ruled; that the ruler exercises power, no longer by divine right from God but by the will of the people expressed through Parliament, or through Congress; that each person should be free to practice his own religion; that trial should be by jury; that laws should not be suspended and that armies should not be raised except with the consent of Parliament or Congress; that elections should be regular and free and that those elected should be able to debate freely within their assemblies.

These shared ideals and interests have been, and are still, the key to the modern relationship between our countries. It is why we have twice fought side by side in this century. It is most strongly in the interests of both the United States and of Britain that these ideals should be maintained that that is why, Secretary Marsh, Chief Justice Burger, Ladies and Gentlemen, we are proud to be celebrating this anniversary here today.

UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. STENY H. HOYER

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, this month, Ukrainian-Americans are commemorating the 71st anniversary of the proclamation of Ukrainian independence and the 70th anniversary of the unification of the Western Ukrainian National Republic with the Ukrainian National Republic. Although Ukrainian independence was short lived, the Ukrainian striving for freedom and human dignity continues to this day. Indeed, seven decades of repression, including Stalin's 1932-33 manmade famine and numerous purges of the Ukrainian intelligentsia, have not extinguished the Ukrainian people's thirst for freedom.

This quest for freedom, Mr. Speaker, is very much in evidence today. Demonstrations with thousands of participants calling for greater autonomy and personal freedoms, and informal groups, many with their own unofficial publications, promoting Ukrainian culture and the preservation of the environment, have all become commonplace. Ukrainian Catholics have become increasingly active in pressing for legalization of their long-suppressed church. Even officials, especially members of the writers union, are arguing for greater use of the Ukrainian language and a more accurate portrayal of Ukrainian history under Soviet Rule.

Despite these encouraging steps and a somewhat freer climate, repression of Ukrainian activists continues. Anatoly Ilchenko, a 34-year-old former math teacher and member of the Ukrainian Helsinki Union continues to languish in the psychiatric hospital in Mykolaiv for gathering signatures on a petition calling for the removal of nuclear powerplants from Ukraine.

And just recently, on January 20, leading Ukrainian Catholic activist Stepan Khmara, with whom I met during the Helsinki Commission's November meetings with the Supreme Soviet in Moscow, was jailed for 15 days for allegedly having illegally led an unauthorized meeting. Mr. Khmara was arrested following a public gathering in Chervonohrad to select candidates for the Congress of People's Deputies in which his name had been put forward as a candidate. Actions such as these on the part of the authorities call into question the Soviet Government's moves toward democratization.

These repressive actions, however, will not stop Ukrainian strivings for greater human rights and freedoms. These rights and freedoms are enumerated in international agreements, including the Vienna conclusing document, agreed upon by the 35 Helsinki Final Act signatories on January 15. I can assure you that the Helsinki Commission, on which I serve as Cochairman, will monitor closely Soviet human rights behavior in light of the commitments it made in Vienna and will support efforts by Ukrainians to achieve the noble goals of greater rights and freedoms enumerated in the Helsinki and Vienna agreements.

LEGAL SERVICES CORPORATION

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, I want to share with my colleagues a letter I received last week from my good friend Rick Johnson, who lives in my home county at Symsonia, KY.

Mr. Johnson, a prominent attorney at both Mayfield and Paducah in my congressional district, wrote me and expressed his genuine concern about attempts to reduce Federal funding for the Legal Services Corporation.

While Rick Johnson is correct in recognizing the need for fiscal restraint by the Congress, he points out in his letter to me that because this is a time when the "proverty rate continues to increase," it is imperative that the Congress protect the legal rights of those living in poverty by fully funding the Legal Services Corporation.

Mr. Johnson's letter to me appears below:

January 17, 1989.

Congressman CARROLL HUBBARD,
Rayburn House Office Building, The Capitol, Washington, DC.

DEAR CARROLL: I am writing you concerning funding for the Legal Services Corporation. It is my understanding from information provided to me by the American Bar Association that last fall a concerted effort was mounted by certain Congressmen to urge a veto of the appropriations bill in which the Legal Services Corporation appeared so that Congress would be forced to accept certain drastic changes in the program. Among those changes were a cut in its appropriation to $250 million, elimination of funding for national support centers, and the introduction of a system of annual competition for all grants. From the copy of the Congressional Record dated September 27, 1988, on page 8425 your name appears with the nay votes.

The purpose of this letter is to encourage you to vote in favor of appropriation that would support the Legal Services Corporation. At a time when the poverty rate continues to increase I think that it is essential that this program continue to be fully funded. I know from personal experience that Western Kentucky Legal Services headquartered for our area in Paducah has a lengthy waiting list and is not able to handle all of the needs of the poor in Western Kentucky. I can assure you that myself and others as practicing attorneys contribute a considerable amount of pro bono work. However, the need is so great that it is impossible for the private bar to meet these demands.

I recognize the need for fiscal restraint with our current budget problems. It is my wish that you recognize the needs of the Legal Services Corporation when you are evaluating the next budget.

Sincerely,

RICK JOHNSON.

PROMISES DELIVERED

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, over the last 25 years Metropolitan Miami has not been the most tranquil of urban areas. We have only recently had another reminder of the violence that can so easily occur when the underlying causes of poverty and injustice are not adequately addressed.

In the midst of this, however, we do not despair. We have a strong community and many excellent leaders. I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the hard work of one such leader, T. Willard Fair, who heads the Urban League of Greater Miami.

In December, Mr. Fair was honored throughout our community and by the national Urban League for his 25 years of leadership and service. I have some personal knowledge of how well-deserved the many tributes to him are. As a member of our Urban League board of trustees, I served with T. for several years, including during the difficult times of school desegregation. Since being elected to Congress, I have had the pleasure of working with him on a number of projects.

T. knows his constituency from the ghetto to the downtown establishment. He knows when to play hard ball and when to compromise. In my judgment, no one understands and expresses better than T. Willard Fair the experience of black Americans. Not least of all he is a joyous man, and a lot of fun in an often gloomy world.

Following is an editorial from the Miami Herald which pays tribute to the accomplishments of T. Willard Fair.

PROMISES DELIVERED

The Urban League of Greater Miami today celebrates 25 years of T. Willard Fair's leadership. During that time, he and the organization have grown and changed in ways that reflect the needs of Dade's evolving black community.

In the early years, the organization joined with the NAACP and others to fight for open public accommodations, to get blacks into jobs held previously only by whites, into housing, and into agencies like the United Way, which now helps fund the league. As a social-service agency, the Urban League dealt with people's everyday problems that seem petty compared with the community's woes today.

Under the never-boring, often-controversial, sometimes-infuriating Mr. Fair, the local Urban League is among its national peers, most progressive. Its programs attacking the problems of illegal drugs, epidemic dropout rates, stubborn poverty, and scarce affordable housing are innovative. They enjoy the broad support and assistance of government and private industry—the establishment that once was cool to Mr. Fair's often-hot rhetoric. Former critics now admit that he has fashioned, in his own way, an agency that tends to deliver what it promises.

Today the league is a partner with the Dade public schools in developing better ways to teach inner-city students, and with Merrill Lynch in guaranteeing money for college or work for 25 first-graders if they finish high school. It also teaches youths better values, registers their parents to vote, and fights black-on-black crime, drug pushers, and the crack houses that they inhabit.

Under Mr. Fair's leadership, the league is building new homes and creating decent, affordable housing from dilapidated shells from Homestead to an area of Liberty City so troubled that its nickname is Germ City. It is rehabilitating more than 250 apartments in Overtown and Liberty City, and it manages 366 apartments. By the end of next year, the league hopes to have rehabilitated 500 units.

To Mr. Fair and the Urban League of Greater Miami, congratulations. You both have come a long way. Keep it up!

ASSURING EQUITABLE PAYMENT FOR HOSPITAL SERVICES BY THE MEDICAID PROGRAM

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I am today reintroducing legislation to assure equitable payment for hospital services by the Medicaid Program.

The Medicaid Program is designed to assure access to needed health services by the poor. Unfortunately, hospital reimbursement methodologies employed by many States, particularly my own State of California, may be seriously jeopardizing that goal. Recent reports regarding the State of Illinois indicate that State may be underreimbursing hospitals by as much as 35 percent.

My bill will mandate that States pay no less than 90 percent of what Medicare would have paid for similar cases, after adjusting for differences in the age and sex of the two programs' beneficiaries.

I have taken this step after watching with dismay the actions of the State of California during the last 5 years regarding Medicaid hospital reimbursement. Operating under a waiver granted by the Reagan administration, California has established a process by which hospital payments are set through secret negotiations between each hospital and the State. This has allowed the State to set hospital payment levels in a totally arbitrary fashion.

This approach is led to disarray in the hospital delivery system in the State. Many hospitals report little or no increases in payment levels since initial contracts were signed in 1984. If the State proposes unreasonably low levels of a reimbursement, the hospital has no recourse but to threaten not to participate. Today 10 percent fewer California hospitals accept Medicaid than in 1983. The loser, of course, is the Medicaid beneficiary who cannot gain access to needed hospital services.

Analysis of the amounts paid by the Medicaid Program in California illustrate the problem. Although the HCFA market basket index for goods and services purchased by hospitals has increased 21.4 percent since 1984, California Medicaid payments have increased only 9.15 percent. This does not take into account the fact that the Medicaid patients seen in California hospitals are sicker today than they were in 1984.

California, an affluent State with relatively high health care costs, now spends less per Medicaid recipient than do all but three other States.

My bill would preclude arbitrary hospital payment policy. The bill will provide needed fiscal relief to those hospitals which are providing care to the most vulnerable members of our society.

A further problem in State Medicaid programs is that 11 States also impose arbitrary limits on inpatient hospital services under their Medicaid programs. Some of these States limit the number of days per hospital stay while others limit the number of hospital days covered per year.

The result is that reimbursement ceases for poor patients with no other means of paying for their hospital stay, whether the patient continues to need continued hospital care or not.

I am sure that no one believes that Medicaid coverage for hospital care should cease based solely on an arbitrary limit, particularly when that limit can be as low as 12 days per year, as it is in the State of Alabama. My bill would prohibit limitations on needed inpatient care for any reason other than medical necessity.

I believe strongly that hospital reimbursement by public programs should be lean, but fair. What is not fair, at a time when hospitals must shoulder approximately $8 billion in uncompensated care costs for the poor our society can't or won't cover, is to short change them for the people that we do.

A summary of the bill follows:

MINIMUM HOSPITAL PAYMENTS AND BENEFITS UNDER MEDICAID OUTLINE

I. ASSURANCES IN STATE MEDICAL ASSISTANCE PLAN

As part of the State Medical Assistance Plan, the Governor of the State must provide assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that Medicaid reimbursement to hospitals in the State for inpatient services will equal or exceed the mandatory minimum established by this legislation.

II. EVALUATION OF STATE MINIMUM HOSPITAL PAYMENT

The Secretary shall evaluate each State Medical Assistance Plan to insure that Medicaid payments to hospitals in the State are no less than 90% of payments which would have been made by Medicare for the same cases and volume.

In making this evaluation the Secretary shall adjust for differences in case mix, volume, the age and disability of the populations covered by the two programs, and other relevant factors developed by the Secretary.

The Secretary shall include in the evaluation Medicare's payments for capital, graduate medical education, and disproportionate share.

The Secretary may require the collection of data from hospitals sufficient to carry out this provision.

III. LONG-STAY OR HIGH-COST CASES (OUTLIERS)

States could not restrict reimbursement for long-stay cases on grounds other than medical necessity.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF DOMINIC V. AGOSTINO

HON. ALAN B. MOLLOHAN

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join with me in recognizing and celebrating the many achievements of Dominic V. Agostino, president and founder of Aladdin Food Management Services of Wheeling, WV. The year 1988 marked the 10th anniversary of this successful and compassionate company.

Mr. Agostino was born in Brooklyn, NY, the son of immigrant parents. After service in the Marine Corps, Mr. Agostino pursued a career as a baker and later as a college food service manager. Following 18 years with ARA Food Services, Mr. Agostino decided it was time to launch his own business.

He and three partners each put up $1,000 and formed a new food management company dedicated to the principles of high quality service, reasonable cost, and a commitment to the well-being of every employee. They named their company Aladdin Food Management Services.

The early days were a struggle as the fledgling company labored mightily to carve a niche in the marketplace from its headquarters in the basement of Mr. Agostino's West Virginia home.

Despite this humble beginning, word soon spread about a food service company that provided excellent service at a low cost and, by the early 1980's, business began to rise dramatically.

Initially, Aladdin concentrated on college and university food service, but as its reputation grew, Aladdin began contracting with hospitals and nursing homes, businesses and industrial organizations, prisons, convents, and even country clubs.

By 1988, sales had grown to over $15 million annually and the future was exceedingly bright.

Today, Aladdin has between 1,300 to 1,400 full- and part-time employees in West Virginia, western Pennsylvania, and eastern Ohio, and the company's ambitious growth plans promise to add hundreds of new jobs in these hard-pressed areas in the years ahead.

That is good news for the local economies and also for those whom Aladdin hires. Because of the company's progressive and humanistic personnel policies, virtually few ever leave the company. In fact, since the company's beginnings in 1978, only three managers have departed and no district manager has ever left.

The company offers many recognition and financial awards to its people and operates in a family-like atmosphere where the attitude is "we care for our own."

Mr. Agostino believes in dealing with employee shortcomings in a supportive rather than a derogatory way. He follows a philosophy of getting rid of the fault, not the person.

In recognition of his lifelong commitment to ethical business practices and the success of Aladdin Food Management Services, Mr. Agostino was honored recently as the first recipient of the Humanitarian of the Year Award presented by the Center for Business and Entrepreneurial Management at Saint Mary's College in Winona, MI.

In the presentation ceremony, Brother Herman E. Zaccarelli, director of the center, said that Mr. Agostino's career is a testament to the simple belief that if you set your priorities right and then stick to them, good things will happen.

The Center for Business and Entrepreneurial Management at Saint Mary's College of Minnesota was launched in September 1987 to serve the continuing career education needs of professionals in a variety of business, nonprofit, and institutional settings. The center offers business and entrepreneurial seminars, research and consulting services, an on-campus conference center, fully accredited professional self-study courses, and state-of-the-art publications.

NATIONAL ORGAN AND TISSUE DONOR AWARENESS WEEK 1989

HON. SID MORRISON

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am again privileged to introduce a joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President to issue a proclamation designating April 23 through April 29 of this year as National Organ Tissue Donor Awareness Week. I am delighted to be jointed by over 50 of my colleagues as original cosponsors, most of whom have joined me in successfully sponsoring this important resolution for the past 6 years.

The purpose of this special week is to educate Americans about the importance both of becoming a donor and of sharing this decision with their family. By making the wish to donate known, loved ones will be shown how a tragedy can be turned into many years of life and happiness for another person. Gallup surveys conducted in 1987 indicate that almost 50 percent of individuals aware of organ donation are willing to become organ donors under appropriate circumstances. Encouraging folks to officially follow through with a pledge and a discuss this decision with their family members is what National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week is all about.

According to sources compiled by the American Council on Transplantation, there are some 66,000 individuals in the United States who qualify as potential beneficiaries of kidney, heart, liver, or heart/lung transplants. Some 20,000 folks are acutally waiting for the chance to receive a transplant. Unfortunately, at present only one in five Americans has pledged to become a donor. Though we're making progress each year, these statistics make it clear that many more folks need to be reached.

So once again, I invite and encourage my colleagues to join me in sponsoring National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week and to help millions of Americans learn how they can make a miracle.

CRISIS DETAILED IN HISTORIC PRESERVATION

HON. BARBARA B. KENNELLY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, the National Park Service's recent report on the historic preservation tax credit clearly documents the unexpectedly severe adverse affect of the 1986 Tax Reform Act on historic preservation projects throughout the country. To quote the report, "A slow decline in tax incentive use in fiscal year 1986 became a dramatic drop in fiscal year 1987 when the new law took effect. In fiscal year 1988 this decline continued. . . ."

I urge all of my colleagues who are concerned with historic preservation and the revitalization of our cities and towns to obtain a copy of this report. I am, however, inserting in the RECORD at this point the highlights of the report for your information.

REPORT HIGHLIGHTS

The number of approved projects in FY 1988 was 1,092, down 43% from FY 1987's 1,931 projects. The number of projects is now at about one-third the pre-Tax Reform Act level of more than 3,000 projects per year.

During FY 1988 the use of historic rehabilitation tax incentives continued to decline in response to the Tax Reform Act of 1986, which went into effect January 1, 1987, although the number of applications being received appeared to be levelling off by year's end.

Investment in tax projects in FY 1988 was approximately $866 million, down by 20% from the $1.1 billion invested in FY 1987. As with the number of projects, the yearly investment is now about one third of the pre-Tax Refrom Act levels of more than $2 billion per year.

The proportion of project applications that were denied declined significanly in FY 1988, from 8.6% to 7.5%, belying a peception that the Secretary's Standards are being applied more stringently.

A sample of approved projects indicates that about three quarters of the projects would not have been undertaken if the tax incentives had not been available.

Housing continued to be the most popular use of tax act projects, with about half of all projects used for this purpose.

Since the program's inception in 1976, approximately 20,000 projects representing an investment of $13 billion have been certified.

IN HONOR OF AL FAVOINO OF ORANGE COUNTY, NY

HON. HAMILTON FISH, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, it is with pride that I rise in honor of a long-time friend, Albert A. Favoino, of Newburgh, Orange County, in my congressional district in New York. On February 4, the town of Newburgh Republican Committee will hold a Lincoln Day dinner at which it will honor Mr. Favoino as its "Man of the Year." His long-time service in government and civic activities makes him eminently deserving of this award.

Mr. Favoino is an Orange County legislator who served as chairman of the body from 1982 to 1987. As chairman of the Stewart Airport Committee, he has been instrumental in forming a foreign trade zone in Orange County. He has also participated in district and regional boards protecting fish and wildlife, serving the aging and enhancing justice and public safety.

These government activities have been complemented by a wealth of civic activities. He is board member and treasurer of St. Luke's Hospital and a member of the YWCA board of directors. From 1978 to 1979 he was chairman of a campaign that raised more than $1 million for a new YWCA building.

Mr. Favoino also has been active in the Elks Lodge, the Knights of Columbus, the American Legion and the chamber of commerce. And throughout his activities he has remained a devoted family man, with a wonderful wife, Juanita, and daughers Janie and Sue.

Mr. Speaker, I wish Al Favoino the best at the Lincoln Day dinner and throughout the year.

CONSTITUENT TURNS IN NRA CARD

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, The following letter to the editor of the Alameda Times is a typical reaction of my constituents to the National Assault Weapons Association's support for assault weapons—weapons commonly used by drug dealers, violent criminals, terrorists, and psychopaths. Legislation concerning cop-killer bullets, plastic guns, a 7-day waiting period—all matters supported by law enforcement and all the major police organizations—have been opposed continually by this group's national leadership. A group of us will soon be introducing legislation to ban the sale of assault rifles. I hope that all the true sportsmen and women who are members of the NRA will support this effort.

NRA Is Irresponsible

Editor: I recently mailed a clipping of the attack and murders at the Cleveland Elementary School in Stockton to the National Rifle Association, along with my current membership card. I no longer want to be associated with the organization.

Of all the parties involved possessing the power to restrict or complicate the ready availability of assault rifles, the National Rifle Association is the one group that could have done it without hurting the honest, law-abiding sportsman. Instead, they have chosen to simply resist and sabotage all efforts to solve a serious problem, one that has now killed five innocent children and terrorized an entire community. And, a new generation of amoral drug dealers has been armed.

As far as I am concerned the NRA is an accessory to murder. Its pig-headed attitude toward reasonable legislation killed those children just as surely as the cheap AKM-47 used to do the job.

Would this have happened if the killer had to go through the Director Civilian Marksmanship program to get his weapon? How many drug dealers would go through all that? What if they had to pay $700 or more as you do for other assault rifles (ones that are seldom heard of in the newspapers), instead of $299?

I wish those in charge at the NRA were made to live in the projects and other "choice" areas of the Bay Area where dope and machine guns (usually altered semi-automatics) rule. Maybe then they'd see that there is something seriously wrong in America.

Is is apparent that the only interests that the NRA has been looking after are those of the armaments industry. Its refusal to act responsibly is going to cost the sportsmen that it professes to protect in the form of hastily formed and passed legislation that will prove to be more reactionary than reasonable and effective.

CONGRATULATIONS TO SHAWANO BASKETBALL AND VOLLEYBALL TEAM

HON. TOBY ROTH

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, we all realize the vital role that sports play in our lives. Through sports we learn how to excel as individuals, and work together as a team. These valuable lessons are important on and off the court. Players learn to depend on each other, and bring out each other's strengths. This is all part of the spirit that makes great teams.

Every once in a while a team comes along that defies all the odds. The Shawano, Wisconsin High School girls basketball and volleyball team has not lost a game in 11 months and is working for its second State volleyball championship.

The key to the success of this team does not rest with just one or two players. Instead it evolves from a team effort. "They play so well together," remarked an opposing coach, "that's what makes them so good, that players complement one another."

All of the Shawano players would be stars if they did not play together on the same team. Christi Burden, Wendy Jung, Deb Sazama, Melanie Shively, and Lora and Karan Schmeichel are all outstanding athletes. The fact that they all play for the same team is astounding.

The girls basketball coach, Dean Martin, and their volleyball coach, Matty Mathison, agree that they have never seen such talent assembled onto one team before. They are quick to point out, however, that talent alone cannot guarantee an unbeaten season. It will take hard work and a complete team effort.

I would like to congratulate the Shawano girls team for their outstanding achievements in the last two seasons. The memories that they take away from these games will always remind them of their great accomplishments. I wish them the best of luck for the rest of the season.

[From the Green Bay Press Gazette, Jan. 25, 1989]

Shawano Girls Preside Over Courts—Six Player Nucleus Unbeaten in Volleyball, Basketball This Year

(By Kevin Isaacson)

Asked when Shawano last lost a girls basketball or volleyball game, Christi Burden is puzzled.

"I guess I don't really remember," said Burden. "It's sometime last year, I guess."

Forgive her. It's been awhile—nearly 11 months—since the Indians lost 63-59 to Antigo in a Class A girls basketball regional tournament game.

Since then, Shawano has:

Finished the Bay Conference season unbeaten in 18 volleyball matches and gone on to win the Class A state volleyball championship.

Defeated its first 14 basketball opponents, including a 102-51 victory over Clintonville on Tuesday.

"They are the most talented girls that I've ever coached," said volleyball coach Matty Mathison. I've never, ever had that many aggresive girls at one time."

Burden and five classmates—Wendy Jung, Deb Sazama, Melanie Shively and twins Karen and Lora Schmeichel—form the nucleus of the basketball and volleyball teams that have compiled records of 33-3 and 35-1, respectively, the past two seasons.

"With these girls, we can have a bad outing and still win," said basketball coach Dean Martin.

Burden, a four-year starter in both sports, is unquestionably the Indians' standout. An all-state selection in volleyball, Burden is averaging 17 points per basketball game. She has accepted a basketball scholarship to the University of Wisconsin-Green Bay.

"One-on-one, nobody's going to stop her," said Gene Spindler, Seymour's basketball coach.

But Spindler and other area coaches say Shawano's success stems from a lack of dependence on Burden not present in her first three varsity seasons.

"They play so well together," said West De Pere Coach Jerry Draves. "That's what makes them so good, that the players complement one another."

Few teams in Bay history, said Draves, have fielded a front line with talent rivaling Shawano's 5-foot-9 Burden, 5-10 Sazama and 6-0 Jung. Martin, in his first year as Shawano coach, believes that talent, coupled with other players' willingness to play supplemental roles, has kept Shawano unbeaten.

"We have some players that stand out, but they all have things they do well," said Martin. "We have a lot of good role players."

Role players? Most state coaches would feel fortunate to field just a smidgen of Shawano's senior stockpile, said Penny Gillespie, volleyball coach at Seymour.

"A school can have a Sazama or a Burden," said Gillespie. "But to have all those players at one school at one time, that's really unique."

The breadth and diversity of talent allowed Mathison to toy with lineups and game plans.

Said Mathison: "If they could stop Burden, then we'd go to Wendy Jung. Or to Deb (Sazama). We always had another option."

Martin has the same flexibility.

If Burden is double-teamed, Shawano can work the basketball to Jung (18 ppg), Sazama (12 ppg) or three-point threats Lora Schmeichel and Heidi Thaves.

If Martin needs rebounding? The 6-foot Jung averages 12, Sazama and Burden each average seven and sophomore Carey Koeller might be the team's best leaper.

What about quickness? A halfcourt trap keyed by Burden and the Schmeichel twins is difficult to beat. And reserves Shively and senior Nicky Bowman, a transfer from Gresham, and state-level sprinters.

"They complement each other so well," said Draves. "When you can bring players like Bowman and Thaves off the bench, you have a good team."

Said Spindler: "How can you beat them? Good luck. When they've got all their pistons going at full tilt, I don't know if it's possible."

No one beat Shawano in volleyball though Kaukauna came incredibly close. The Ghosts won the opener of the best-of-three Class A title match and led 13-0 in the second game. Shawano scored 15 consecutive points to win the second game 15-13, then took the decisive game 15-3.

"They had pretty much conceded. Even their coach (Mathison) has admitted she was preparing to finish second in the state," said Gillespie. "I think that 'brush with death' game them a new outlook."

The near-defeat in state volleyball. Gillespie said, helped Shawano skirt a post-tournament letdown, generating instead renewed competitive spirit.

"It might have shown them how close to being mortal they are," said Gillespie. "At one time they might have been getting used to winning, but I don't think they take it for granted anymore."

Martin said the volleyball campaign taught his players to handle pressure and others' expectations. He said the Indians' current No. 3 ranking in the state Class A coaches poll isn't discussed, and isn't a problem.

"A lot of teams . . . a high ranking would bother them," said Martin. "These kids are kind of used to being on top."

Martin won't predict an unbeaten season or a second state championship, but says he'd like to coach against Hartland Arrowhead, the top-ranked public school, in the WIAA Class A state tournament in March. No Shawano girls basketball team has played in a sectional or state tournament game.

"We'd like to be there," said Martin. "But we have a lot of teams to play to get there."

Shawano has been tested just twice—by Seymour (62-59) and Green Bay Southwest (55-50)—but Martin, Draves and Spindler agree an opponent with a dominating center and quick guards could defeat the Indians.

"They haven't been in many close games this season. Can they respond if a big girl neutralizes Wendy Jung? What happens if they get in foul trouble? said Draves.

Jung has an answer.

"There's something in us that kicks in when we're down. It kicks in, and the next thing you know, we're winning," she said. "It won't let us lose."

STUDENT LOAN INTEREST

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to correct a tremendous error in the Tax Reform Act of 1986. By classifying student loan interest as consumer rather than investment interest, the Tax Reform Act made student loan interest nontax deductible. Education our youth is the purest form of investing in the future of our country. My legislation reinforces this principle by making student loan interest tax deductible.

Escalating education costs place an enormous financial burden on our students. Graduate students in particular may incur debts so large that their initial payments on loans consist mainly of interest. Allowing a tax deduction of this interest could actually be a matter of economic survival for several higher education graduates; 255 of my colleages sponsored this legislation in the 100th Congress.

Mr. Speaker, deducting student loan interest is a step in the right direction for our Nation's students.

INTRODUCTION OF THE AIRCRAFT NOISE REDUCTION ACT OF 1989

HON. MARGE ROUKEMA

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced the Aircraft Noise Reduction Act. For nearly 2 years now, my constituents and others in New Jersey have been plagued by the roar of aircraft noise due to an ill-conceived plan drafted and implemented by the Federal Aviation Administration [FAA].

In 1987 and 1988, the FAA implemented the Expanded East Coast Plan [EECP], which was designed to reduce delays at east coast airports by creating additional "highways in the sky." While the goal of the plan was an admirable one, execution of the EECP sparked waves of complaints from residents of northern, western, and central New Jersey about increased noise levels from aircraft. Unfortunately, the FAA implemented the plan without public hearings and without sufficient study with regard to its short-term and long-term environmental effects. Simply, the FAA is guilty of a lack of coordination, communication, and cooperation, which, as we all know, is integral to good public policy.

Comprehensive reports by the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey and the General Accounting Office [GAO] sustaintiate the thousands of citizens complaints. Despite this and repeated promises to the New Jersey congressional delegation, the FAA has refused to take meaningful and substantive action to mitigate the noise pollution problem in New Jersey. Therefore, the time has come for Congress to force the FAA to do what it has claimed for months it would do administratively.

My legislation would require the FAA to implement a comprehensive aircraft noise reduction plan for New Jersey. It would also require the FAA to execute a plan with the Department of Defense on rerouting civilian aircraft to unused military airspace off of the New Jersey coast.

I would like to stress, however, that my bill is not only of interest to New Jersey; rather, it is national in scope. My bill will help protect States in the Midwest and the West from the mistakes the FAA made with the EECP. As many of you know, the FAA is planning a "Mid-Continent Plan" and "West Coast Plan". Therefore, my bill would require the FAA to conduct environmental impact statements in both instances. It would also require the FAA to hold a series of public hearings prior and subsequent to implementation of these plans. These provisions will serve to prepare these commuities in advance of the proposed air route changes.

Finally, my legislation also requires the FAA to set a schedule for retiring the Nation's noisiest and oldest stage II aircraft. Many aviation experts agree that the FAA has been dilatory in developing and executing this much-needed policy. My bill requires the FAA to establish a stage II retirement timetable and to explore financial incentives for the airlines to beat the mandated deadline. This section of the bill will also benefit New Jersey and all the States.

I invite all my colleagues to join several other Members of my home State delegation in cosponsoring this legislation. I am sure you will agree that this is an issue which Congress must address.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH CELEBRATES 90 YEARS

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join with me in celebrating the 90th anniversary of St. John's Catholic Church in Larksville, PA.

It was early in 1898, when the Catholic families of the area began building a church—with enthusiasm and only $75 between them. They felt that once others in the area saw the structure being built, more funds would be donated. When it became apparent that the needed funds were not forthcoming, the families turned to Bishop O'Hara of Scranton for assistance. Bishop O'Hara vigorously solicited donations from local coal miners, most of whom were Polish immigrants who had settled in the Wyoming Valley region. With the help of the entire community, Bishop O'Hara raised the money needed and the church was completed.

Masses were held in December 1898 by Rev. R.A. Nowicki, the first pastor of St. John's Church. He was followed by several pastors over the years until Father Kopicki took the flock. Father Kopicki put all his heart into the task, sharing his love of music with the parishioners; soon, St. John's had a youth choir that became renowned throughout the diocese. The young pastor also decided that a parish school was needed. In June 1936, St. John's Catholic School held it first eighth grade graduation. Father Kopicki died in 1952, but his limitless energy and dedication to St. John's Church and the citizens of Larksville is still honored today.

Since 1971, Rev. John Masakowski has been the pastor of St. John's Church. Over the years, Father John has renovated the entire church from the inside out; his many efforts include the construction and dedication of the Statue of Our Lady of the Pines, which was commissioned for the parish's Diamond Jubilee celebration.

Mr. Speaker, churches act to hold our community together, providing a place of worship, understanding, and compassion. St. John's has played a central role in the lives of many Larksville residents over the last 90 years, and I can only pray that it will continue to do so for many years to come.

THE TRUTH ABOUT CRIME

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, let's not fool ourselves: our national drug dilemma will require continual refinement of, and improvement in, our current Federal antidrug policies.

Before we know it, the 101st Congress will again be held responsible for developing yet another antidrug bill designed to end this crisis. Congress' addiction to election-year politics will not be rehabilitated anytime soon.

The encouraging news is that more Members, individuals, citizens' groups, and members of the media are beginning to call for a new direction in drug and crime reduction policies. Several recent, responsible publications and newspaper editorials have touched on some basic tenets of the relationship between drugs, guns, and related crime and have suggested realistic, constructive legislative proposals. The New York Times has offered some thoughtful editorials on this subject, including the following January 2, 1989, essay:

[From the New York Times, Jan. 2, 1989]

THE TRUTH ABOUT CRIME

A recent report from the American Bar Association contains a noteworthy confession: Criminal justice can't control crime. The A.B.A.'s appeal for more acceptance of that uncomfortable point deserves wide attention.

The recent Presidential campaign carried the crime issue to ugly extremes, like passionate support of capital punishment and exaggerated outrage over prison furloughs. The A.B.A. report demonstrates the irrelevance of such issues.

The report refers to Federal studies showing that of 34 million crimes believed committed in 1986, only a few hundred thousand resulted in prison terms. Only a few dozen involved the death penalty. The vast majority were never even reported to police. Yet courts are strained and prisons severely crowded. There is no realistic hope that more prosecution and imprisonment can ever contain crime.

Impatience with constitutional restraints on police is just as irrelevant as the debate over capital punishment or prison furloughs. The ban on improperly seized evidence and limits on interrogation—favorite bugbears of the law-and-order lobby—are factors only in the comparative handful of crimes seriously investigated.

Still, the debate over such issues persists, as if change would reduce crime. Criminal justice officials interviewed for the A.B.A. study describe this misperception as frustrating, even dangerous. The study suggests three ways to think more sensibly and, realistically about criminal justice policy:

First, coordinate forces. A big police offensive of the sort used successfully in some New York City neighborhoods might eliminate the sale of drugs in a particular neighborhood. But unless the courts and jails can afford to handle the surge of new cases, they will have to fall back on expedients—easy plea bargains, early releases—that mock justice.

Second, attack drugs on a broad basis. "While law enforcement has little effect on drug use," the report states, "drug prosecutions have had a profound effect on the criminal justice system." Drugs are often behind the surging caseloads that force courts and prisons to cheapen justice. Well beyond law enforcement, the problem involves international diplomacy, medicine, social work and education. It demands a well-coordinated national strategy.

Third, remember criminal justice's educational role. Millions absorb powerful lessons from their experiences as jurors, witnesses and crime victims. Police and the courts bear a heavy responsibility to treat them with respect. Crime victims especially need sympathy and support.

Facing a frustrated public, few officials are willing to state the truth: There is no easy way to control crime. Blaming criminal justice may distract attention, but ultimately all society suffers from the spread of confusion and false hopes.

NO JUSTICE IN EL SALVADOR

HON. GEO. W. CROCKETT, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to comment to the attention of my colleagues an excellent article from the Detroit Free Press, written by Tony Rothschild, special assistant in my district office, following his recent trip to El Salvador with a delegation sponsored by the Central American Refugee Center of San Francisco. The delegation traveled to El Salvador to investigate the circumstances surrounding the September 21, 1988, massacre of seven men and three women near the town of San Sebastian, El Salvador.

Witnesses said the massacre was carried out by members of the Salvadoran Army's Fifth Brigade. Senior U.S. Embassy officers have said that there is "considerable evidence" implicating the military in the murders. As has become the norm in most murder cases in El Salvador, the judge has resigned under pressure. Even the U.S. Embassy has become so frustrated with the lack of any recognizable judicial process, that an Embassy official was recently quoted as saying that—

The San Sebastian case was such a large event involving so many people and bodies that if there has been a real will to get to the bottom of it early on, it could have been done.

Mr. Rothschild's article poses one of the questions that we must confront as we debate U.S. policy toward El Salvador: "Does our support of the Government of El Salvador further the cause of freedom?" I would argue that it has not.

Under the Administration of Justice Program, the United States has provided significant levels of assistance to the Salvadoran judiciary, including over $9 million just in the last year. But the real problem with the Salvadoran judicial system is not a lack of resources or know-how, it is a total lack of political will.

The Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs, which I have the honor to Chair, will be looking closely at the administration's request for further funding for El Salvador's judicial system during its review of the fiscal year 1990 foreign assistance programs. Progress—or lack of it—in the San Sebastian case, and in the cases of other murdered Salvadorans and Americans, will clearly be a factor in the subcommittee's deliberations.

I have written to U.S. Ambassador William Walker, asking him to make it clear to the Salvadoran Government and the military that our aid program in El Salvador—now the fifth largest worldwide—cannot continue in the face of this blatant disregard for justice.

I hope that the Bush administration and this Congress will endorse the article's conclusion that—

We must redirect our resources toward a political settlement and provide aid for true economic reform. That is the only hope to keep El Salvador alive.

I urge my colleagues to read this important article.

[From the Detroit (MI) Free Press, Dec. 29, 1988]

SALVADORAN DEPENDENCE ON U.S. MEANS STRIFE, VIOLENCE WILL CONTINUE

(By Tony Rothschild)

The Salvadoran Army claimed it was a guerilla ambush.

El Salvador's attorney general's office has said otherwise. It has claimed that the army was responsible.

The American embassy has said it has been monitoring the situation. And the Detroit papers hardly reported the incident.

About the only thing that is clear is that on Sept. 21, 10 people were murdered in the hamlet of San Francisco.

Alarmed by an escalation of political killings in El Salvador during the last year, the Central American Refugee Center of San Francisco, Calif. (CARECEN), organized a delegation that went to El Salvador in October to investigate the deaths. The delegation included attorneys, immigrant rights workers, a nun from the Archdiocese of San Francisco, Calif., and me.

While in El Salvador, we interviewed witnesses, Salvadoran and U.S. officials, including the chief of the Fifth Brigade of El Salvador's Army, the highest-level U.S. adviser attached to the Fifth Brigade, U.S. embassy officials, the chief of the High Command of the Salvadoran armed forces and the member of the attorney general's staff in charge of the investigation.

After studying the evidence, and the various versions of the killings, we concluded that 10 peasants were executed by members of the Jiboa Battalion of the army of El Salvador, and that they were operating under orders from high-level military officials of the Fifth Brigade. We also found evidence of a cover-up at the top of the High Command of the armed forces.

These are grave conclusions, but they rest on the results of the forensic reports that established that the peasants died from gunshot wounds to the back of the head, fired from a distance of 5 to 10 centimeters. And although, according to army officials, the peasants were flanked on all sides by the battalion, not one soldier was shot during the claimed FMLN (Farabundo Marti Liberation Front) ambush.

In what the Attorney General's Office called an attempted cover-up of the massacre, FMLN flags, guns and leaflets were found near the bodies.

And according to the Attorney General's Office, one peasant, seen wearing overalls when taken away by the army, was later found dead wearing guerilla clothing.

The Attorney General's Office has issued arrest warrants for four soldiers. Yet, it has not interviewed nor is it pointing a finger of responsibility at any commanding officers. There is little hope for justice: After eight years of reports, not one officer has been convicted in connection with the murder of civilians.

The U.S. Embassy has downplayed the massacre, possibly because it has the potential of angering Congress and threatening funding for the Reagan-Bush policy of trying to win the war—a policy that, after eight years, has, by all accounts, failed. Nonetheless, U.S. tax dollars pour into El Salvador while the country sinks deeper and deeper into poverty and despair.

Why should the Detroit papers be expected to keep the public informed of another atrocity in El Salvador? The United States sends El Salvador more than $1 million per day to fund the war (more per capita than any other country except Israel). That should raise the average taxpayer's eyebrows. There is, however, a far more compelling reason.

During my two visits to El Salvador, I have discovered that U.S. influence is so widespread and U.S. citizens have become such an integral part of the civil war that they are risking their lives everyday. The Maryknoll nuns murdered by the army and the American advisers who were shot by the guerillas during the early 1980's are testimony to our involvement. Of course these deaths received widespread coverage; what does not get widespread coverage are the thousands of Salvadoran deaths that become our responsibility—including the recent massacre in San Francisco.

How are we responsible? Most of what we give in aid pays for the bills of the government—advisers for the military and weapons for war. We have created a total dependence on United States assistance.

Salvadoran dependency on the United States is resented in the same way an addict resents drugs. An addict knows that drugs are bad but takes them to survive. Yet it is a survival that slowly destroys.

The wealthy Salvadoran landowners are dependent. They could not remain in power without millions of dollars of military equipment and training. Every battalion has American advisers who help plan day-to-day operations.

The right-wing ARENA (National Republican Alliance) Party is dependent. ARENA, known as the party of the death squad, played on anti-U.S. sentiment to win the March elections against the U.S.-backed Christian Democratic Party. Yet, to keep the money, advisers and weapons coming, ARENA depends on the U.S. Embassy to smooth over its death-squad image, to sell the need for future aid to Congress.

Does our support of the government of El Salvador further the cause of freedom?

Hardly. Any Salvadoran citizen who criticizes the government puts his or her life in danger. U.S. officials have been unable or unwilling to stop the thousands of killings by the military and right-wing death squads.

As a result, these Salvadorans—particularly the refugees returning to their villages and the countryside in recent months—are dependent on a vast network of Americans opposed to U.S. policy for protection.

Returning refugees would not succeed in rebuilding their communities without American and other international volunteers living in their villages, serving as witnesses to any kidnappings or other human rights violations and reporting them to Congress.

At the same time, the non-governmental Human Rights Commission in El Salvador, which has lost two directors to assassination, could not continue without U.S. volunteers living and working in the commission offices.

The families of those massacred on Sept. 21 are dependent on U.S. delegations, like ours, to investigate. We hope our report will help bring those responsible to justice

El Salvador is addicted to, and dying from, the Reagan-Bush Central America policy. While American non-governmental volunteers from the United States have been trying to break the Salvadoran addiction to U.S.-supported violence, we must redirect our resources toward a political settlement and provide aid for true economic reform. We must all "just say no" to the civil war. That is the only hope to keep El Salvador alive.

TRIBUTE TO EDWARD SMITH

HON. ROBERT A. BORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Edward Smith, a long-time Democratic activist.

Ed Smith has been a Democratic committeeman in the 33d ward in northeast Philadelphia for 35 years. It is this kind of loyalty that has made the Democratic Party a force to be reckoned with in the Northeast for decades.

Life-long residents of Philadelphia, Ed Smith and his wife Agness have a daughter, three grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. Ed is also a member of Machinists Local 159.

Over the years, Ed Smith has put in countless hours working for his neighborhood, his party and his country. I am proud to share the same party affiliation with this man.

I join Bill Stinson, 33d ward leader, and everyone in the 33d ward in paying tribute to Ed Smith's 35 years of hard work and dedication as Democratic committeeman.

CONGRESSIONAL SALARY ACT OF 1989

HON. DAVID E. SKAGGS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Speaker, today, Mr. BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL, Mr. BILL EMERSON, Mr. WAYNE OWENS, Mr. HOWARD C. NIELSON, Mr. GEORGE J. HOCHBRUECKNER, Mr. WILLIAM J. HUGHES, Mr. MARTIN LANCASTER, and I are introducing legislation that would reestablish the responsibility of Congress to set its salaries.

Under current law, Members of Congress can have their salaries raised without a vote. The public will never understand or accept a system where Congress does not deal directly and responsibly with the issue of its own salaries. The controversy surrounding implementation of the Quadrennial Commission's recent recommendation underscores the need for reform of our current system.

The legislation that we are introducing today—the Congressional Salary Act of 1989—would make two important changes in this system. First, this bill would require a separate, recorded vote on any change in pay for Members of Congress. This would preclude a salary increase without a vote, as can now occur. Second, this bill provides that any increase in congressional pay take effect only after the succeeding general election. No one would be put in the self-serving position of voting on an immediate raise. Instead, with any change in compensation taking effect after an intervening election, the votes could evaluate all candidates in light of the salary to be paid in the new Congress.

To keep the people's trust in Congress and in our system of government, we must make decisions in an open and respectable manner. The changes we are proposing would ensure this and would let the people hold us accountable for the decisions we make.

THE JOE HOOPER MEMORIAL BILL

HON. ROD CHANDLER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a bill to name the alcohol and substance abuse treatment wing of the Seattle Veterans' Administration Medical Center after Joe Hooper.

As a staff sergeant during the Vietnam war, Hooper became the most decorated soldier in United States history.

He was awarded the Medal of Honor for rescuing wounded men in the face of heavy machinegun fire, and neutralizing a North Vietnamese position singlehandedly. He then refused medical attention for his own wounds until all of his men were treated.

Tragically, Joe Hooper died 10 years later from a much more elusive and persistent enemy—alcoholism.

Naming the alcohol and substance abuse treatment wing of the VA medical center after Hooper not only memorializes him, it sends a strong message to those seeking treatment for this deadly disease.

NEGOTIATED RULEMAKING ACT OF 1989

HON. DONALD J. PEASE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Negotiated Rule Making Act of 1989, a bill which is aimed at providing an alternative to the present adversarial rule making process employed in Federal agencies. Presently, rules promulgated by agencies of the Federal Government are often the subject of protracted litigation. These court battles tend to be time-consuming, costly affairs that are often unnecessary. In certain cases, the process of rule making can be accomplished more fairly and efficiently through direct negotiations between the various interested parties.

My bill would establish an optional procedure through which interested parties could negotiate a compromise rule. Under this procedure, an agency would publish a notice in the Federal Register signaling its interest in establishing a negotiated rule making committee. Interested persons would have at least 30 days to comment and to apply for membership on the committee. If the agency then determines that rule making through negotiation is feasible and appropriate, it will establish a committee comprised of representatives of each interested party. The committee would then be responsible for negotiating a rule that is acceptable to all parties within a fixed period. The services of a facilitator may be employed.

Five hundred thousand dollars are authorized to be appropriated annually for fiscal years 1990–92. Funds may be used to cover the costs of facilitators, administrative expenses, and compensation and travel expenses for committee members whose membership on the committee is necessary and who certify a need for financial assistance.

Senator LEVIN, chairman of the Governmental Affairs Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management, has introduced identical legislation in the Senate. I invite my colleagues to cosponsor the bill that I am introducing in the House.

A TRIBUTE TO LOU HOLTZ

HON. DOUGLAS APPLEGATE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a distinct privilege and pleasure to bring to your attention and that of my colleagues in the House of Representatives, a very special occasion in the Upper Ohio Valley this Saturday, February 4, 1989. It is on that day that the Nation's premier college football coach, Lou Holtz, of Notre Dame, comes home to be honored by his many, many friends and admirers in East Liverpool, OH, for his outstanding list of accomplishments, not the least of which is winning the 1988 national college football championship.

Born in Follansbee, WV, on January 6, 1937, just across the Ohio River from my congressional district, Lou's family soon moved to East Liverpool where he spent his childhood days. He attended St. Aloysius Grade School and East Liverpool High School where he played football. While he may not have been the best player, he had more enthusiasm and heart than anyone, an attribute that continues today. He is a graduate of Kent State University and the University of Iowa.

Lou's first coaching assignment came in 1960 as an assistant coach at the University of Iowa. It wasn't long before his leadership skills and indepth football knowledge was recognized and was awarded a head coaching position at the college of William and Mary in 1969. He went on to be the head coach of North Carolina State, the New York Jets professional football team, the University of Arkansas, and finally the University of Minnesota, before realizing a life long dream of coaching the Notre Dame Fighting Irish.

Coach Holtz's record of 141 wins, 75 losses and 5 ties has earned him Coach of the Year honors on more than one occasion by a whole host of associations, not the least of which is Football News, CBS Sports, the Washington, DC Touchdown Club, the Football Writers Association of America and the Walter Camp Foundation. His teams have played 14 post season bowl games and won 7 of them. Two were ties.

But even more important than his outstanding list of accomplishments and achievements which is well known to many, is the impact he has had on so many, many football players and fans alike. He is recognized for his drive, determination, and dedication, but he has been able to relay this to his players and they are better people for having played for him.

Mr. Speaker, I know that I carry with me the congratulations of all of my colleagues in the House in congratulating Lou Holtz, one of this country's all time great football coaches.

IN HONOR OF A UNIQUE PUBLIC SERVANT—ERV RENNER

HON. DOUGLAS H. BOSCO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. BOSCO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a very special man and a unique public servant, Erv Renner of Ferndale, CA. I urge my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to this selfless and dedicated American.

Ervin C. Renner is retiring in January 1989 as a Humboldt Country Supervisor. Mr. Renner has served the people of Humboldt County for the past 16 years, and he served as the county's Veterans' Service Officer-Public Guardian for 16 years prior to that.

Additionally, he served his country in World War II, and returned home a double-amputee from injuries he received in the Battle of the Bulge.

Mr. Renner's dedication to his fellow man and to his country began as a young Army recruit and has continued for many decades. The seriousness of his war injuries at no time has stopped him from giving 100 percent of himself to his family, community, and country.

Mr. Speaker, I will join Erv and his friends and family for a special celebration of his service to the community on February 4. I understand that Erv has already heard from President Reagan and President Bush on the occasion. It will be my honor to relay to Erv Renner the appreciation and the best wishes of this body.

NASHVILLE ISRAEL BOND TESTIMONIAL DINNER TO NOAH LIFF

HON. BOB CLEMENT

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join the Nashville State of Israel Bonds Committee in paying tribute to Noah Liff, a distinguished member of our Nashville community.

At a dinner last November, the committee presented Noah with the Israel 40th Anniversary Award Medal for his longtime service to a wide variety of civic, cultural, and professional organizations in Nashville and for his support and leadership of the Israel bond campaign in Nashville.

Noah is probably best known in our community as the chairman of the WLPN Educational Foundation. In years past, however, he has also served as chairman of the Metro Action Commission, vice president of Circle Theatre, vice president of Theatre Nashville, and has served on the boards of Advent Theatre and the W.O. Smith School of Music.

During these years, he also was district chairman, of the development program of the Boy Scouts of America, a board member of the Nashville Area Chamber of Commerce, and an original founder of the YWCA's Shelter for Domestic Violence. He is also a founder of the YWCA's Displaced Homemaker Program. In 1986 he was a member of Leadership Nashville and currently serves on its alumni board.

Noah has served in several positions of national prominence. From 1978 to 1980, Noah was national president of the Institute of Scrap Iron and Steel and also served at that time on the Industry Advisory Board for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

On several occasions, he has headed the Israel bond campaign in Nashville and has served as campaign chairman for the United Jewish Appeal, both in Nashville and in Santa Barbara, CA. He has served on the Board of the Jewish Federation in Nashville and this past year served as chairman of the Israel Tennis Center for Nashville.

Noah is currently serving on the Board of the Easter Seal Society of Tennessee and is a life member of the Canby Robinson Society, as well as the Alexis deTocqueville Society of Nashville.

Mr. Speaker, as you can see, Noah's service to the community is extensive. It reflects his true love for Nashville and her citizens. It also reflects his interest in world affairs and his commitment to working toward peace in the Middle East.

I am proud to join Noah's friends and family and the State of Israel Bonds Committee in saluting him.

UKRAINIAN DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

HON. JOHN J. RHODES III

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the 71st anniversary of the Declaration of Independence for all Ukrainian people by the Ukrainian Central Rada on January 22, 1918. I cannot stress how important this event is in the context of past and present events, especially: the establishment of the first Christian Church in Eastern Europe in Kievan Rus', or present-day Kiev in the Ukraine; the struggle to overcome the Mongol invasion of the Ukraine in the 13th century; the forcible partition of the Ukraine between Russia and Poland in the 17th century; the seizing of the Ukraine by the Bolsheviks following the Revolution; most terrifying and tragic of all, the forced collectivization and starving to death of 7 million Ukrainian men, women, and children during the 1930's under the rule of Stalin; and presently, the domination and attempts at cultural "Russification" by the U.S.S.R.

The Ukrainian people have, throughout their history of domination, kept alive their dreams of freedom. They have held the spirit of Christianity within their souls for a millennium, culminating in the celebration last year of 1,000 years of Christianity in the U.S.S.R.

Today, they are denied the hope and promise of General Secretary Gorbachev's glasnost and perestroika reforms. While some small semblance of national patriotism is reluctantly tolerated in the Baltics and Transcaucasus; for example, Latvia and Estonia, the Soviet Government knows full well how important the fertile lands of the Ukraine are to the nation, especially during their current economic difficulties. Just as fearful to the Kremlin are the political implications of 50 million nationalists being allowed any room to speak out and voice their concerns to the world.

As the Washington Post stated in its front page story this past Sunday, January 22, the U.S.S.R. could never survive without the Ukraine. Indeed, Lenin said in 1918: "For us to lose the Ukraine would be the same as losing our head." These words echo even now over the vast heartland of the Ukraine, where its people yearn for the most rudimentary signs of sovereignty.

Mr. Speaker, it means so much to those who have struggled for innumerable generations against external oppression to know that this august body supports their basic right to the freedoms and liberties we enjoy here at home. To those Ukrainians now watching and waiting for the world's response to their plea for recognition; to those Ukrainian-Americans throughout the country and at home in Congressional District 1, which I represent; to all who look to this great Nation as an example of the fulfillment of the dreams of freedom and liberty, I urge my colleagues to join me this day in recognition of the Ukrainian peoples' struggle and in affirmation of our expectations that the promise of glasnost and the reforms of perestroika be extended to those in need of it most.

MS. ADEL M. MARTINEZ, OF LOS ANGELES, RECEIVES THE COMMUNITY SERVICE AWARD OF 1988

HON. JULIAN C. DIXON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 31, 1989

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, it is with great admiration and praise that I rise today to congratulate Ms. Adel M. Martinez who is receiving the Community Service Award of 1988 from the Neighborhood Youth Association [NYA] of Los Angeles. Ms. Martinez' compassion and unyielding devotion to assisting at-risk families in our communities stands as a true inspiration to us all. While other caring, determined individuals have become frustrated and have abandoned their struggle against escalating levels of narcotic use, gang violence, and crime in our cities, Ms. Martinez has genuinely dedicated her life to social change. Thousands of people are able to lead quality, hopeful lives thanks to the work of this exceptional woman.

As executive director of the NYA since 1974, Ms. Martinez has led her coworkers in helping children, adolescents, and adults, particularly from low-income areas, to reject the lifestyle that surrounds them daily. The NYA has replaced these negative influences with counseling, education, social support, job training, and even job placement.

Under her leadership, the NYA was honored as the Outstanding Social Work Agency of the Year by the California Chapter of the National Association of Social Work and has received commendations from the City Council of Los Angeles and the United Way, for creative and innovative programming for high-risk youth.

Ms. Martinez, a native of Chicago, developed an interest in social service at George Williams College in Illinois where she received a bachelor's degree in community organization and group work education. She subsequently worked at the Mary McDowell Settlement House, and at the Trumbull Park Community Center. She moved to Los Angeles in 1964 and became an organizer for community development programs in Watts and East Los Angeles. After obtaining a master's degree in social work from UCLA in 1972, she became the west area director for the NYA, and then was promoted to the position of executive director. Ms. Martinez has served as cochairperson of the Trabajadores de la Raza, the West Area Latino Consortium, and the Southern California Women's Substance Abuse Task Force. She is an active member of the National Association of Social Workers [NASW], chaired the NASW national committee on minority affairs from 1978 to 1981 and served as the treasurer from 1981 to 1983.

Ms. Martinez has received a multitude of honors and awards throughout her career. Her most recent honors include the Humanitarian Award from the Human Relations Commission of Los Angeles, for her work among hardcore delinquents, and troubled youth in the Venice/West Los Angeles and Harbor District areas; and the Social Work Award from the Los Angeles Chapter of the Trabajadores de la Raza for her contributions to the Chicano/Latino community.

Today's award, the Community Service Award of 1988, stands as further acknowledgment of Ms. Martinez' unyielding compassion, caring, and dedication to helping others. Congratulations Ms. Martinez. May we celebrate your accomplishments for years to come.
